O. E. Kirby spoke about Christian Education, the Young Peoples Assembly June 3-9, at Montevallo, the Pastors' School at Athens in late June, Cultivation and Conservation. Recess three minutes.

Dr. L. G. Sturdivant, presiding elder of the Deecatur District spoke from Psalms 139:5. "Thou hast laid Thy hand upon me."

"God - consciousness," a fresh sense of God is the great need of the world in every sphere of life, he said. It will give one aspiration, restraint, peace, courage.

Hymn, "How Tedious and Tasteless the Hours." A delicious and abundant lunch was served by the Montevallo Methodist Missionary Society, assisted by the Aldrich ladies.

The afternoon session was opened with hymn and prayer, after which Rev. J. Fred Sparks presented the work of the Golden Cross Society, a church agency for hospitalization of the underprivileged.

Aliceville and Union Grove were nominated as places of meeting of the District Conference in 1937. The vote was Aliceville 53, Union Grove 38.

Report of the Committee on Temperance was given. Dr. M. M. Davidson spoke to it in an eloquent and earnest manner. The conference adopted the report and endorsed the members of the state legislature who voted dry.

Rev. Wm. Graham Echols reported on the work done at the University by the Wesley Foundation. His report showed 5,000 students, 25 per cent of whom are Methodists.

The Methodist Church was beautifully decorated with roses, daises, ferns, and ragged robins, the work of Mary Peterson. Registration tables were placed near both doors of the auditorium. Welcome was extended to all delegates and visitors by members of the Board of Stewards, the Women's Missionary Society, and the College Girls. Mrs. J. A. Brown was at the piano.

The second day of the conference was opened at 8:50 a.m. Friday with hymns "Come Thou Fount," and "I Love Thy Kingdom." Prayer by Rev. J. A. May.

Routine reports were made. Some interesting observations were given as to unoccupied territory. All day singings were mentioned as interfering with church work in some places. Mention was made of one community that "prides itself" on being one beat without a church in it.

R. J. Mills, superintendent of the orphanage at Selma, reported 142 children in that institution.

The committee on Christian Education recommended a daily vacation Bible School in every charge; also pastors' schools. Wesley Foundation. Rev. S. L. Prickett spoke in a constructive way about daily vacation Bible schools, urging the study of discipline and training youth to find Christ in Childhood.

Dr. E. R. Naylor, president of Athens College, was recognized and heard in a short but interesting message.

N. H. Abernathy made a speech of appreciation of the Presiding Elder, and gave him a purse of $50, a gift from the District Conference. Dr. Davenport returned the money with loving gratitude. The conference then voted to give it to Mrs. Davenport.

A collection was taken for a preacher who has had a very hard time financially.

At 11:30 Mr. Ward of Carrollton, district lay leader presiding, Harry Denman, Birmingham Conference lay leader, spoke on "The Spirit of Methodism. Hymn, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?"

Lunch was served by the Calera ladies, assisted by the ladies from Wilton.

A report showed the department of religion supported by the churches has 140 in one course, with 15 ministerial students in the University of Alabama.

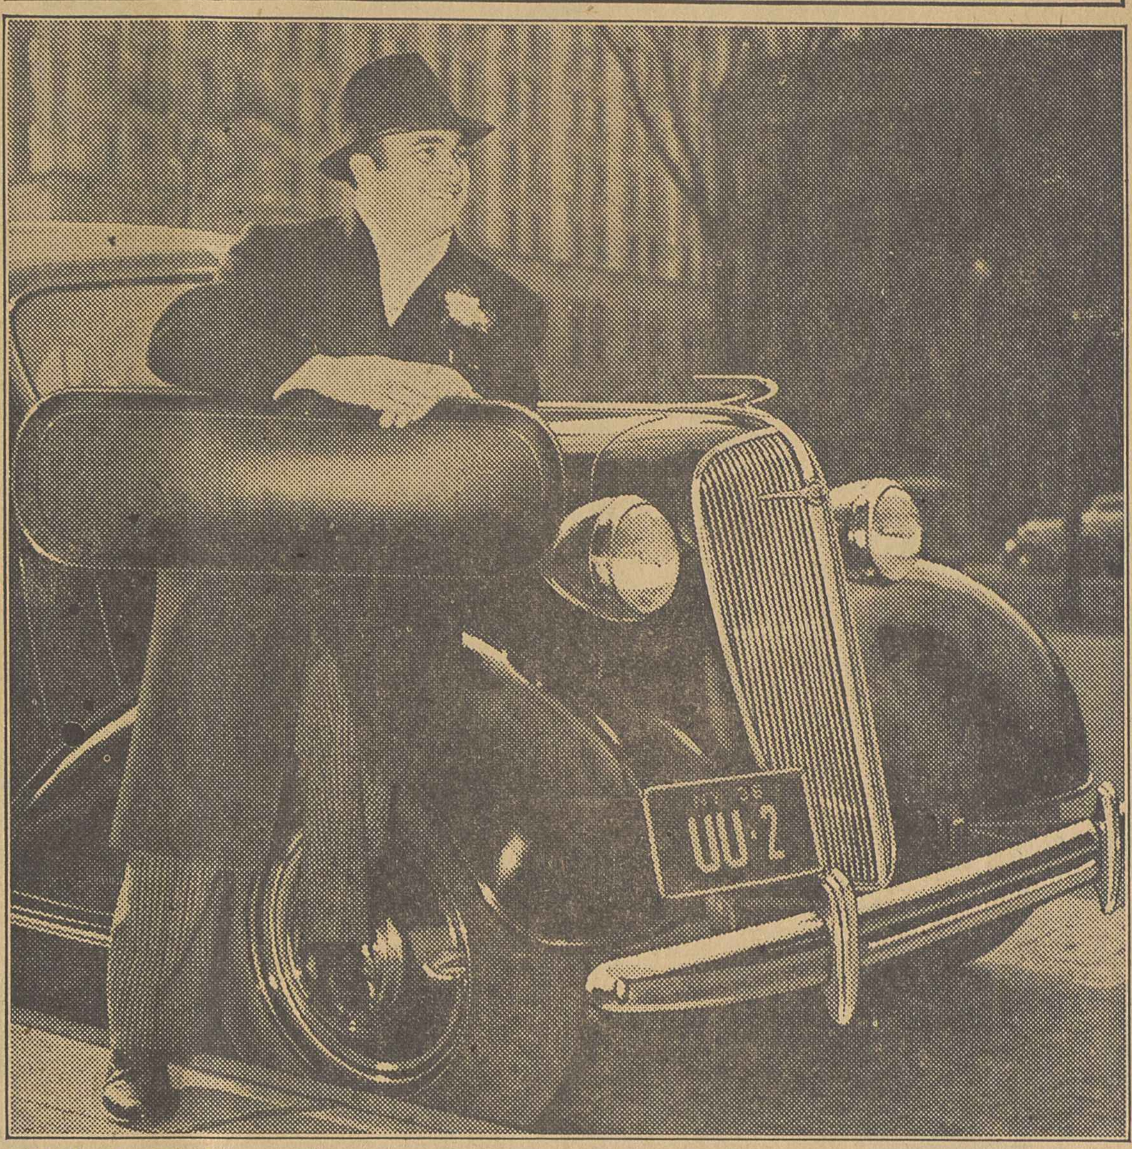
A resolution was adopted providing for distribution of delegates to the Annual Conference over the district.

Rev. Tom Sellers discussed the question, "How to Get People to Attend Church." Rev. William Neal discussed "How to Get People to Attend Revivals."

Rubinoff Holds World Record for Broadcasting



Rubinoff and his violin—and Chevrolet—are a combination that few, if any, radio listeners in the United States have not received in their homes via the air. The famous violinist and his Stradivarius, stars of the Chevrolet Musical Moments programs, have the distinction of going on the air from more broadcasting stations than any other program in the history of radio. Three hundred and seventy-eight stations broadcast Rubinoff three times a week, a total of 1134 fifteen-minute programs. That figures out at 283 hours, and if one week's programs were broadcast one after the other, day and night, it would require 11 days. The illustration shows Rubinoff, carrying his precious violin, posing with his car after a special appearance at Detroit.

BEAUTY SHOP IN CALERA

Miss Roma Lee Pate, of Thorsby, has recently installed a beauty shoppe in Calera. Miss Pate graduated from the Modern School of Beauty in Clanton a few weeks ago. She is the daughter of Mr. J. E. Pate of Thorsby. Her shoppe is now known as the Pate Beauty Shoppe, and is located in the Peoples Drug Store building.

Mrs. Mattie Hubbard has as her visitor Mrs. Wilson, of Keystone.

SEED IMPROVED

Wetumpka, Ala.—A large number of Elmore County farmers have this year manifested great interest in improved varieties of seed.

J. E. Morriss, county agent, reports that 150 farmers this year planted 490 bushels of Cook 144 cottonseel, and 15 others planted 60 bushels of Stoneville cottonseed.

COVER CROPS MEASURED

Huntsville, Ala.—Lands planted to vetch, crimson clover and rye during the past winter have been measured so that farmers and local committeemen will have this inforation when Madison County farmers apply for grants under the new national soil conservation program this fall, reports J. B. Mitchell, county agent.

Mrs. R. A. Reid and Mrs. M. P. Jeter spent Tuesday in Birmingham.

Many Sports Folks Share Ruth's Hazy Memory for Names

DURING the seasons of his greatest glory, the newspaper boys were ever uncovering one flaw in the perfection of that stout citizen who now devotes his declining years to golf. No matter how often they might dine or otherwise commune with him, they always were discovering that the first 15 or 20 meetings were the hardest.

After that the stout citizen would give up guessing as to whether this was Bill or Dan or Joe. From then on their lives could be made more beautiful by knowledge that Babe Ruth would know them, collectively and individually, as "Kid."

Babe Ruth

Of course, from time to time gentlemen — from whatever estate the newspaper business happens to be in—resented this disregard for their undoubted worth and baptismal monickers. Most of them, though, merely took it as new evidence of the pressure that besets a great man or smirked complacently at mirrors which persisted in giving bald evidence that this "Kid" stuff was all wrong.

Recently a reporter made mention of this at one of those vast public gatherings at which he is such a popular favorite. Immediately some busybody in the audience inquired if inability to remember names of eminent commentators upon sports and wrestling was confined entirely to the Babe.

How Billy Southworth's Memory Was Stymied

Sadly, being one of those who are reluctant to share the miseries and the secrets of his profession with the world, the reporter was forced to admit the truth.

There was, for instance, the St. Louis baseball scrivener who devoted several seasons to giving his best aid, advice and comfort to Billy Southworth. Perhaps the reporter and the Cardinal manager were not as close as Park and Tilford but to all outward appearances they seemed two hearts that beat as one. Then fate (along with the failure to win a pennant) decreed that Southworth should try his baseball fortunes elsewhere.

Scant months later the two were reunited in a hotel lobby.

"How are you, Bill," caroled the baseball writer, rushing forward with eagerly outstretched hand. "Gee, I'm glad to—"

"Ah, uh." It was not that Mr. Southworth is a snob, a ribber or a guy who devotes his life to dealing out the ice. His brow was wrinkled in earnest concentration for a full minute. You could see that he was bearing down, determined not to let memory slip a fast one over the corner. But it was no use. He surrendered, even though going down gamely.

"Ah, uh—Say, I know your face. Didn't you use to play the piano at —" But the curtain must be drawn over this deplorable scen . . . .

Carpentier Didn't Know Joe Beckett Socially

It can be lifted upon the fact that athletes also fail to know one another. By this I do not refer to the Helen Willses, the Helen Jacobses or those others who probably have very good reason for not nodding as they pass by.

Instead, we can turn to the more elysian spheres. There we can consider an episode in the life of a gentleman once admiringly hailed by the press as the "Orchid Man," although he certainly was not in the florist racket.

"What kind of a fellow is this Joe Beckett?" he was asked.

"I don't know," was the quick, confident and smiling reply. "I've never met him."

"Sure you have," persisted the interviewer, shifting to English so that the waiter might get in on the laugh, too. "Don't you remember? He was in the ring with you twice and you knocked him out both times."

"Yes, I know." Georges Carpentier continued affable and willing to oblige. "But that was in the ring. I was only getting paid to fight him. There was no sense in talking to him then, was there?"

IT, PERHAPS, was no mere coincidence that one of the warmest days of the year arrived along with Max Schmeling.

Naturally the ballyhoo for his fight with Louis will continue to set the pace for other temperatures until the dark Uhlan sits down in front of the cream-colored Bomber on June 18. As Mr. Arthur Brisbane probably quite often has advised the world, a million bobs is a lot of doughnuts. Therefore even such specialists in charitable promotion as the athletic club directors must shower down their sparks of imagery so that all citizens with money to burn will have no trouble finding their way to the festal altar.

Just as naturally, though, all this good clean fun has brought new wrinkles into the otherwise bland countenance of Uncle Michael Strauss Jacobs. While wandering hither and yon, now peeping in anxiously to see that Herr Schmeling has been properly tucked into his pretty white (11:00 p. m.) bed, now peeping out fretfully to inquire whether Bolabos Yussell Jacobs has been yanked out of his pretty white (11:00 a. m.) crib, Uncle Mike ever faces the future with suspicious eye. Even while engaged in such elevating work as handing out A's (or some other letter of the Broadway alphabet) to the boys who have done the best daily compositions, the haunted gleam ever is present.

This is because, first of all, Uncle Mike has no illusions as to where charity lines up for the gun. Then again, he is a business man as well as the most eminent promoter since the days of the late lamented Rickard. So, because it is his own dollars which must back the ballyhoo and because a full 200 G's worth of them must be laid on the line long before June 18, this most celebrated of Main Stem traders must ever give his best regard to those items of fate which never appear upon the immaculate balance sheets.

Schmeling.

To make sure that no misfortune besets the path of the two athletic young men before they can wrangle before their gold embroidered audience, he must carefully scan all angles. While doing so he must comport himself with due memory of those other promising prizefights which were forcibly detoured, while seemingly on the straight and narrow way to success.

In mentioning this, there is no desire to cast hints or make promises. Instead, because the way of a promoter is tough and because no fight is a success, flop or even a sure thing until the gong has sounded, I merely am sympathizing with Uncle Mike. There have been all too many such affairs which have encountered dire fate in spite of the best of skill and intentions.

For instance there was the time when Stanley Ketchell and Sam Langford were ready to enter the ring of the old Fairmont club up in the Bronx. Perhaps a little bird whispered, although the bird for which the Bronx is most famed is not given to whispering. Or it may have been that the higher-ups conveyed more direct and forcible tidings to Billy Gibson, the promoter. Anyhow, the affair was junked and later conveyed to Philadelphia.

Wills' Battle With Tunney Never Did Come Off

Sometimes, though, fate behaves very handsomely in dealing with all parties concerned. High up in this sorting of fights which never came off there can be mentioned the Sharkey - Campolo affair, which was scheduled for Yankee stadium. Just as the woefully small crowd was wending its way into the arena, the skies wept in sympathy with the promoters who were about to lose a small fortune. So the thing was called off forever.

There also was the time when Gentleman Gene Tunney was supposed to meet Stevedore Harry Wills. A considerable portion of the press thought favorably about the glorious possibilities of that one and, indeed, the tickets already had been ordered for it.

What happened need not be gone into here. Some say that Tex Rickard begged Tunney to lay off and promised him a shot at Dempsey.

* * *

Things I believe:

That the sign on Connie Mack's door should read "Wrecking Done Here. Terms Strictly Cash."

That folks who predict that Tony Canzoneri will be massacred at Madison Square Gardens in May forget the first Ross-McLarnin affair. Just as is the case now, Vancouver Jimmy had been idle for too long before training for that one. So his legs were shaky and his timing was off all evening.

That the National League executives, having proved themselves great big strong business men of sterling character by blackballing the Jew who was voted the best umpire in the game, should make up with Dolly Stark. That the National League umpiring, never on a very high average, is worse than it has been in years. That, if Brooklyn really is the best of all baseball cities, it is very poor judgment to keep shooting the most incompetent arbiters into the Dodgers' games.

More Gay Prints and Gay Flowers!

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MORE, more, more! And still fashion keeps calling for more gay prints in the spring and summer wardrobe, for more gay flowers on your hat, on your lapel, at your throat and at your waistline, for gloves that are going in strong for high color, for footwear, too, that is most daringly gay. As flamboyantly colorful a season is this, as wildest flights of imagination e'er might venture to picture.

When the salesperson shows you the newer prints that fairly scream with color, do not be timid, but throw discretion to the winds and indulge to your heart's content in all the Dubonnet reds and the gorgeous tulip shades that are so fashionable and the lovely violet and purple tones and the radiant mimosa hues and the glamorous blues and the stunning greens plus dozens of equally captivating hues such as the color-card of fashion records.

Typical of the present trend is the costume to the right in the illustration. A galaxy of flowers in multicolor is the theme of the lovely triple sheer of bemberg print which fashions it. The colorings are as riotous and entrancing in this triple sheer as ever glorified a midsummer garden scene. You cannot but look your pretty-prettiest self in a flower print like this. Then, too, this costume is eminently practical. It is the sort that has a way of fitting into the picture anywhere and everywhere. With such a dress-plus-jacket ensemble in your wardrobe you will never be haunted with the ever-recurring question "what to wear." You will know.

The white pique bow and gilet treatment sound a winsome note of freshness. The short pleated sleeves are distinctively chic. The little jacket is double-breasted and belted at the back. These brief perky youthful-type jackets, some of which look like basques, others flaunting animated peplum, are quite the rage. You may, however, if you wish, go to just the extreme opposite and have the coat made of print that tops your print dress, full-length buttoned down the front from neck to hem. Long or short, be sure your print dress has its matching coat, jacket, or cape.

If you are looking for something distinctively new and out of the ordinary in prints, here it is, pictured to the left. White shadow flowers on a dark background such as this is the very latest print news. Fancy, if you will, white shadow-outlined flowers against a rich Dubonnet red, or contrasting a vivid green ground, or gray or black or the color you like best. No happier choice could be made than this cool frock made of triple sheer print of bemberg. It is dark enough to be practical and it is light enough to look and to feel summery and sheer. Marquisette sleeves cut full and shirred at the wrist with appliques of the flower motif cut from the print itself and a very feminine jabot of the marquisette, contribute to the charm of this gown.

We couldn't resist including the cunning flower-trimmed hat in this group. It fits so perfectly into the scheme of things colorful and entrancingly springlike. It is just such a headpiece as will crown any flower-print dress with glory. The shiny black of its basket weave straw is contrasted by a spray of gay posies — yellow bachelor's buttons and blue cornflowers. The bow is of silk taffeta in matching cornflower blue.

OF NOVELTY COTTON

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Cottons for swank is the message from fashion headquarters. This gay topcoat is of checkerboard patterned cotton, woven in navy and white. The novelty cotton suitings and coatings shown this season are thrilling. A one-piece frock in white twill is worn under this coat. A printed silk scarf at neck and waist adds tone and gaiety. The hat is white felt embroidered in white angora.

Hold Berets in Place

Jeweled perfume pins are Schiaparelli's new invention to hold velvet berets in place. She trims hairnets with cabochons or rhinestones for evening wear.

NAVY BLUE POPULAR COLOR FOR SPRING

Blue—especially navy—is the predominating color in the fashion parade. It is shown in formal and informal costumes from morning to night — in suits, coats, frocks and even pajamas. There's particular emphasis on blue as an important evening fashion. Blue is present in numerous copies of Schiaparelli, Vionnet, Mainbocher, Lanvin, and Molyneux, featuring peplums, yokes, pleats, tunics, and petticoats and squared shoulders. Great stress is laid on jacket dresses, and also bright and contrasting accessories.

Black costumes are next after the navy blues in importance.

New Frocks Are Inspired by Fashions From Orient

The stately robes of the Manchus and the distinctive apparel of the peasants have inspired extremely smart occidental frocks. Printed jacket dresses copy the brilliant coloring and designs of Chinese embroideries and porcelains, and feature graceful mandarin sleeves. The coolie jacket becomes a tunic with the typical standing collar and slit sides, posed over a slim straight skirt. Black paper taffeta makes a delightful dinner dress with a high neckline piped with jade green, short kimono sleeves and a jade green sash. It is worn with black kidskin sandals and a flat beret of black felt faced with green.

The White Ensemble

One of the loveliest ensembles seen recently was white in every detail—the gown, the ermine wrap, long white gloves, two strands of pearls, diamond bracelets, a diamond hair clip and three pure-white orchids pinned to a narrow shoulder strap.

Keeping Up With Science

Ancient Indians Had Amazing Civilization

WASHINGTON.—The spotlight of discovery is focusing on the land of the Mayas. It looks as though news of ancient America's greatest civilization would break there soon.

An expedition is already digging in the very region where the most learned students of America's past have pointed as the likely birthplace of the magnificent Mayan civilization. And that is in the highlands of Guatemala, south of Mexico.

Explorers heretofore have unearthed ruined cities of the Mayas in jungles of Yucatan and Guatemala. They have revealed these ancient Indians as master builders, astronomers, mathematicians, and inventors of a writing system. Belated respect is paid the Mayan calendar. It was more accurate than the calendar of Spain, when the Spaniards arrived in America and set about civilizing the benighted savages.

Baffling Question.

But what has baffled science is to explain when and where so extraordinary a civilization got its start.

So, the expedition of the Carnegie institution of Washington, which has launched on a campaign to explore mounds in the highland region, in the suburbs of Guatemala City, is being closely watched.

It was in the hill country, by the generally accepted theory, that the Mayas or their forefathers learned to plant corn. And when they became stable farmers, then their star rose.

Find Old Site.

At the site chosen for digging, discoveries have already been reported by Dr. A. V. Kidder, expedition leader. A stucco pyramid, three times rebuilt, and tombs containing pottery of great interest, are the initial finds. How old will the site turn out to be?

Potsherds found at the same site some years ago were hesitantly pronounced "early." Since then, archeologists have accumulated more knowledge for establishing the antiquity of Mayan remains, as far back as the history has been pushed. The oldest known Mayan city, Uaxactun, goes back to several centuries before Christ.

Air Flow Curtain Protects Bridge of Liner Queen Mary

LONDON.—The use of aerodynamics and attention to air flow will make it possible for officers of the S. S. Queen Mary to stand on the navigating bridge, in open air, and yet be protected from the weather. An invisible, but no less real, curtain or air helps accomplish the feat.

The forward edge of the navigating bridge has a solid guard sheet curved forward which has, along the upper edge, an additional sheet of metal separated slightly from it. As the ship moves forward the curved portion catches the air and directs it upward through the slot arrangement.

This high-pressure curtain of air flows upward higher than a man's head before it is swept backward. Thus the navigating officers, standing behind the guard sheet, are in an area of low air pressure and protected from wind, rain, or snow which goes over their heads.

Face Nerves Get Mixed As Aftermath of Injury

DURHAM, N. C.—Fibers of a facial nerve, recovering after an injury, may get mixed up and grow back to supply the wrong facial muscles, it appears from studies reported by Drs. Howard A. Howe and Sarah S. Tower, Johns Hopkins Medical school, at the meeting here recently of the American Association of Anatomists.

The studies were made on monkeys. The effects on the animals' face muscles of the nerve fiber mixups were considered similar to the ties that appear in man following injury to the facial nerve.

The reason for the facial twitching and peculiar expressions following injury to the nerve appears to be roughly as follows: The nerve, recovering from the injury, sends out new fibers but these do not grow back to supply the same muscle fibers as before.

Yugoslavia Is Rich Field for Future Archeology Study

Traces of Prehistoric Man Found by Searchers

YUGOSLAVIA is one of the spots on the world map where archeologists expect to unearth important news of prehistory.

This answer to the popular question, "How do archeologists decide where to dig?" was brought out at Evanston, Ill., at the meeting of the Central section of the American Anthropological association.

Recent American expeditions, led by Dr. Vladimir Fewkes, have taken the lay of the land in Yugoslavia. By tramping over the ground north of Greece, where ancient men must have wandered and camped and traded, the pre-historians have studied the important geographic factors. The Danube river valley was a main highway, a sort of funnel through which traffic took lines of least resistance between the Near East and Europe.

Task Is Extensive.

Yugoslavia's own scientific institutions are making field explorations, but the task certainly cannot be accomplished by them alone, Robert McCormick Adams of the University of Chicago reported to the meeting of anthropologists.

Mr. Adams, who has worked with the American expeditions in Yugoslavia, told of discoveries which are regarded as a beginning.

Only a few traces of Old Stone age man have yet been found in Yugoslavia, though the cave dwellers of that long dark age must have frequented this "highway" country.

Stone Age Traces.

The New Stone age is clearer, from discovery and excavation of sites where people settled and practiced the new arts of farming, raising domestic animals, making good pottery and building wattle and daub houses.

It has been estimated, said Mr. Adams, that there are 100,000 Bronze and Iron age tumuli—or mounds—alone in southern Yugoslavia and Macedonia.

May Plan Future Industrial Growth on Geography Basis

PHILADELPHIA. — Economic geography is the basis on which the nation might well solve its troubles of the migration of industry from one region to another, and the resulting problem of a stranded population without employment, said Albert S. Carlson of Dartmouth college, before the Franklin institute here recently.

Mr. Carlson, instructor in economic geography, declared:

"As a nation we are just beginning to recognize the seriousness of the unemployment problem. We are applying some intelligence to its solution, but only a small modicum of the knowledge and ability available. We are merely beginning when we are able to determine the number and character of those who are permanently displaced from the industries of a particular town. What are we going to do about it? There are three possibilities. We may provide relief for them and allow normal forces to work themselves out as best they may. It is unthinkable that we should proceed along this route much longer. What else can we do? We can develop new industries in these towns.

Moving Population.

When this cannot be done profitably there is only one other possibility. That is to have responsible agencies suggest other regions where there are better opportunities for the stranded population. We can do this only when we recognize the remarkable possibilities for appraisal of present and future regional trends in the economic geographic approach to social problems.

"We have reached a stage in the evolution of our national life when the results of scientific research must be consciously related to our social life. Modern geography offers a most valuable method for the co-operation of the social and natural sciences in the solving of our most fundamental national problem."

31-Pound Gold Nugget Found in Ural Mountains

MOSCOW.—Studies of the two giant gold nuggets discovered in the Tyelguin mine in the Ural mountains have now been completed here. Their weights, as finally established, are 9,420 and 14,318 grams respectively or approximately 21 and 31.5 pounds.

The nuggets are quite unique and have a very interesting structure Each nugget represents a very fine transparent net consisting of lamellar, octagonal, needle-shaped and wire-shaped gold crystals forming concretions.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

JAMES MELTON, one of radio's sweetest singers, has finished his latest radio assignment and arrived in Hollywood to work in "Cain and Mabel." Before leaving New York he made inquiries as to his own importance in the picture—wanted to know what sort of breaks he'd get on publicity, etc.

He knew that Marion Davies, being the star, would come first in the hearts of the publicity men for the company. A casual inquiry revealed the fact that he'd come second, which was all right with him. But for the moment neither he nor his informant recalled that Mary Boland was also cast for that picture and Miss Boland is pretty important, being an excellent actress and a favorite of movie fans as well.

Also—Mr. Melton is, first of all, a singer. The script calls for a prize-fighter as a hero. The question at the moment is—if you take his singing away from Mr. Melton, will you have a prize-fighter?

Harold Lloyd

Now it's Harold Lloyd who wants to make pictures in color. He has been making experiments on his own hook for the last two years, but is not yet quite sure whether or not color would add to the type of comedies that he makes.

Furthermore, he's through with making just one picture a year; from now he'll make two a year, he thinks, or at least, two every three years. And with his latest one, "The Milky Way," as an example, that comes under the heading of good news.

Those radio programs of Bing Crosby's are rapidly becoming one of the best of the broadcasts; he is getting really big names, (or rather, his sponsor is getting them for him), and he makes a delightful master of ceremonies.

When you see "The Great Ziegfeld" (and of course you'll see it!) you'll hear "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody" beautifully sung. Allan Jones sang it, while Stanley Morner was photographed as if he were singing it. Jones did not get screen credit, and Morner, who has a good singing voice, got credit but didn't sing.

The youngsters in Hal Roach's "Our Gang" started on a personal appearance tour a while ago, which has proved so successful that they will go on and on right through the summer. Not only children, but grown people as well, arrive for the first show and then stay right on till closing time.

As if there hadn't been enough trouble over Mae West's latest, "Klondike Annie," the Chinese government is objecting to it now, so Mae won't be a welcome visitor in the Orient.

Pat O'Brien

Another picture that you'll want to see is "I Married a Doctor"—which you'll recognize as Sinclair Lewis' great book, "Main Street." Josephine Hutchinson and Pat O'Brien have the leads, and do exceedingly well by them. However, here's a word of warning to young, unmarried doctors; don't take the girl you hope to marry to see this one, for it may make them feel that doctors don't make very good husbands.

Staging a come-back in pictures was rather a hard thing for Dolores Costello Barrymore to do; she was a victim of the early days of talkies, when she was given such inane speeches that audiences laughed at her, which cost her an opportunity she really deserved.

But she took voice lessons, and diction lessons, and did so well in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" that Paramount has signed her up.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . When people in New York asked Bette Davis if she was going to fly back to Hollywood she said, "No; I'm a sissy, I'll take the train" . . . Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler did the same . . . But a few accidents have not frightened the general public; plane reservations still have to be made way ahead . . . Eddie Robinson refused to be frightened; his mother was ill in New York, so he flew to see her, and flew back . . . Anita Louise is the latest star to embark for picture-making in England . . . Eddie Cantor's new radio contract calls for something like $15,000 a week, but he'll have to pay his company himself . . . Ed Wynn will return to NBC soon, and have Graham McNamee with him again.

Care of Pastures Insures Good Feed

Early, continuous, and close grazing has made almost unnumbered acres of so-called "permanent pasture" into exercising grounds where animals scarcely get a mouthful of grass. A profitable pasture is not one on which an animal must hunt 24 hours a day for subsistence, but one where the animal can fill up on grass in a short time and then lie down to make meat or milk.

When the first warm days of spring come, the winter supply of feed is apt to be low, so thousands of farm animals are turned onto permanent pastures and the result is damaged, often ruined, pastures for the entire grazing season.

Keeping live stock off the permanent pasture another two weeks in the spring to allow the grass to get ahead of the animals, and then allowing it to keep ahead will double the yield of the permanent pasture.

First — Let permanent pasture make considerable growth before turning live stock onto it in the spring.

Second—Sow grass seed on bare spots and topdress the spots lightly with manure.

Third—Never graze permanent pasture down to bare ground. Allow the grass to have considerable leaf surface which is absolutely essential to the life of plants.

Fourth—Provide temporary pasture for early spring and midsummer.

Fifth—Lime and fertilize to replace plant food taken off by live stock through many years. This application will return about $4 in increased pasture for every dollar invested.

The part that received no lime or fertilizer required four acres to maintain one cow on full grass feed during the summer. The part that was limed and fertilized required a little less than one acre to maintain a cow. The return per acre the first year, was four times the cost of the lime and fertilizer, and five times greater than the return per acre from the unfertilized portion.

Have two plots, totaling about one acre for each 1,500 pounds of live stock to be pastured.

On plot No. 1 sow a mixture of oats and barley in early spring as soon as the ground can be worked. This plot should be ready for grazing in about one month and should last until July. Then plow or disk this oats and barley plot and sow it to winter rye for grazing in late fall and early spring the next year. The following spring when the rye becomes too woody for good pasture, plow the plot and sow it to sudan grass for summer and fall grazing. Plow the sudan stubble in late fall after the grazing season and so have it ready to seed to oats and barley again early the next spring, thus starting the rotation over again.

On plot No. 2 grow the same rotation of crops, but have the rotation "one crop behind" plot No. 1, so when the system is established, by shifting the live stock from one plot to the other a continuous supply of green pasture will be available through the entire season.

Tips for Sheep Growers Are of Tested Value

Treat the flock carefully for worms before they go on pasture. Treat every warm month, if this doesn't control parasites, treat twice a month, especially the spring lambs.

Shear your flock when the weather is warm enough that the wool burdens the sheep.

If a ewe doesn't give quite enough milk supplement by giving the lamb a little extra from a bottle. They learn quickly to come to you.

A creep for the lambs is a place where the lambs can go and the sheep can't. It makes the lamb grow faster, is easier on the ewe. It is a 100 per cent satisfactory proposition.

If you keep some ewe lambs for addition to the flock, keep good ones. The kind that sells best—that is what you are trying to produce.

Mark Trucked Animals

Since a good share of the live stock now going to market goes in truck lots, frequently in mixed loads, it is important that every shipper mark his animals so that they can be readily identified at the stockyards, advises a writer in the Prairie Farmer. The trucker should be furnished with the marks for his bill of lading. Describing stock by color or sex is not sufficient for accurate handling. The best way to mark cattle and hogs is by clipping marks on the back. Sheep can be marked with a quick-drying paint. You will be more certain of quick returns on your live stock consignments when it goes to market properly identified.

Should Use Chart

As part of his feeding equipment, every dairyman should have milk sheets to record daily milk weights, a good milk scale on which to weigh milkings, roughage, and grain, and some way to obtain occasional butterfat tests on individual cows.

Her Husband's Stepmother!

Instead of being married to her husband, Madame Roux of Paris recently discovered that she is actually the legal widow of his father.

During the war she fell in love with a young French officer and thought she had married him. Now she finds that, owing to an error in the registration of the marriage, she is legally married to her "husband's" father, who died about 15 years ago.

They take these things very seriously in France, and until the matter has been fully investigated by the Court of Appeal and the marriage nullified, Madame Roux will have to remain the stepmother of her husband!

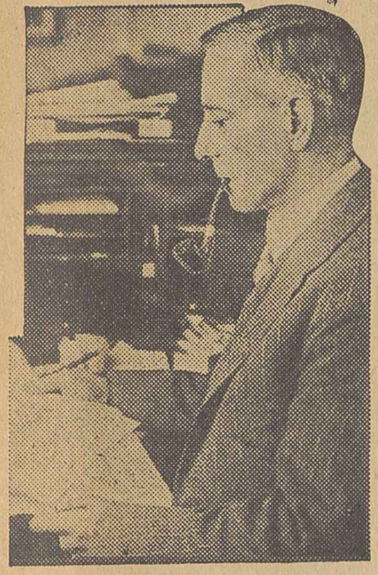
World History in the Making---That's Our Weekly News Review

The people of the United States became world-conscious with the plunging of this country into the World War. Ever since that time they have realized that the United States, with all of its so-called isolation, is concerned with world affairs, and they have a deep interest today in those current events that are making history in all countries on the globe.

It is world history in the making that we are giving to the readers of The Montevallo Times every week in our "Weekly News Review," written by Edward W. Pickard.



EDWARD W. PICKARD

This is an editorial interpretation of today's history - making events in our own country and throughout the world, of events that have an influence, directly or indirectly, on ourselves. It covers the kind of events that intelligent citizens talk about, that they wish to be informed about, so they may talk intelligently.

Edward W. Pickard, who prepares this feature for our columns, is one of the highly trained newspaper observers and writers of the nation. He has a background of many years of experience, of a very broad education, of personal contact with men of affairs of this country, and travel and study in many foreign lands. From his school and college days he has been a constant student of world affairs and history of the past, of world and national history in the making, of the men and events of our generation.

Mr. Pickard's foreign travels have but intensified his love for and appreciation of America. He is intensely American, and sees world events through the eyes of an American. He writes of events from the standpoint of their effect on our own land.

Our readers will find in this "Weekly News Review" a feature that is very much worthy of their careful reading each week. It will keep them closely in touch with the events of consequence, and they will find it a sure foundation for any discussion they may have with their neighbors of the real and important news of each week.

"Klondike Annie"

"Mae Day" comes early this year. Mae West's new picture, "Klondike Annie," shows Saturday at the Strand Theatre.

In the best Western tradition, "Klondike Annie" is a breezy story of San Francisco's Barbary Coast and the fabulous Alaskan Gold Rush, with the blonde star swinging through a series of amusing and exciting situations with the same skeptical twinkle in her eye and the traditional "C'mup'n see me"—or its equivalent on her lips.

Mae is again a gay and ornamental gal of the '90's, and Victor McLaglen, virile hero of "The Inforfer," and "Professional Soldier," is her principal foil. McLaglen i scast as the captain of a steamship to which Mae flees after her escape from a gambling house where she has been held a prisoner. In the battle for her escape a man is killed and Mae heads for the remotest spot possible—Alaska, where the Gold Rush is roaring at full tilt.

Amendment Proposed For Town

WOULD GIVE MONTEVALLO THE RIGHT TO LEVY MORE TAXES

At the recent special session of the Legislature, a bill by Representative R. A. Reid was passed, providing for submission to the people of Alabama a proposed constitution amendment, which would give the people of the Town of Montevallo the right to levy additional taxes, as provided in the bill.

The proposed amendment will be voted upon in the state general election in November this year. If adopted by the state, then the people of Montevallo, under provisions of the Amendment, would be required to vote on the proposal in a municipal election.

The provisions of the proposed amendment are as follows:

The Town of Montevallo, Alabama, shall have the power and right to levy and collect a tax of one half of one per centum in any one year on property situated therein based on the valuation of such property as assessed for State taxation for the tax year ending on the 30th day of September next succeeding the levy; provided, that for the purpose of paying bonds issued and outstanding at the time of the adoption of this amendment and the interest thereon, and for the purpose of paying bonds which may be issued after the adoption of this amendment and the interest thereon, an additional tax of one half of one per centum may be levied and collected by said municipality, provided, further, that a majority of the qualified electors of said municipality voting at an election called for that purpose may vote a special tax not to exceed one half of one per centum in any one year for any special purpose, or purposes for which it is levied and collected; provided, however, that the total tax to be levied shall not exceed one and one half per centum in any one year. Provided, further, that the adoption of this amendment shall in no wise affect, limit, modify, abridge or impair the power, authority or right of said municipal corporation to levy and collect the special school taxes, now or hereafter vested in or conferred upon it, under the Constitution or any amendment thereto.

Shelby Co. Is Jarman's Second Best

To My Good Friends in Shelby County:

Following the official count by the State Democratic Executive Committee a friend called me and said: "Pete, I have bad news for you, while you thought you lost only 72 votes in Perry County your figures were evidently quite incomplete because the official count increased your vote in Perry by 589 and Maxwell's 81." My reply was: "On the other hand it strikes me as about the best news since the election because it causes my own county to be my banner one and Shelby, my banner county of two years ago, to be the very close second."

In my statement last week, I expressed my appreciation to the excellent citizenship of Shelby for making it my third best county, whereas the official count gives me 92.29 per cent in Sumter, 91.94 per cent in Shelby and 91.15 per cent in Perry, causing Shelby to trail my own county by only .35 per cent. It furthermore shows that my good friends of Shelby gave me my largest majority.

I thank you again from the bottom of a very appreciative heart, for your continued magnificent support and look forward with pleasure to the opportunity of seeing you at no distant date.

With kind personal regards and every good wish, I am your friend,
Pete Jarman, Jr.

Seniors To Repeat 'Squaring The Circle'

The Senior Class at Alabama College will repeat the play "Squaring the Circle," Saturday evening May 30, in Palmer Hall as a part of the commencement exercises. It will be directed by Miss Ellen-Haven Gould, assisted by Miss Eleanor Rennie.

The play was presented earlier in the semester and the cast included Misses Patricia Swift, Gadsden; Mary Nall Kendrick, Selma; Helen Hewell, Mobile; Grace Wilson, Fairfield; Billie Hill, Siluria; Ruth Dunning, Thomasville; Cecile Stapleton, Loxley; Elizabeth Merrill, Andalusia; Elizabeth Messer, LaFayette; Elizabeth Youngblood, Minter; Grace Lee Newkirk, Hamilton, Ohio; Arlyn Hill, Lisman and Inez Burdette, Roanoke.

The student chairmen of committees in charge of the production included: Misses Grace Wilson, Fairfield; Frances Ribble, Bessemer, and Clarice Walton, Bessemer.

The play will follow the Class Day exercises scheduled at four o'clock on the afternoon of May 30, while that morning from ten to twelve o'clock an exhibition will be given by the College Art Department and an open house will be held by the Home Economics Department.

On the preceding day the meeting of the Board of Trustees and the Presidents reception for the Governor and Mrs. Graves and the graduating class will be held. The commencement sermon and the Vesper Service have been announced for May 31, and the Baccalaureate address for Monday morning, June 1.

CARL BRILL, JR., OF ALDRICH CELEBRATES 7TH BIRTHDAY

Secretarial Club Gives Banquet Thursday

Miss Gertrude H. Ward of Montgomery was the speaker at the annual banquet of the Secretarial Club at Alabama College Thursday evening, speaking on the subject, "Some thoughts For a Business and Professional Woman." Miss Ward is an active member of the Business and Professional Women's Association, having formerly served as Corresponding Secretary of the Massachusetts branch of that Association and as president of the Montgomery chapter. The program began with words of welcome by Miss Dorothy Liles, retiring president of the club. The Speech Chorus rendered the following numbers: "I'm Nobody;" "Milton Obess Rhyme From Dorsay," "One and Twenty," "Independence Limited," "In a Glass of Water Before Retiring," "The Naughty Boy," and "Wind in the Grasses." The chorus is composed of Misses Phyllis Poland, Sara Wyatt Bonner, Brownie Lollar, Betsy Cox, Alvis Neville, Emily McLendon, Mary Potts, Helen Hewell, Aileen Holley, Dorothy Davis, Billie Hill and Eleanor Watson.

The Bama Skippers, local orchestra, furnished music for dancing. Toasts for the three lower classes were given by Misses Carolyn Patterson, Winifred Leon, and Betsy Cox. The place cards, blue and yellow, were in the form of miniature private offices, while there were blue and gold flowers on the tables. More than eighty students and a group of faculty members attended, in addition to several guests.

$4,880,000,000 Program Is Held Improper Delegation of Power To President

Washington.—Attacking the 1935 relief act through a test case involving the Resettlement Administration, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals held today it transgressed the constitution.

Three of the five judges ruled, as had the Supreme Court in the NRA and AAA cases, that the law appropriating $4,880,000,000 delegated powers improperly to President Roosevelt and violated states' rights. The Resettlement Administration was considered invalid.

New Deal officials conferred about future procedure both on relief policy and in the courts.

Solicitor General Stanley Reed said an appeal would be taken to the Supreme Court at once.

He told newspaper men that after a hurried reading of the opinion he believed it was "narrow" and confined to construction projects for shifting population under the Resettlement Administration.

"I am not trying to minimize the opinion," he added. "We wanted it the other way."

A spokesman for Harry L. Hopkins said the work relief program would go on despite the decision.

With Congress in session, he said, the act could be amended to meet the court's objections.

Hopkins' WPA had received the largest allotment of $1,363,926,901.

The sweeping opinion of the court indicated that certain types of relief projects were constitutional, saying:

"We are not here confronted with an appropriation for internal improvements of a national character or importance, or the erection of public buildings or the grant of loans to a state or municipality to carry out public works projects.

"As to these," the court said, "we might find in the nature of the objectives a well-beaten path by which to supply the omitted means to that end."

But the judges thought different about such projects as the Resettlement Administration is promoting.

The court said the law "attempts to reach and control matters over which the constitution has given Congress no powers."

In a test which resulted from plans for a model community at Franklin, in Somerset County, New Jersey, the Appellate Court found there was no constitutional power "conferred upon the federal government to regulate 'housing' or to 'resettle' population."

Two members agreed constitutional authority was lacking in this case, but said the court should not have passed upon validity of the entire program.

CIVIC CLUB

The Montevallo Civic Club held its regular meeting Wednesday noon at the Baptist Church. Dr. A. W. Vaughan, vice president, presided in the absence of the president Dr. Fred B. Pearson.

Miss Margaret Hodo, community worker for the counties of Shelby, Chilton, Bibb and Coosa, was the guest speaker. She explained the program of her work toward community organization under the social security act.

The organization of a community group for welfare work and recreational development in Montevallo was mentioned by Miss Hodo. Upon her suggestion the club voted to authorize a committee to confer with representatives of other organized groups of the community in considering the formation of an organization here.

Such an organization in the community, it was suggested, might serve effectively as a welfare agency, as well as to initiate some program looking toward public recreational facilities for children.

Alabama College Yearbook Out

1936 TECHNALA ANNOUNCES WINNERS OF BEAUTY CONTEST

The 1936 Technala, yearbook of Alabama College, was released on the campus Monday by Misses Ida Katheryn Coker, Talladega; and Dorothy Liles, Gadsden.

The volume is dedicated to President A. F. Harman and former President O. C. Carmichael. The book is composed of five sections, announcing for the first time the winners of the beauty contest and the elections of "Types" at Elite Night. The beauties were picked by Neysa McMein, noted artist.

Girls' Camp To Start July 27th

ENROLLMENT IS LIMITED TO FIFTY GIRLS, AGES TEN TO EIGHTEEN

The annual camp for girls of 10-18 years of age will be conducted at Alabama College July 27 to Auguest 22, according to announcement of Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, student counselor and camp director at the College. Plans for the program this summer are announced in detail through a special bulletin which will soon be released on the campus. The camp advisory committee consists of five faculty members: Dr. A. W. Vaughan, Miss Alfreda Mosscrop, Mr. W. J. Kennerly, Miss Olivia Lawson, and Mrs. W. H. Trumbauer.

Enrollment, which is limited to 50, is advised for the entire period but may be completed for a shorter time. The camp program includes such activities as dancing, music, dramatics, swimming, arts and craft, tennis, archery hiking, songs, and vespers.

The campers live in a college dormitory and have their regular meals in hte dining hall on the campus. The entire college facilities are available for the use and this opportunity includes the library, in which many of those attending are especially interested.

The college camp house, located a short distance from the main campus, is used frequently during the session. The counselors are selected from groups of college graduates, each one specializing in a phase of the camp work. One counselor is assigned to each group of seven campers. The camp publishes a weekly paper "The Camp Echo" which serves to stimulate self-expression and creative writing, and also to give parents and friends a picture of camp activities.

The magazine "Physical Education Digest" recently selected an article on the Alabama College camp for publication as one of the most outstanding current articles on health and recreation. An article on the same subject was included in an issue of Schools and Society and also in School Activities.

In recent years the following girls from Shelby County have attended the camp for girls at Alabama College:

Jean Letson, Columbiana; Elizabeth Taylor, Columbiana; Julia Ward, Montevallo.

Labor Federation Asks Cooperation

APPEALS TO BUSINESS AND GOVERNMENT IN FINDING PLACES FOR THE IDLE

Washington, May 17.—Reiterating that reemployment is not keeping pace with recovery, the American Federation of Labor on Sunday issued a new appeal to the government and business to cooperate with labor groups in an attempt to put the jobless back to work.

Asserting that gains in profits of large corporations have far exceeded gains in production and that leading corporations are reporting earnings close to 1926 levels, the federation expressed concern over "The exceedingly serious reemployment shortage."

In its monthly survey of business, the federation asked:

"If we cannot count on business, without control, to put the unemployed to work, how then can a place be found for them in America's workshop, where they may produce wealth and earn the income necessary for a good life?"

Answering this in a renewed appeal to both business and the government for joint action, the federation said: "This cooperative basis, as distinct from government control, cannot be too strongly emphasized."

The survey asserted that under NRA reemployment kept pace with business recovery, but that since the Supreme Court had outlawed the recovery agency it had fallen far behind.

"By March, 1936," it said, "business had traveled 72 per cent of the way back to normal, but only 46 per cent of the depression unemployed had gone back to work.

"If reemployment had kept pace with business recovery 8,120,000 of the depression unemployed would be back at work today, actually only 5,200,000 have found jobs in industry. That is, when all industries are counted we have a reemployment shortage of 2,850,000."

The survey further reported business was "not even providing enough work for those who had jobs in 1929 and lost them in depression; far less is it providing jobs for the 4,000,000 who have been added to America's army of work seekers since 1929—young people asking for work for the first time.

"This means that, of the total 12,184,000 who were unemployed in March, we can only count on business to provide work for 4,000,000 even when it reaches normal. The other 8,000,000 will still be jobless unless reemployment makes far better progress than it has made to date."

Baptist Church

Dr. Pearson, who has been attending the Southern Baptist Convention in St. Louis, Missouri, will be home this week and will preach at both morning and evening services next Sunday.

The ordinance of baptism will be administered at the close of the worship service Sunday morning.

The Sunbeams will meet with Mrs. Murray Fancher at 2:30 on Monday afternoon. The Woman's Missionary Society will meet at the church at 4:00 p.m. Monday. The Royal Ambassadors will meet at the pastor's home at 7:00 p.m. Monday.

High Court Kills Guffey Coal Act

PRICE FIXING PROVISIONS OF THE CODE ARE THUS DISPOSED OF

Washington — The New Deal lost Monday in the Supreme Court in its contention that the Guffey soft coal act was constitutional.

In a trenchant decision, the court said the conclusion was unavoidable "that the price fixing provisions of the (bituminous) code are so related to and dependent upon the labor provisions as to conditions, considerations or compensations, as to make it clearly probable that the former being held bad, the latter would not have passed.

"The fall of the former (before the court) therefore, carries down with it the latter.

"The price fixing provisions of the code are thus disposed of without coming to the question of their constitutionality; but neither this disposition of the matter, nor anything we have said, is to be taken as indicating that the court is of opinion that these provisions, if separately enacted, could be sustained."

The six to three decision was delivered by Justice Sutherland before a crowded audience which included Senator Guffey (D., Pa), co-author of the law with Representative Snyder (D., Pa.)

Justices Cardozo, Brandies and Stone dissented.

A separate opinion was delivered by Chief Justic Hughes, who contended the act might be sustained "in relation to the provisions for marketing in interstate commerce.

"The decisions of the courts below, so far as they accomplish that result, should be affirmed," he asserted.

The majority held that Congress in the law had exceeded its power under the constitution in attempting to regulate interstate commerce.

The decision holding NRA unconstitutional was cited as a precedent.

Constitutionality of the Guffey act to permit federal control of prices, wages and hours in the bituminous industry had been challenged by James Walter Carter, West Virginia and Virginia producers, and by 19 Kentucky operators.

Speech Clinic Has Made Good Record

The Speech Clinic at Alabama College during the session has provided assistance for 263 students all of whom were given voice tests. Sixty of this number in addition received special remedial work.

The Clinic in all cases furnished copies of the voice tests to English instructors of the students with recommendations as to the procedure in effecting voice improvement. Seventeen students, chosen from among those needing special correction were enrolled in a special speech correction class, the majority of them receiving instruction twice a week over a period of seven months.

Voice recordings were made in the cases of fifty-three students, the two-fold purpose being to serve as a motivating device for speech improvement and as an objection record of actual improvement. A record was made for each student before and after the instruction.

The Speech Clinic was organized this year under the direction of J. H. Henning, of the Speech Department.

The College has available anatomical models of the vocal mechanisms which have been used in various courses in the Fundamentals of Speech and particularly in connection with the course offered to those with a major in this field.

SOUTHERN LOSS DECREASES

New York, May 16— Southern Railway Company for the quarter ended March 31 had net loss of $209,622 against net loss of $1,124,924 in the March quarter last year.

Post Office Bids To Be Opened

PLANS FOR NEW BUILDING ARE ON FILE AT LOCAL OFFICE

The Procurement Division, Public Works Branch, Washington, D. C., announces that sealed proposals will be publicly opened at that office at 1 p.m., June 10, for furnishing all labor and materials and performing all work for construction of the United States Postoffice Building at Montevallo.

Copies of the plans and specifications are on file at the Postoffice in Montevallo. As best we could determine from the plans, we gather that the building is to be 62 feet across the front and 72 feet long. The front will face Vine Street. It will be one story high, with elevated basement. There will be no entrance to the building from the Main Street side.

The front elevation plans gives assurance that it will be a beautiful building, and one that will add much to the appearace and convenience of the Town of Montevallo.

Marble trimmings to be white with sand rubbed finish. Slate of grey color.

All exposed concrete surfaces in areas having steps leading to basement, including steps from mailing platform and edges of loading platform slab to have carborundum rubbed surface.

Limestone may be used in lieu of all marble, except entrance platform and steps, which are to be granite. The limestone to be buff or light gray color, machine planed finish. Granite to be light gray, six line finish.

The blue prints answer the question of what will be done about the trees on the site. The trees in front of the building on Vine Street are to remain, but a new concrete sidewalk will be built across the front.

The two large trees on the Main Street side will remain, as will the present concrete walk on that side. The one large oak tree in the corner of the lot is to remain.

While no information is given as to time construction will begin, it is taken as reasonably certain that it will not be many days after the bids are opened June 10 until the contract will be awarded.

Dr. and Mrs. Harman Entertain

The incoming student government executive board and its faculty advisory committee at Alabama College were entertained by the retiring executive board at a picnic supper at the home of Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Harman.

Those present were: Mrs. A. F. Harman, Miss Olivia Lawson, Miss Katherine Vickery, Miss Minnie L. Steckel, Dr. and Mrs. M. L. Orr, Miss Isabel Henderson, Miss Jane Fowler, Miss Mary McLendon, Miss Ruth Bennett, Miss Elizabeth Kirksey, Miss Elizabeth Tutwiler, Miss Laura Coleman, Miss Ella Mae Hargrave, Miss Ruth Crutcher, Miss Louise Jones, Miss Martha Lowery, Miss Kathleen Williams, Miss Jeannette Bruce, Miss Mabel Caley, Miss Sarah Kyser, Miss Elizabeth Pearson, Miss Ola Martin, Miss Mary Louise Hall and Misss Eleanor Strickland.

Opening of Bridge Is Delayed

Engineer Jack Burleson regrets very much that it is necessary to say the new bridge will not be open to traffic next Monday as previously announced.

Delay in the opening, Mr. Burleson explained, is due to the fact that final inspection and acceptance of the job by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads can not be done this week as was planned. And the contractor can not open the bridge to the public until this inspection is made.

In all probability, according to Engineer Burleson, the final inspection will be made next week, and the bridge will be opened about a week later than the date of May 25, as previously announced.

LEGION MEETING TONIGHT

A card has been issued for a meeting of Hendrick-Hudson Post No. 96, of the American Legion to be held at the Legion Hut in Montevallo, tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 o'clock. All veterans and members are earnestly urged to be present, as important business coming before the meeting is to be transacted.

Borah Loses in Ohio Primary—House Defeats Frazier-Lemke Inflation Bill—Tugwell's Report on His Resettlement Administration.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SENATOR WILLIAM BORAH banked heavily on success in the Ohio Presidential preference primary, but the Republicans of that state turned him down decisively in favor of their "favorite son," Robert A. Taft, son of the late President Taft. Of the 52 delegates to the Cleveland convention, Borah captured only five, the others, including the delegates at large, being Taft men. The winning delegation will be virtually unpledged, because it will vote for Taft only on the first ballot. Mr. Borah did not take this defeat calmly. He gave out a statement in Washington accusing the Republican organization leaders of manipulating the votes of colored citizens against him by promising the passage of federal anti-lynching legislation which he has opposed as unconstitutional. The Idaho senator added:

Senator Borah

"The Republican party will go into the campaign laying great stress upon Constitutional integrity and the preservation of state rights.

"The men who are in control of the party, and who will likely be in control of the convention, will write its platform and name its candidate, have already demonstrated that they care nothing about Constitutional integrity or the preservation of state rights, that their talk on this subject is hypocritical and intellectually dishonest."

Ohio Democrats polled about 500,000 votes in the primary, nearly 100,000 more than the Republicans, and they expressed their preference for Mr. Roosevelt over Col. Henry Breckenridge to the tune of 16 to 1. They also renominated Gov. Martin L. Davey, who will be opposed by John W. Bricker, Republican, in November.

West Virginia also held primaries and there Borah and Roosevelt won easily over nominal opposition. The state's Republican delegation, however, will go to the convention uninstructed.

It is interesting to note that one of Ohio's delegates at Cleveland will be Alice Roosevelt Longworth, daughter of "T. R." and a spectator at many previous conventions.

WE ARE not going to have any currency inflation, at least before next session of congress. The Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, dragged out of committee by a petition signed by 218 house members, and then hotly debated for a day, was defeated by the decisive vote of 235 to 142. The bill called for the printing of three billion dollars for its financing.

The petition signers included 159 Democrats, and before the vote every one of them was told by Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, the party whip, that the President didn't want the measure passed at this time and that if the member voted for the bill it would be just too bad for him. Besides this potent argument the Democratic leaders induced President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to intervene and he called together the federation's executive council and had it write a letter saying it was opposed to the bill because of the inflation feature. This was read to the house by Speaker Byrns and undoubtedly affected the vote, though some members resented being told what to do by Mr. Green.

There was relief in the White House when it was announced the President would not have to veto such a measure in an election year.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was supposed to have abandoned for the present the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tidal power projects for which the house refused to appropriate further funds. But Senator Robinson of Arkansas was called to the White House for a conference and returned to the house to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to appoint engineering boards of review for the two schemes.

The boards would present their findings by June 29, and, if favorable, the President would have authorization to set aside $10,000,000 for the canal and $9,000,000 for Passamaquoddy out of available relief money.

NEWTON D. BAKER and Dean Acheson, counsel, for five power companies that are trying to block the government's municipal power program, met with defeat in the District of Columbia Supreme court when they sought to subpoena correspondence between President Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes. Jerome Frank, a New Deal attorney, stated that the President had directed that his "privilege" of testimonial immunity be asserted in the case, and Chief Justice Wheat refused to issue the subpoena.

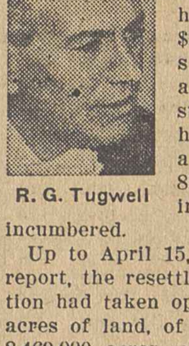
WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATOR HARRY HOPKINS issued an order to state WPA directors instructing them not to employ armed guards, not to spy on workers and not to blacklist workers who organize.

The order was issued following a conference with Victor F. Ridder, New York city WPA administrator, who employed a detachment of guards to protect his office against anti-WPA demonstrations which Mr. Ridder asserts were stirred up by Communists.

OPPOSITION in the senate finance committee to the corporate profits tax in the administration's $803,000,000 revenue bill was so strong that both Democrats and Republicans sought for some compromise. Treasury officials were heard in favor of the measure as passed by the house, but former treasury officials and various business and industrial leaders speaking in opposition were seemingly more persuasive. Senator Tom Connally of Texas put forward a plan he thought all might agree upon. It would retain the 15 per cent corporation income tax and repeal only the capital stock and excess profits taxes, instead of repealing all corporation taxes as proposed in the house bill. In addition it would superimpose a graduated tax on undistributed earnings, exempting the first 20 per cent on the amount retained. The house bill reaches a maximum of 42½ per cent of the total income if none is distributed.

Senator Byrd of Virginia, another of the Democrats opposed to the house bill, showed, in a letter to Secretary Morgenthau, that 11 of the largest corporations in the country would pay no taxes under the Roosevelt bill.

RESPONDING to a senate resolution, Rexford Tugwell made a report on the activities of the resettlement administration of which he is the head. He showed that it has 15,804 employees on the administration pay roll and has been allotted $275,549,944 to spend. Of this amount, the report stated, $98,347,005 has been spent and a total of $173,091,823 obligated, leaving $102,458,112 unincumbered.



R. G. Tugwell

Up to April 15, according to the report, the resettlement administration had taken options on 9,670,000 acres of land, of which options on 8,469,000 acres, costing $36,344,000, had become legal commitments. As of May 7, the report said, 59,521 persons, including 3,581 on the CCC pay roll, were employed in connection with the land acquisition program.

The report stated that a recent survey indicated that "the purchase of approximately 24,000,000 acres of land would be needed to block in and round out" the existing projects and to establish a minimum number of new projects.

Of 33 subsistence homestead projects, construction has been completed on 18, is in progress on 11 and final plans have been drafted for 4. The report lists four suburban housing projects, financed from a $31,000,000 allocation for this purpose. They are in Berwyn, Md., Bound Brook, N. J., Milwauwaukee, and Cincinnati.

On rural rehabilitation, the report says the RA has cared for more than 800,000 families. For its rehabilitation advances to individual "clients," the administration will expend $106,000,000 through June 30.

There were more than 71,000 workers employed on projects financed by the organization during April, the report states, adding that the peak is expected to be reached during the summer with 100,000 workers.

IF THE house concurs in senate action, the title of Harold L. Ickes will be changed from secretary of the interior to secretary of conservation. A bill making the change was passed by the senate at the instance of Senator Lewis of Illinois. Two years ago, when Mr. Ickes was at the height of his power, he wanted the title altered to "secretary of conservation and works" and hoped that many of the agencies of the Department of Agriculture would be transferred to his department. But Secretary Wallace objected strenuously, and lately so much has been taken out of Mr. Ickes' hands that Senator Lewis cut his bill to the one paragraph, making the change of title and leaving off "and works."

CHANCELLOR KURT SCHUSCHNIGG of Austria has long been at outs with the vice chancellor, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, and now he has got rid of that active young man and is practically the sole dictator of the country. This was accomplished by the resignation of the cabinet and its reconstruction immediately with Von Starhemberg left out. Schuschnigg is not only chancellor but also minister of defense and foreign minister.

Von Starhemberg had antagonized Schuschnigg by insisting on keeping up his own private army, the Heimwehr, and also by his friendliness toward Mussolini and his general Fascist sympathies.

MANUEL AZANA was advanced from the premiership to the presidency of Spain by almost unanimous vote of the 873 electors gathered in the Crystal palace at Madrid. He succeeds Niceto Alcala Zamora who was removed from office on a charge of malfeasance after the Leftist victory in the recent elections. Azana, fifty-six years old, is a lawyer, orator and playwright and is regarded as the most astute politician in Spain. To the notification committee he said. "Spain may rest assured that I will be loyal to the principles of democracy and that the welfare of the nation will be my constant concern."

HINDENBURG, the immense dirigible, carrying 107 persons, mail and freight, made the flight from Friedrichshafen to Lakehurst, N. J., in 61 hours and 57 minutes and was welcomed by thousands of Americans, including R. Walton Moore of the State department who brought the greetings of President Roosevelt. Three days later the airship started back to her new base at Frankfurt-on-Main. The dirigible was in command of Capt. Ernst Lehmann, but he received far less attention here than did Dr. Hugo Eckener, the veteran skipper of Zeppelins. Eckener, in bad with the Nazis at home, was permitted to be aboard the ship as an "adviser." He and Captain Lehmann went to Washington together, while the ship was being groomed for the return flight, to call on President Roosevelt and other officials and return their greetings.

On the return flight the Hindenburg traveled swiftly, reaching Frankfurt-on-Main 48 hours and 18 minutes after the departure from Lakehurst.

BECAUSE the League of Nations council would not immediately recognize Italy's annexation of Ethiopia and the creation of the new Roman empire, Premier Mussolini recalled his representatives from Geneva, and before long Italy may quit the league entirely. At present it is merely "not participating" in its activities. The council had adopted a new resolution virtually condemning again Italy's aggression in East Africa and then adjourned until June 15.

Previously Baron Pompeii Aloisi, chief of the Italian delegation, had walked out of a session of the council because Wolde Mariam, Ethiopian representative, was permitted to take a seat and present a plea from Emperor Haile Selassie.

PARK TRAMMELL, veteran United States senator from Florida and a staunch supporter of all New Deal measures, died in Washington of a cerebral hemorrhage which followed an attack of influenza. Though ill, he tried to remain on the senate floor long enough to vote for a proposal to include $12,000,000 in the War department appropriation bill for continuation of the Florida ship canal. This effort probably cost him his life.

SECRETARY ICKES' supporters were easily defeated by the Harry Hopkins forces in the house fight as to whether the Public Works administration should share in the handling of next year's relief funds. But it was understood the feud would be revived in the senate under the leadership of Senator Hayden of Arizona, Democrat and a member of the appropriations committee.

The house majority voted according to the wishes of the administration on the relief bill, which is a $2,364,229,712 measure carrying $1,425,000,000 to finance the Works Progress administration after July 1.

In addition to the relief appropriation, the bill carries $458,631,860 for the social security program, $39,900,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, $400,000 for continuing the communications commission's telephone inquiry, and various new and deficiency amounts for other agencies.

MUSTAPHA NAHAS PASHA, leader of the Wafd or Nationalist party in Egypt, has become premier and formed a new government in which he holds also the post of minister of the interior. Wasyf Ghali Pasha is his foreign minister and Gen. Ali Fahmy Pasha is minister of war and marine.

Premier Ali Pasha Maher and his cabinet resigned following the appointment of a regency to serve until young King Farouk reaches the age of eighteen.

Seek to Disrupt G. O. P.

Washington.—With the national convention of the Republicans only a week away, New Deal strategists are bending every effort toward a program designed to make a knockdown and drag-out fight of that session. It is not disclosing any secret to say that the New Dealers are using this weapon up to the hilt because disruption of the Republican party would make victory easy for Candidate Roosevelt.

Predictions in politics always are perilous. Governor Alf M. Landon of Kansas seems to be in the lead at this time for the Republican nomination, but there are many observers throughout the country who contend that the "Kansas Coolidge" cannot win, and that various other aspirants for the nomination, men whose hats are in the ring, likewise must be counted out. This is to say that a feeling is growing that a dark horse will be nominated.

From the strictly Washington viewpoint, which may be different than elsewhere in the country, astute political observers are convinced that there must be a swift change in sentiment to keep the nomination away from Governor Landon. Yet, it must be said that politics is fraught with just such things and so it is entirely possible that the Republican nominee may be someone other than the present apparent leader in the race.

Those who feel that Governor Landon will be the nominee claim he has played his cards well. But others insist that the Kansas governor made a bad mistake in allowing his name to be linked with the Hearst faction in California. Indeed, I have heard comment that this fact alone will defeat Governor Landon.

New Deal Strategy

It has been interesting to observe the maneuvers of the New Deal strategists with reference to the Landon boom. Some observers contend that the efforts being put forth from New Deal quarters in an attempt to discredit Governor Landon were being engineered because the New Deal fears Governor Landon as a Roosevelt opponent more than it fears some of the other candidates for the nomination. Frank R. Kent, the Washington commentator for the Democratic Baltimore Sun, asserted that the New Deal activity against Landon's nomination constituted "the best evidence of the increasing probability" of the Kansas governor's nomination. Mr. Kent did not say that which some other informed writers feel, namely, that the Landon candidacy would mean a bitter campaign on the part of the Roosevelt forces to re-elect the President. Nevertheless, it has been interesting to note the various ways in which Roosevelt spokesmen and Democratic publicity men have been trying to show the country that Governor Landon is not the man who should be nominated.

I have no quarrel with these efforts. It is the game of politics. Virtually anything goes. It is to be assumed that present Republican maneuvers will be concentrated in a few weeks on Mr. Roosevelt personally as the Democratic candidate. In fact, one hears expressions around Washington that for the first time in Mr. Roosevelt's political career, he is going to be directly under fire.

Just in this connection, one can recall that through most of the New Deal administration, criticism of New Deal policies and plans, almost without exception, was directed at Roosevelt appointees. The President himself has been exceptionally free from the type of personal attack that frequently characterizes political opposition. He has had absolutely none of the kind of criticism that occurred in the Hoover administration and was directed at Herbert Hoover, personally.

The Keynoters

While we are talking about the forthcoming quadrennial conventions, the two keynote speakers naturally enter into any discussion. Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky will do the keynoting for the Democrats at Philadelphia and Senator Frederick Steiwer of Oregon will deliver the main address to the Cleveland convention of the Republicans. Senator Barkley was the keynoter at the Chicago convention when Mr. Roosevelt was nominated by the Democrats four years ago and, although it is a subject not freely discussed, it is said in high places that Mr. Roosevelt wanted the same man to do the job again, believing the Kentuckian to be an omen of good luck.

The selection of Senator Steiwer was one of those things that can be said to be a surprise and yet not a surprise. He is, without doubt, a good man for the job. Yet in some quarters there is a conviction that Senator Steiwer was picked by the so-called "Old Guard" of eastern Republicans. Some observers still hold the belief that the selection of Senator Steiwer was not wholly pleasing to the Landon forces, but be that as it may, there has been no particular ill feeling created by it. If it represents a piece of strategy by the eastern Republicans who were dealing with their problem by remote control, they apparently have played into the hands of the more liberal wing of Republicans. It is being predicted rather freely that the Oregon senator's keynote speech will lean strongly to the liberal side but that it will stress sound economics.

The best advance information obtainable on Senator Barkley's plans is that he will devote the bulk of his time on the convention platform to a review of Roosevelt accomplishments in the belief that such a review will take his presentation out of the class of a "defense" speech. Those with whom I have talked concerning the Barkley speech believe he has adopted a smart political course; that he feels there is no need to defend anything that has been done and that the record itself is the thing upon which the Democratic party can make a plea for re-election of Mr. Roosevelt.

Having observed Senator Barkley in action in the senate for a number of years, I believe I am justified in saying that he is a square shooter and a fighter. In this respect, he and Senator Steiwer, the Republican keynoter, are much the same type of man and, therefore, if either convention gets off on a wrong foot, the fault will lie with the convention managers rather than with the proposals offered by the men who are supposed to lay before the delegates a rough outline of their respective party's campaign policies.

Fear 'Crack Down'

For many months Washington has heard the plaint of business leaders who wanted to fight socialistic schemes and unsound economic policies given birth by New Deal brain trusters but were afraid to do so because of "retaliation." Almost constantly, information has filtered into Washington to the effect that if a corporation undertook to oppose New Deal plans vigorously, there was danger that some agency of the government would "crack down" on them. Much of this information has been taken by Washington observers with a grain of salt but a different aspect has been placed on the situation lately.

It was in the senate that a New Deal Democrat, Senator Homer T. Bone of Washington, broke loose with statements that seemed to substantiate the fear voiced so frequently by business. Senator Bone charged that there was a veritable and "budding OGPU" organized within the government. The OGPU, as most persons realize, is the secret spy system of the Russian Soviet and I think no one in this country has a complete knowledge of its vicious character. So, when Senator Bone likened the espionage system in our government to the OGPU, he was making, to my mind, one of the most serious charges yet leveled at the Roosevelt administration.

Of course, Senator Bone was attacking this espionage system because of a feeling that it might be used to coerce members of congress and even executive or administrative officers of the government who were opposed to plans propagated by Presidential advisers. His thought obviously concerned the political phases of such a system, but the fact that he brought the matter to public attention serves, in a measure, certainly, to substantiate some of the claims that business interests have made.

I am unable, however, to reconcile Senator Bone's position respecting the OGPU which he charged was in operation within the government and his utter silence when the obnoxious senate lobby committee, headed by Senator Black, Democrat, of Alabama, engaged in the wholesale seizure of private telegrams. It will be recalled that I reported in these columns how Senator Black and agents of the Federal Communications commission went into the files of the Western Union Telegraph company and carried off literally thousands of private telegrams. I was convinced then and I repeat it now that the Black seizure was nothing more than an attempt to dig up dirt on anybody against whom they could find discrediting information. Yet, Senator Bone, by his silence, condoned that course only to denounce later the systems of so-called "inspectors" used by Secretary Ickes of the Department of the Interior and reputedly by several other agencies of the government. I can only hope that if Senator Bone's charges are true that the usual condition will result, namely, that there will be other spies to spy on these spies.

World's Greatest Terror
Another Mild Bad Man
How to Avoid Thought

President Sacasa of Nicaragua confirms officially the statement that a very poor woman on the "distant shore of Lake Nicaragua has given birth to seven babies." The mother, Mrs. Sinforosa Martinez, had a difficult time. The births stretched over three days—May 3, 4 and 5. The babies' names are, or were, Jose Jesus, Ramon del Carmen, Maria del Carmen, Socorro del Carmen, Maria de Jesus and Juana Ramona.

The seventh name was not telegraphed, for there was no seventh, as it was expected there would be. Five of the sextuplets are already dead. Only one, a girl, lives.

What would population of the earth be if such births were the rule and all lived?

At the opening of the Catholic press exhibition in Vatican City, Pope Pius, for the second time within two days, cautioned the world against communism, which he called "the great terror which threatens all the world."

For the comfort of those that live in dread of final Communistic world conquest, it may be said that thus far nothing opposed to human nature has ever succeeded.

Collecting queer things, stamps or tear jugs; playing bridge, working cross-word puzzles, playing solitaire, rushing to the far corners of the world to spend money—usually not earned; going to Africa to kill big game animals. Those are some substitutes for thinking and working constructively, the only occupation worthy of a human being.

Mrs. James C. Canipe of Clovis, New Mexico, as a girl was not able to finish high school, but that did not discourage her. She waited some years. Then she joined the senior high school class with her son and daughter-in-law, and will graduate with them this month, among the most brilliant scholars.

A syndicate is formed to seek the "buried gold bags of Alexander the Great," containing at least $300,000,000 in yellow wealth.

Alexander the Great's ghost might be surprised to hear about that. Alexander was too busy to collect gold, and not the kind of man to bury it in a hole.

Encouraged by her father, a sixteen-year-old high school girl walked onto the wing of a small plane, prepared for a first parachute jump at 1,500 feet. The pilot perceived that the parachute cord had been pulled prematurely; pulled her back into the cockpit in time to save her from death.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, a likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter to his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. On the way to Montauk, where he intended to disappear, he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall n ia condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000. Winslow takes Rogers' case. Barry gets a job on the Globe under his true name. The editor, Ernie Harwood, assigns him to cover the Kelly murder. Barry suspects the Filipino servant of Kelly. When Barry visits the Hambidges, the judge denies the accident he witnessed occurred near the scene of the Kelly murder, where such an accident had occurred. Patricia bids him, "Watch your step, Mr. Gilbert."

PAT knew of his imposture.

That was clear. And what else?

For hours after her car had left him at the door, Barry sat in the library of the big house where he had no right to be, thinking, thinking. And the more he thought, the more complete was his mystification.

Every word Pat had spoken, every intonation, was impressed on his mind. "And, Mr. Gilbert—" she had said. "You've got courage. And a grand sense of melodrama. I suppose you picked that up in Hollywood."

How did she know?"

Obviously, the crushed finger had not deceived her.

After all, that would have been simple. The vague recollection of his appearance in a picture; an old circular, with his photograph. Not without pride, Barry reflected that he had won mention in advertising before he left Hollywood. What did it matter, anyway? She knew. And she had advised him to watch his step. "You're being a little bit reckless, I think," she had warned.

Was that a warning—or a threat? And why should Pat threaten? The answer to that was apparent. "She doesn't want me to ask questions about her father. But why not? What is she trying to conceal?"

That, too, was easily answered.

Of course, there had been no taxi accident in Times square. It was absurd to suppose that two cabs had mounted the pavement and killed two women almost simultaneously. The Judge's accident had been at Sixteenth street. What was he doing down there—a hundred yards from Mike Kelly's—at two in the morning? The same morning Kelly was murdered? A few hours before the filing of a decision alleged to have been dictated by Kelly.

"None of my business!" Barry snapped at himself. "I'm not a detective." But why should Pat be afraid of investigation?

Why "afraid?" She was worried about her father's condition, and did not want him harassed needlessly. Under the circumstances, of course, she resented Barry's probings. "But, damn it," Barry exclaimed, "she began resenting before I even mentioned her father!"

He made an effort to marshal his facts.

"Three things are clear," he began. "Kelly was expecting someone when Jack left . . . Or was he? Winslow doubted that, too. Anyway, Kelly told Jack someone telephoned. And then Hambidge arrived at Sixteenth street. Hambidge denies that he did so. And then Hambidge's daughter warns me—"

He had begun pacing the floor.

Suppose the Judge had killed Kelly. What did that prove? "I'm assuming that Kelly compelled this decision," Barry reminded himself. "Well, if he did, why should it have been filed after the compulsion was removed? It was filed the next morning. That certainly indicates that the Judge knew nothing about Kelly's death."

Once more Barry heard the hall clock strike three.

"I'm arguing in circles," he thought. "And getting nowhere. That's where I've been getting all week. Gumming things up, too. Tipping off witnesses, and making a complete nuisance of myself. I said three things were clear, and they weren't, but two are. I've landed myself in a mess, and the sooner I get out of it the better for everybody.

"If I clear out, and let things take their course, I might come back, some day, when I've really made good—"

His hand still hurt the next morning, but the resolution to "clear out" remained fixed.

And he was still dreaming.

"Some day, when I've made good—"

Willetts interrupted.

He was serving breakfast, at the moment.

"I was talking to Evans, sir."

"Yes?"

"Telling him what you told me last night, sir—concerning Mrs. Rogers, and the Kelly murder. Evans thinks it's very significant, what you said about Kelly expecting somebody after Rogers left."

"He does, eh?"

"Yes, sir. And he thinks he can find who it was."

Barry opened his egg.

"He'd like to tell you his scheme, sir."

"It's no use," Barry observed, curtly. "I've decided to drop the whole business."

"Yes, sir."

Willetts went on serving, but there was disapproval in his manner. Barry felt it, as he had twice before.

"Any reason why I shouldn't drop it?"

"That's for you to say, sir."

"But you think there is a reason. All right; sit down and tell me about it."

"I couldn't, sir. My position won't permit of my sitting down in the presence of my employer. It isn't done, sir. And your position won't allow of you leaving a woman in the lurch, sir. If you don't mind my saying so, that isn't done, either."

In utter amazement, Barry merely stared at him.

"You see," Willetts continued, quite forgetting himself, "a gentlemen's got certain responsibilities. That's what makes him a gentleman. You said this lady's 'in trouble up to her neck.' It looks to me, as though you were bound to make good, no matter what's happened."

He paused, and then his own impetus carried him on.

"You said, 'I've been a loafer most of my life.' A loafer might 'drop the whole business.' There's no reason he shouldn't. But it looks to me as if a gentleman ought to carry on, sir."

Barry, the "bum," had stepped into a gentleman's shoes, and found that they had to be kept shining.

Now he had an income, and was "in luxury and papa's office." "I won't be there long," Barry thought, "if I defy Pat. Anyway, I'm a gentleman, for the moment, and a gentleman can't 'abandon ladies in distress.'"

Pat was a lady in distress, too, he reflected. "In trouble up to her neck." "The way I went on last night," he ruminated, "anybody'd have thought that I thought the Judge killed Mike. What nonsense. That harmless old chap. If there's any chance of his being involved, why then it's up to me to find who did the trick. I've got two men to get out of difficulties."

Evans found him ready for the "scheme."

"As I get it from Willetts," Evans said, "somebody telephoned Kelly that he was coming right over. What would you do after you'd done that, sir?"

"Well, what would I do?"

"You'd hop in a taxi."

"Probably."

"So we want to round up the taxi drivers that were in the neighborhood at that time. Luckily, there was an accident, Willetts tells me. My plan is to advertise—like as if we was the relations of the deceased lady. Fifty dollars reward for information leading to spotting the cab that deceased her."

"And then?"

"Then we third-degree everybody that answers the ad. 'Did you see the accident? How did you happen to be there? It might turn the trick."

It was arranged that the advertisement should instruct applicants to write to box something-or-other at the newspaper.

Evans was enjoying himself thoroughly.

"Reading the newspapers, sir, I ask myself a lot of questions about this here Kelly. Then Chink says he got home around eleven. Willetts says Mrs. Rogers says he left the Cocoanut bar around nine. Where did he go then? His chauffeur would know, wouldn't he? You'd be surprised how chauffeurs loosen up to each other."

"I get you."

"Simple, ain't it? We find out where Kelly garages. Then I drive you in every Sunday, and keep the car in the same place. And I sugar up to the guy that drove Kelly. It mightn't lead to nothing, but then again, sir, it might, sir."

All of Evans' suggestions were followed the next afternoon.

Harwood certainly had not overstated Peter's skill at cross-examination. Sitting opposite Peggy, the attorney led her gently into reminiscence, from which, again and again, he seized upon a word or a phrase as leading to possible material for the defense.

For the first time, the thing took on pattern. Casually, verifying every statement Jack had made to him. "Tell the story in your own way, Mrs. Rogers . . . Did your husband say anything about getting even when he left you? No. What time was that? What time did he return? Wasn't gone long, was he? Not really long enough for a violent quarrel?"

"And Why Do You Think It Might Have Been She?"

"I've told you," Peggy declared; "they were drinking together. And then the phone rang—"

"How do you know it rang?"

"Jack heard it. And he heard some one answer it."

"Some one."

"Jack isn't sure whether it was Kelly or the Filipino. They were both in the hall. Anyway, Kelly came back, and said he was expecting somebody."

"Did he say whom?"

"No."

"Did he say whether it was a man or a woman?"

"I don't think so." Peggy paused. "But it might've been a woman."

Peter nodded to Barry.

"Cherchez la femme."

"I got another idea," Peggy went on. "It might've been the platinum blonde."

"The what?"

"The platinum blonde, Violet Fane. She's one of the girls at the Cocoanut Bar."

"And why do you think it might have been she?"

"Well," Peggy said, "she knew Kelly. She'd just left him when he accused me of picking his pocket, and Morano'd been talking to her, just before that. She might've phoned Kelly to get me off."

Winslow made a note of this.

"I'll find out," he promised.

The interview lasted nearly two hours, and gave both of the visitors fresh confidence.

"They'll indict Jack," Winslow prophesied, as his callers were going. "Probably today. But don't let that worry you. A grand jury hears only one side. We'll do our talking at the trial."

"When will that be?"

"As soon as possible. We're ready now. They have no case. Just the Filipino's evidence that Jack was there. We admit that. But we deny either a motive or a quarrel."

"Yes," Peggy returned, a bit throatily. "He's got brains, and a heart."

The grand jury found a true bill against Jay Rogers that afternoon. And Barry was off on a quest of his own. "If that was a woman," he decided, "we needn't bother any more about the Judge. And if I can catch that Filipino napping—"

The "cagey Oriental" answered his ring.

Barry's last visit had been with Tim Laugherty. Charlie—and Mrs. Kelly, for that matter—had assumed that he was another detective. The Filipino was plainly startled.

"Nobody is home," he said conclusively.

"You're home, aren't you? And you're the fellow I want to ask a few questions."

"I don't know nothing," the butler insisted.

Charlie's putty face turned two shades lighter.

"I thought so," Barry said. "And, if you don't want to go straight to jail, you'd better tell me about it."

"You mean the lady that telephoned?"

"That's who I mean. Who was she?"

"I don't know."

"Didn't she give any name? Or leave any message?"

"No, sir."

"Came around here though, afterward, didn't she?"

"No, sir."

"Somebody did," Barry persisted; "after young Rogers went?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't let anyone in?"

"No, sir."

"Did Kelly let her in?"

"I don't know."

"But he knew she was coming?"

"I don't know."

"You're lying!" Barry exclaimed. "You told Kelly."

"No, sir," the butler replied, very positively. "When the lady phoned, Mr. Kelly—he wasn't home yet."

"What do you mean, he wasn't home—at midnight?"

"The lady didn't phone at midnight," Charlie said, obviously bewildered. "It was eight o'clock when the lady phoned."

"But you told him that?"

"Who did telephone around midnight?"

"I don't know. Mr. Kelly answered that time."

"But you were in the hall?"

"Yes, sir."

"Kelly was sore at you. Why?"

The Filipino went pale. Only for an instant, however. Then he smiled. "Mr. Kelly not sore," he said. "Him very jolly that night."

"All right," Barry observed. No "tipping our hand" this time. "All right, and thanks." His tone was that of a man completely satisfied.

Late that afternoon, Barry took Peg and the boy driving in the park.

Barry's heart had gone out to Peggy and to her boy. A chorine with the domestic virtues of a clergyman's wife—that's what Peg was. "I'd like to give Pat a squint at the under dog she thinks she despises so," he thought.

The next morning there were two responses to the advertisement suggested by Evans. Barry wrote asking both applicants for the reward to call at his rooms. On the way to The Globe, he dropped in on Tim Laugherty.

Tim had been assigned to a new case now, and regarded the Kelly matter as a closed incident. Barry's zeal amused him. "What're you talking about?" he inquired with mock seriousness.

Barry reported his interview with the Oriental.

Tim grinned. "We knew all about that ten days ago!"

He produced his records.

"There was a call at 8:16. That came from a hotel in the Forties—an actorine named Betty Barclay. Then there was three calls from Kelly's—at 8:22, 8:27 and 9:41. That first number's the house of a lawyer named Hood. Next comes the Yale club. And the third a flat in Riverside drive."

"Whose?"

"I don't know."

"What about the call that came in while Rogers was there?"

"Boloney."

"You mean there wasn't any such call?"

"Not on my records. Of course, it might've been sent from a nickel-in-the-slot booth. You can't trace them things. Listen, pal, you're on a wild-goose chase. This Rogers lad done it."

Where Chocolates Grow

Tea is obtained from a plant which, if allowed to grow, would make a tree 25 to 30 feet tall. It is kept down to a few feet in height, however, so that the leaves can be gathered easily. The plants are raised from seed, and the gathering of the leaves, which, when dried, are our tea, begins when the plants are four to five years old. Coffee comes from a shrub growing about ten feet high. Berries form on the tree in clusters and these are gathered when they are a dark brownish color. Inside the berries are seeds which, when ground, are our coffee. Cocoa is produced by trees growing anything up to 40 feet tall. It bears long pods, inside which are a number of seeds. It is these seeds which give us our cocoa — and chocolates! — Pearson's Weekly.

Crops Classified by Effect on Soil

National Farm Program Lists Them All in Three Groups.

Crops are classified in three ways to determine bases and rates of payment under the national soil conservation program. These are soil-depleting, soil-conserving, and soil-building crops.

Classified as soil-depleting are the crops that take plant food out of the soil or leave the land exposed to severe erosion. The soil-conserving crops do not necessarily add fertility to the land, but hold the soil in place and help to maintain plant food in the soil. The soil-building crops are those which, when used in certain ways as when plowed under as green manure, definitely add to the fertility of the soil.

Furthermore, says the United States Department of Agriculture, two classes of payments are provided. The first is called a soil conserving or diversion payment and is made for substituting soil-conserving and soil-building crops on soil-depleting "base" acres. The maximum acreage on which this payment is made is 15 per cent of the soil-depleting base acreage on a farm in New York state. The rate of payment for the entire country is $10 an acre, but varies according to the productivity of the land. It may be slightly larger or slightly less in parts of New York state.

The second type of payment is called a soil-building one and is made for planting soil-building crops on land which has produced at least one harvested crop, other than wild hay, since January 1, 1930, or for approved soil-building practices on crop land or pasture. These payments will be made at rates and for practices recommended by the state agricultural conservation committee and approved by the secretary of agriculture.

Use of the Various Manures on the Garden

There is no need for the average farmer to buy commercial fertilizers for his vegetable garden because the best general vegetable crop fertilizer is barnyard manure. And above all places, the vegetable garden, considering its value to the farm family, is where it should be applied first.

Ten to twenty loads of manure to the acre each year are not too much. Fresh manure immediately before planting potatoes encourages potato scab, as does lime.

Sheep and poultry manures are much more concentrated than cow or horse manure, and should be used in much smaller quantities. Poultry manure, if entirely free from litter, should be used sparingly because it is apt to burn the plants. Poultry manure is valuable for garden purposes, but a ton per acre broadcast would be equal in plant food content to five or six tons of horse manure which contained litter. Sheep manure, free from litter, is not as rich as poultry manure, but contains more plant food than horse manure. Cow manure is available for many farm gardens and is of high value but contains more water and less plant food than any of the other animal manures.

Where the space devoted to the garden is not limited, green manures may be substituted in part. One-fourth or more of the land may be planted to cowpeas or soybeans each year and turned under in the fall. In smaller gardens the cowpeas or soybeans may be sown following the early vegetables.—Missouri Farmer.

Vegetable Storage

Certain vegetables keep longest at certain temperatures. The following list, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune, gives the recommended temperature and maximum storage period: Asparagus, 32 degrees, one week; carrots, 32-40 degrees, six months; cauliflower, 32 degrees, 30 to 40 days; celery, 32 degrees, 3 to 4 weeks; squash, 40 degrees, 5 months, and green tomatoes, 50-60 degrees, 1 month.

Sows on good pasture need perhaps half as much other feed, give more milk and the pigs grow faster than when the sows and their litters are in dry lot. This is where a good rye pasture is useful. It saves the alfalfa or clover from destruction, too

PATTERN NO. 1875-B

You know yourself that half the enjoyment of any sport is spoiled if you aren't correctly dressed, and really there's no excuse for not being equipped for any active sport when a model such as illustrated is so easy and inexpensive to make.

The divided skirt is suitable for golf, tennis, bicycling, riding and hiking. It assures plenty of room and comfort, buttons on the side and supports the most youthful blouse. Note the sports pocket, Peter Pan collar, raglan sleeve and dainty feminine bow.

Instead of the divided skirt, you may have shorts if you prefer, for the pattern is perforated at just the proper length. Notice the small sketch.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1875-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4¼ yards of 35 inch fabric. For shorts only, 3½ yards is required. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

In Idleness

"IN IDLENESS alone is there perpetual despair," declared Carlyle, who knew well what depression and melancholy were, but met them by hard work. The more intensely we throw ourselves into each day's labors, the more we escape from discouragement and temptation. Work is the sheet anchor of the soul, and the higher work becomes, the higher its satisfaction. Work even for ourselves helps us out of depression; work for others brings joys; work for God lifts us into the most enduring happiness of all.

KILLING COAL BILL IS BENEFIT TO ALABAMA, IS VIEW

In a dispatch from Washington to the Birmingham News, Russell Kent, staff correspondent, quotes Congressman George Huddleston as expressing the view that invalidation of the Guffey Coal Act is "the biggest break Jefferson County has had in a generation."

Continuation of the act would have meant distress to thousands of Alabama miners by forcing idleness through confining the production of that field to local needs only, Congressman Huddleston said.

Congressman Huddleston emphasized in his interview that the decision of the high court does not affect in any way the contract between the United Mine Workers of America and the Alabama coal operators which fixes the wage scale.

When this bill passed Congress last Fall, Congressman Huddleston joined Congressman Carmichael, Hill and Hobbs, of the Alabama delegation, in voting against it. Congressman Starnes, Steagall and Boykin voted for the bill. Congressmen Bankhead and Oliver were absent due to illness when the house voted August 19 and passed the bill, 194 to 168.

"The decision of the Supreme Court striking down the Guffey coal act, is a great boon to Alabama and its coal industry," Congressman Huddleston said Monday. "The purpose of this measure was to eliminate the lean coal fields and high-cost mines, so as to concentrate the coal mining industry into the rich central fields."

THE ROAD TO CALERA

Progress of work on the highway from Montevallo to Calera continues. The new six-inch gravel surface will be completed over the whole distance in a few days.

Indications are that everything will be ready for the last hard surface to be applied in a few weeks.

Curves on the road are being elevated on the outside, a feature that makes for safety of highways.

The steam shovel has removed the top of the big hill just out of Montevallo, considerably lowering the grade at that point.

In the same section portions of the high banks have been removed, giving a better view for drivers approaching the curves.

In a few days traffic into Montevallo over the Calera road will be passing over the new bridge across the railroad and Shoal Creek.

At last it appears that Montevallo is soon to have that which we have wanted so long, a paved road to Calera and one entrance into our city that will be safe, convenient, beautiful and impressive.

CLERK UNION HELD MEETING TUESDAY NIGHT

The regular business meeting of the Montevallo Retail Clerks Local was held Tuesday night.

In addition to the routine business of the meeting, Mr. E. Z. Yeager of the Typographical Union, Birmingham, and Mrs. Will Dinsmore, of Birmingham, were visitors and made interesting talks.

Law Governing The Speed Of Trucks

The act of the present Legislature amending a law enacted in 1927 so as to eliminate the provision fixing the speed limit of automobiles on Alabama's highways at 45 miles an hour, does not alter or change in any way the provisions of an act of 1932 governing the speed of trucks, semi-trailers, trailers and motor vehicles used primarily for the transportation of property. Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael has ruled in an opinion answering an inquiry on the subject from Chief Walter K. McAdory of the State Highway Patrol.

The Attorney General holds, in other words, that elimination of the 45 miles an hour speed limit provision, and the substitution of the phrase "reasonable rate of speed" in the amendatory law passed by the present Legislature does not apply to the speed of trucks, semi-trailers and trailers and motor vehicles used primarily for the transportation of property. It is his ruling that the speed of these vehicles is governed by the 1932 act, and is a thing separate and apart from the speed of other types of motor vehicles that use the public highways.

Instructions For Side Dressing Cotton and Corn

To the Farmers of Shelby County:

Cotton and corn fertilized with such grades of fertilizers as 3-8-5, 3-10-3, 4-8-4, 4-10-4, should be side-dressed with either nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime at first cultivation after chopping to bring the amount of nitrogen up to the equivalent of 6 per cent or the amount of nitrogen contained in a 6-8-4.

If such grades as 3-8-5, 3-10-3, 4-8-4, 4-10-4 are not side-dressed a good part of the phosphoric acid and potash is wasted. In experiments conducted by the Alabama Experiment Station 6 per cent nitrogen made 38 pounds more seed cotton per acre than 3 per cent nitrogen. This means that side-dressing the grades of fertilizers mentioned above will give an additional yield of cotton at a very low cost.

Q. How much side-dressing shuld be applied where 3-8-5 or 3-10-3 was applied under the cotton?

A. These grades of fertilizers contain only half the nitrogen needed by cotton. Therefore, if 400 pounds per acre of either of these grades is used apply at least 75 pounds per acre of either nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime at first cultivation after chopping. That is for each 100 pounds of 3-8-5 or 3-10-3 applied, about 20 pounds of nitrate is needed as a side-dressing.

Q. How much side-dressing is needed for cotton fertilized with 4-8-4 or 4-10-4?

A. If 400 pounds per acre of either 4-8-4 or 4-10-4 is applied before planting, aply at least 50 pounds of nitrate as side-dressing. That is, for each 100 pounds of these grades used apply 12 to 15 pounds side-dressing.

Q. Should cotton fertilized with 6-8-4 be side-dressed?

A. Cotton fertilized with 6-8-4 should not be side-dressed.

Q. When should side-dressing be applied?

A. At first cultivation after chopping (dirting). Late applications will do some good but the greatest return for the money spent for nitrates comes from applying it immediately after chopping the cotton.

Q. When should corn be side-dressed?

A. Apply nitrate to corn about 40 days after planting if corn is planted at normal corn planting time.

If corn is planted a month after the usual planting date the side-dressing should be applied not later than 30 to 35 days after the planting.

In 50 crops at 8 places in experiments conducted by the Alabama Experiment Station 75 lbs. of nitrate increased the corn yield 6 to 7 bushels; 150 pounds of nitrate increased the yield 13 bushels; 225 pounds increased the yield 18 bushels.

Q. Should corn following a good growth of winter legumes be side-dressed?

A. Corn following a good growth of winter legumes needs no additional fertilization of any kind.

Lower the cost of producing your crops by fertilizing propertly.—A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

Joint Session of Baptists Is Love Feast

St. Louis, May 16.—No indications the two-day joint meeting of the Southern and Northern Baptists here Monday and Tuesday would be other than a love feast have appeared in the three days the Southern Baptist convention has been in session.

Leaders interviewed expressed doubt a necessary spiritual and doctrinal unity necessary for an organic union could be obtained although all emphasized they bore no ill will to other denominations. As the Rev. John A. Hull, of New Orleans expressed it:

"We cannot have union without unity. There can be no unity among imperfect creatures such as we all are. The right of free thinking precludes submission to one mind."

Said the Rev. Arthur J. Barton, Wilmington, N. C.:

"Baptists are not a 'Church' but a denomination of many autonomous, independent, self-governing churches. No general Baptist body such as the Southern Baptist convention, has any authority to say to these churches that they should unite with anybody."

And a former convention president, the Rev. M. E. Dodd, of Shreveport, La., said "physical union without spiritual unity would be a farce, a fake and a futility." Most of the Northern Baptist delegates were expected to arrive this week end for the fellowship session and for their own convention following it.

New Orleans was chosen today for the 1937 Southern Baptist meetings, May 13 to 16. The day was given over largely to reports of various phases of the denomination work and to business matters.

A second attempt to revive the matter of a proposed social and economic survey by the denomination, which was rejected the opening day of the session, failed.

William D. Upshaw, of Atlanta, Ga., former prohibition candidate for president and a former member of Congress, introduced a resolution asking in the interest of fair play and harmony that proponents and opponents of the project be allowed ample time to present their views. It was quickly referred to the resolutions committee and the concensus was it never would be reported out.

WILLIE G. HUDSON RECITAL

Miss Willie Glea Hudson, a senior in the School of Music at Alabama College, presented a piano recital in Calkins Hall May fifteenth at eight o'clock. She won first place in composition and third place in piano at the recent State Music Contest in Montgomery.

She is a pupil of M. Ziolkowski, professor of music, who will play the orchestral parts to the Concerto.

Her program was as follows: Fanasia in C Minor by Bach; Conata in B Minor, Chopin; Intermezzo E Minor, Brahms; Gollowog's Cake Walk, Debussy and Concerto C. Minor, Reineche.

TO ALL AUBURN ALUMNI

A letter has been received from Dr. L. N. Duncan, President of Alabama Polytechnic Institute urging all Auburn alumni to be present at a meeting at Langdon Hall, May 25 from 12 to 1 o'clock.

The theme of the discussion will be the financial situation confronting the alma mater, and will be led by Mr. Morris Block, President of Alumni Association.

After the business session a barbecue lunch will be served.

It is hoped that a large number of Auburn Alumni from Shelby County will be present.—Mary Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent.

Force Doubled To Speed Bonus Work

Washington. — The treasury department today began working double shifts in its division handling preparations for payment of the $1,924,000,000 soldiers bonus.

Day workers were directed to come to their offices at 8:30 a.m. instead of 9, and a night shift was installed to begin operations Monday afternoon.

Officials hoped by this reinforcement of the present setup, to approach completion of the tremendous job ahead by June 15, the schedule date for payment to begin.

Plain arithmetic was still against the hard-working clerks and stenographers, however. If the present output of 10,000 applications daily is doubled because of the double shift in the checking room, this would permit the handling of less than 250,000 applications between now and June 15. Up to the present less than 200,000 have been sped on their way toward the final envelope which will enclose bonus bonds and checks.

Adding these two figures together, a total of less than 500,000 is obtained—and there are 3,500,000 applications to handle in all.

Daily, the present forces are being increased. However, officials have admitted, since International Service published figures of the work two weeks ago, that there might be some delay, but since that time have been building up the working forces, and are still doing it. In order to be ready to mail out all the bonus checks and bonds on the scheduled date, however, the present speed would hav to be more than tripled. With only limited space available, this seemed a difficult task.

LEGION MEETING TONIGHT

A card has been issued for a meeting of Hendrick-Hudson Post No. 96, of the American Legion to be held at the Legion Hut in Montevallo, tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 o'clock. All veterans and members are earnestly urged to be present, as important business coming before the meeting is to be transacted.

PROCUREMENT DIVISION, Public Works Branch, Washington, D. C., May 12, 1936.—Sealed proposals in duplicate will be publicly opened in this office at 1 P.M., June 10, 1936, for furnishing all labor and materials and performing all work for construction of the U. S. P. O. at Montevallo, Ala. Attention is directed to the special conditions of bidding set forth in the specification. Upon application, one set of drawings and specifications will be supplied free to each general contractor interested in submitting a proposal. The above drawings and specifications MUST be returned to this office. Contractors requiring additional sets may obtain them by purchase from this office at a cost of $5 per set, which will not be returned. Checks offered as payment for drawings and specifications must be made payable to the order of the Treasurer, U. S. Drawings and specifications will not be furnished to contractors who have consistently failed to submit proposals. One set upon request, and when considered in the interests of the Government, will be furnished builders' exchanges, chambers of commerce or other organizations who will guarantee to make them available for any subcontractor or material firm interested, and to quantity surveyors, but this privilege will be withdrawn if the sets are not returned after they have accomplished their purpose. W. E. Reynolds, Assistant Director of Procurement, Public Works Branch.

Miss Richardson To Speak Here In June

Mrs. Eudora Richardson, national field representative for the National Federation of Business Women's Clubs is to make the main address at the third annual Career Conference for high school girls of the State, held by Alabama College July 8, 9 and 10. This announcement was made Saturday by Dr. Hallie Farmer, professor of History and chairman of the Student Career Conference committee.

More than 250 students have been recommended by high school principals with whom the committee has cmomunicated. Official attendance is limited to the upper 25 per cent in scholarship of the graduating classes.

Outstanding women in a variety of fields come to the campus each summer to conduct the round table discussions. The first of these conferences was led by Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations, North Carolina; the second by Miss Helen M. Voorhees, of Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Massachusetts.

This year Alabama College expanded its guidance program, having Miss Shirley C. Titus, of the Vanderbilt University School of Nursing on the campus on March 11 and 12 to lead a special career meeting for students at the college.

"Under Two Flags" At Strand Thursday

Four great stars, a cast of ten thousand, and a story that flames with the intensity of Sahara's burning sands, bring one of the mightiest spectacle-dramas of motion picture history to the screen in 20th Century's "Under Two Flags" at the Strand Theatre Thursday and Friday of this week.

Topping the star-studded story of flaming love and smoldering rebellion are Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert, Victor McLaglen, and Rosalind Russell, who lead a supporting cast of forty character stars and numberless extras.

The setting of the story is sunbaked post of empire on the edge of the Sahara. McLaglen is the hard-biten commander of a battalion of Legionnaires and his outstanding soldier is Ronald Colman.

MacLaglen is the slave of the tantalizing "Cigarette", played by Claudette Colbert. When he discovers that she has given her heart to Colman, he comes to hate his subordinate.

Colman, however, falls madly in love with the beautiful Rosalind Russell. Sent to a fortress in the heart of Arab territory, McLaglen persists in putting Colman in posts of danger, hoping that his death will remove the obstacle between himself and Miss Colbert. He recants of his deed, and goes to Colman's rescue.

Just as the entire force seems doomed, Miss Colbert leads reenforcements of legionnaires to their rescue, giving her life to send the man she loves back to another woman.

The supporting cast is filled with such superlative performers as Gregory Ratoff, Nigel Bruce, C. Henry Gordon, Herbert Mundin, and J. Edgar Bromberg, star of the New York stage making his film debut. Personally produced by Darryl F. Zanuck "Under Two Flags" was directed by Frank Lloyd.

TO REPRESENT Y. W. C. A.

Seven students will represent Alabama College at the annual Southern Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. Conference at Blue Ridge, North Carolina, June 9-19. They are Misses Ruth Ray Wilson, Elizabeth Donald, Dorothy Alison, Mary Louise Hall, Frances Lee, Sarah Kyser and Mary Wanda Seibert.

The program includes discussions, lectures, devotional services and entertainments. This is the largest group to be sent by the college. New officers of the Y. W. C. A. are: Misses Brownie Lollar, president; Elizabeth Donald, vice-president; Elizabeth Ann Humphrey, secretary; Sophia Murawiec, treasurer.

MABEL WHITESIDE SPOKE

Miss Mabel Whiteside, dean of the Theological Department of Normal Training School for Christian Workers in Isaiah, Japan, talked at Alabama College Vesper Services Sunday afternoon, May 3.

At the close of the program Miss Whiteside dressed two of the college girls in the Japanese fashions, presenting a well-dressed lady of the streets in a formal silk kimona and a school girl in a cotton kimono and pleated cotton skirt.

Mother's side of Mother's Day was presented by Mrs. Mary M. McCoy, Mrs. Louise Coleman, Mrs. J. K. Harris and Mrs. Nora Reynolds with the student response from Miss Sarah Kyser at the service on May 10. The program also included special organ and violin music.

The seniors will be honored at Vesper Service May 24.

Ox Gets "Cussing" Man Regains Voice

Dothan, Ala.—A bull-headed ox needed "a cussin," and therein lies the story of how Alto Burch's lost voice was restored.

More than a year ago his voice vanished, almost overnight, leaving Burch able to speak only in a whisper. No treatment availed and even consultation with a New Orleans specialist failed.

This account was related by his son, R. R. Burch, who drives a Dothan motor route.

Last week, young Burch said, his father was plowing a team of oxen. The sun was beating down. One ox was stubborn—enough to anger most any man. Burch involuntarily posed his mouth for a shout. Who wouldn't?

Stunned, unbelieving, the plowman realized the stentorian bellow that rang forth was his.

His voice was as powerful as ever. Quickly he sped to the house to tell his wife. Mrs. Burch, in turn, wrote her son. The Burches live near Florala.

ELIZABETH KIRKSEY RECTAL

Miss Elizabeth Kirksey, Aliceville, will be presented in a piano recital in Calkins Hall at Alabama College Friday evening. Her program is as follows:

1. Allemande ----------
   Sarabande
   Gavotte and Musette } _D'Albert
   Gigue -------------
2. Beethoven's Sonata
3. Reflections de leau ---- Debussy
   Rhapsody ----------- Vohnyanyi

The 1936 Ford V-8's were built with a bow to youth. Modern, with sloping lines, they offer a challenge to the youth to jump in and go. A speedy pick-up, a powerful motor, a "custom" appearance make the Ford V-8 the ideal car for the "young" driver whether in year or in spirit.

Mr. Stanley White made a business trip to Birmingham Tuesday.

COW FOR SALE—I have 3 cows with young calves. Will sell one of them at a reasonable price. Come and see them.—John Huff, Brierfield. 5-7-3tpd.

More than a million owners made the Ford V-8 the all- American car for 1935. If 50,000 Frenchmen could not be wrong neither can more than a million V-8 motorists. The 1935 sales year of the Ford V-8 is a fine tribute to a fine car.

Alabama's Eighth Rodeo In August To Be Elaborate

Mobile, Ala., May 19.—Under the guidance of an executive committee of five members, preparations have been started for Alabama's eighth annual deep sea fishing rodeo on a broader and more elaborate scale than at any time in the past.

To this committee L. G. Adams, president of the rodeo association since its organization in 1929, bequeathed the responsibility for the future success of this great fishing contest shortly before death claimed him in April.

Thus inspired by the last words of the man who gave unstintedly of his time and efforts to bring international prominence to the Alabama rodeo within the short span of eight years, this committee has vowed to make the 1936 rodeo the greatest in the history of the state.

After consulting the Mobile weather bureau, the Bar Pilot's Association and the fisherman's almanac, the executives of the rodeo association selected August 17, 18 and 19 as the dates for the tourney. It was the concensus of all parties consulted that the dark nights and rising tides in the early morning hours on these dates portended the best luck for the fisherman.

Tarpon-busting is the big sport of the rodeo, although rodeo anglers invariably are rewarded with large catches of smaller game fish. These include Spanish mackerel, king mackerel, red fish, cavalla, ling, black fish, dolphin, bonita, blue fish, speckled trout and flounders.

Handsome prizes, consisting of trophies and expensive fishing tackle items, are awarded for the largest catches. The fishing equipment is contributed by sporting goods houses and leading manufacturers of fish tackle who see in the rodeo a wholesome influence for this fine sport. A "champion" fisherman's trophy and national and state attendance cups are awarded by the rodeo association.

The association is anticipating a registration this summer that will surpass the record attendance of 550 at the 1935 rodeo and shortly will begin the distribution of the new Alabama Deep Sea Rodeo News. The annual drive for rodeo memberships will begin July 1.

News of State Game and Fish Conservation

Rapidly approaching the halfway mark in his work of organizing county conservation councils in Alabama, Thomas A. Ford, director of county conservation planning for the state game department, has announced his meeting schedule for the remainder of May.

The schedule follows:

Tuskegee, Macon County, May 18; LaFayette, Chambers County, May 19; Alexander City, Tallapoosa County, May 20; Clayton, Barbour County, May 21; Union Springs, Bullock County, May 22. Hayneville, Lowndes County, on May 25; Andalusia, Covington County, May 26; Evergreen, Conecuh County, May 27; Brewton, Escambia County, May 28, and Bay Minette, Baldwin County, May 29. The dates for the last week in the month are tentative.

Thanksgiving Holidays Abolished By Students

The traditional Thanksgiving holidays were abolished by referendum of the student body at Alabama College in favor of a nine-day spring vacation. Thanksgiving day will be a holiday, but classes will be renewed the following morning.

Dr. Harman announced that special programs will be planned on Thanksgiving Day for students and faculty. A religious service, a special Thanksgiving dinner, and a social function are included in the plans.

Drouth Retards Farm Activities

ARMY WORMS REPORTED AS DAMAGING NORTH ALABAMA CROPS

Dry weather continued to hamper Alabama farming operations this week. Army worms appeared in North Alabama corn and Irish potato fields.

State Extension Service surveys revealed crop stands not up to normal and in some sections cotton had been planted a third time with stands still spotty.

Wet and cold weather delayed planting past the scheduled start and then continued hot sunshine and cloudless days combined in wide sections to "bake" the ground before turning and planting could be completed.

Local showers last week relieved dry conditions in some counties, but on the whole the state was suffering for lack of rain.

W. L. Richardson, assistant agricultural agent in Lawrence County, reported army worms attacking young corn and Irish potatoes as well as cotton. Immediately J. M. Robinson, extension entomologist, issued a bulletin advising poisoning by bran mash.

Robinson's formula calls for a mixture of wheat bran, Paris green, or calcium arsenate, water, molasses and enough orange or lemon juice to flavor it

J. C. Garrett, state and federal statistician at Montgomery, reported during the week that the condition of major crops, other than cotton, was below normal and in many instances below the 1923-32 average.

Garrett reported the state's peach crop only 57 per cent of normal May 1 with an indicated yield of 759,000 bushels, compared with 825,000 for 1935 and a five-year average of 933,000 bushels.

Winter wheat was 80 per cent of normal, compared with 78 a year ago and a yield of 66,000 bushels indicated. Hay was only 73 and potatoes 79.

The Department of Agriculture reported a continued increase in fertilizer sales indicated by inspection tags. The seasonal total was registered at 451,350 tons, compared with 411,500 at the same period in 1935.

Baldwin County has shipped $1,500,000 worth of Irish potatoes from 10,000 acres and Escambia County $300,000 to $400,000 worth from 2,000 acres.

Agriculture Commissioner R. J. Goode issued a warning against misbranded seeds and reported condemnation of eight 70-pound bags of carrot seeds found to contain dodder seed.

College Glee Club In Varied Program

The Alabama College Glee Club presented a program in Palmer Hall Saturday evening before a large audience of students, faculty members and residents of the community. It was a varied performance of six numbers.

Miss Mary Newman Graves, soprano, was featured in a group of selections. Misses Isabel Henderson, Frances Ribble, Lila Williams, Dorothy Alison, Nina Culley and Louise Vance had parts in the dances given.

The club offered The Lotus Flower; Lullaby, a Scotch Folkson, and How Merrily We Live.

Miss Ina Strom and Mrs. Josephine Waller were heard in an organ-piano duet. Selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Mikado" closed the program. Its cast included Misses Aidalu Butenschon, Eleanor Watson, Lois Thompson, Virginia James, Katherine Porter and Frances Lee.

Indians Are Threat, but Lajoie's Jinx Seems Sure to Win

UNLESS the more panicky citizens really have their hearts set upon it, there is no imperative need for giving the country back to the Indians. The most dangerous tribe to scour these parts in recent years will settle for considerably less. Like Hiawatha and those other naively noble red men of the past, all they want off the world that for so long has misunderstood and mistreated them is one little strip of bright-colored cloth.

Chief Steve O'Neill will tell you that. It is his well-considered opinion that even the Oklahoma oil tribes would be pikers by comparison if his Indians ever return to Cleveland with an American League pennant.

It is a question though whether the Tribe can do it. There are reasons for doubt. One of them is the jinx which first arrived in the Forest City along with Larry Lajoie.

This broad-shouldered Rhode Islander, who hopped off the driver's seat of a horse-drawn cab to sign his first contract on the back of an envelope, was one of the greatest of all hitters and second baseman. During all save perhaps one or two of his 15 seasons of active service he was on teams which, man for man, were proclaimed the best in the league. Yet, even though Billy Hamilton, Elmer Flick and Ed Delehanty performed by his side on one of the best of all Philadelphia teams, that club could never finish better than second.

It was the same when he came to Cleveland. He led the league in hitting, drew a tidy salary as player and manager and put the club on a paying basis. But not even such stars as Bill Bradley, Flick and Terry Turner could help him overcome his hard luck.

Year after year the Naps, so called in honor of Lajoie, whose first name was Napoleon, would be labeled as sure winners. Perhaps they would even get past mid-season that way. Then the hoodoo would start acting up.

O'Neill Has the Tribe Hustling at Fast Pace

There would be an injury. Then another. No matter if he did carry a full team of substitutes, something always was happening. Even in 1908 when they turned upon their misfortunes and made a September rally almost as pulse strumming as that of the Cubs last fall, it was no use. With only a week or so to go Fate again took hold of the club and played is as though it was an accordion.

So it was that a man who was a king of the game retired at last after never having been on a pennant winner. So also it seems that a hoodoo has continued upon the town save for that one year of 1920 when another determined king named Tris Speaker managed to make it yield. O'Neill, descendant of kings who ruled Ireland with never a thought that one day their namesake might have to go to work as chief of a Tribe, may also be the man to do it. It is axiomatic in baseball that it is almost impossible for a team to look good when it is not hitting. Yet they have not appeared at all bad.

O'Neill.

Those pale-faced Indians of a new dispensation—such as Joe Vosmik, Bill Knickerbocker and Hal Trosky—hustle as they did not hustle in recent seasons.

The flaming tempered Johnny Allen seems once more the pitcher he was when the Yankees were chanting their praises of him as a winning teammate. Willis Hudlin, who has been tossing his double-play ball ever since he joined the Indians in 1926, is another real hurler.

Yet—even as was remarked at the start — there are reasons for doubt. Cleveland is one of the better and more excitable baseball towns and it is high time it is given another opportunity for a dance of triumph. But I greatly suspect that this is not the band of Indians to bring back the bunting in the fall.

After all this is springtime and an old and successful jinx is much like a veteran pitcher. It never gets in its best licks until the sun really starts bearing down.

IT PROBABLY is just as well that the Congressional Record keeps the more pious fretters about the nation's naughtiness so busy that they have no time for the sports pages. Otherwise there might be considerable trouble because of the immoral manner in which certain athletes sought to improve their team's chances of winning recently.

I refer to doings in Cleveland and Philadelphia. In one of these towns Catcher Earl Grace twice brushed his mitt against the bat while a Brooklyn player was up there swinging. In the other forthright and energetic Johny Allen kicked the ball out of Ralston Hemsley's hands on a close play at home plate. Since each of these offenses against the baseball law occurs almost daily, though, I do not mention them in any highly moral dudgeon of my own.

Ever since David found a way to beat the weight in his well-publicized contest with Goliath the rules of sport have been subjected to considerable monkey business. No doubt this partly has been due to the fact that healthy young men (and women) engaged in rough and vigorous competition have no time to be bothered with the strict letter of some code. No doubt, there also have been other reasons. I make no comment now. Instead, I recite some incidents from the crowded lives of those who compete for gold, for glory or for both.

There was, for instance, the old Oriole device of persuading runners to linger at third base. John McGraw, probably the best mind ever produced by baseball, was the originator of that one. He merely grabbed the runner by the belt and held him while the umpire's attention was elsewhere.

There are also certain episodes which may be mentioned in connection with purely amateur sports affairs, lest it be considered that too much stress is given here to the carryings-on of the pros.

When Don Meade imitated a regiment of Cossacks, while winning a Kentucky Derby several seasons ago, there were numerous high-class folks who deeply deplored such tactics. It was a highly enlightening sight but scarcely as entertaining as a hunts meeting once held in an Eastern state. One of the events was for lady riders and it was evident from the start that only two of the gals had a chance. The two took their duties seriously. For the first furlong they tried to ride one another onto the rail. The next quarter was enlivened by each miss endeavoring to retard the speed of her opponent's horse by tugging at the saddle.

Don Meade

After that they really got down to business. They finished the race whipping. But, for once, both horses got a break. The two sportswomen were using the whips on one another.

Golf and Tennis Also Had Their Moments

Golf also had its moments. Once—this is for the greater education of those who squawk that the United States has exclusive privileges along such lines—an American went to England to compete in a tournament. His short game was tops but he was not a long driver. The Britain he opposed in the final could hit them a mile. For the greater glory of the homeland the tournament committee moved the tees a mere 20 yards or so farther away from the greens.

That being almost as good as the time—only three or four seasons removed from the present—when the hospitable French soaked their tennis courts so that their soft-game players would not be inconvenienced against the hard-hitting Americans.

Not in the Box Score:

John Titus, the last of the mustachioed big-time ball players previous to the appearance of Frenchy Bordagaray, always chewed a toothpick while batting . . . Roy Thomas, another famous Philly outfielder, used to don a pair of fingerless kid gloves when he reached first base. That was the sign that he was preparing to steal second and did not wish to get his hands dirty while sliding . . . Betting commissioners say that Sonny Workman lost $6,900 betting on his own mounts last fall.

Phil Scott, who was bowled over more often than Jack Doyle, but who got far more money for it, now wants to manage the Irish tenor. Claims that he can make him heavyweight champion in two years . . . When he was a youngster Tommy Loughran's great admiration was for the defensive skill of Jack Johnson. The two master boxers met for the first time at a Philadelphia ringside recently and gabbed far on into the night about the fistic art . . . Milton Bakst, the very able newspaper salesman who brought joy to so many bookmakers, finally has picked a winner. He got married the other day . . . The three Tehel brothers, Andrew, Eddie and Paul, have good reason for being soccer stars. Their dad, Bela Tehel, was one of Vienna's best backs in the nineties.

Equipped for Lecture Tour

A story concerns Herr Remarque, author of "All Quiet on the Western Front," and a pretty American girl whom he met in Berlin.

The American asked Remarque why he had never visited the United States. His answer was that he knew only a few sentences in English.

"What are the sentences?" inquired the girl.

Remarque, speaking in somewhat guttural English, said: "How do you do? I love you. Forgive me. Forget me. Ham and eggs, please."

"Sakes alive!" ejaculated the girl. "Why, with that vocabulary you could tour from Maine to California."—Troy (N. Y.) Record.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

Noiseless Burglars Are Detected by Loudspeaker Alarm

Device "Hears" Intruder Before He Makes Sound

WASHINGTON.—A simplified burglar alarm that "hears" the burglar before he makes a sound, and goes off even before he can get to his safe-cracking tools, forms the subject matter of a patent recently granted here to a New Jersey inventor.

So sensitive is this alarm that should the burglar change the position of the tiniest object within the vault room, a warning gong rings and the police dash to the scene.

How Alarm Works.

Th vibrating diaphragm of the loudspeaker sets up sustained, silent, air vibrations within the interior of the vault.

Connecting the loudspeaker to an electrically operated gong-system is a balanced electrical "bridge." When setting the alarm system to safeguard the vault, this bridge is adjusted or balanced so that no current can flow from the loudspeaker circuit over the bridge to the gong-operating circuit.

In this condition the loudspeaker diaphragm produces constant vibrations within the vault or room interior and the gongs are silent.

Device Is Sensitive.

But let some one open the vault room door, step into the interior, make a tiny hole in one of the walls, or as much as change the position of an object in the room, and the nature of the air vibrations is immediately disturbed. Such disturbance breaks down the balanced set-up of the bridge, and starts the alarm circuit where it is detected, amplified and sped to a relay which works the gongs.

The inventor claims that his protective alarm is much simpler than the present-day systems used in banks, which for complete protection require specially designed locks and switches in the doors to control some alarm device, as well as alarm system networks embedded in the vault walls and sound pick-up devices in the safes to detect boring and tapping noises.

Bachelors Are More Prone to Insanity Than Married Men

NEW YORK.—Bachelors are three times as likely to go insane as are married men. Divorced men are even more likely to develop mental disease, Drs. James Page and Carney Landis of New York Psychiatric institute revealed in a report recently to the meeting of the New York branch of the American Psychological association.

Marriage is not a "vaccine against mental disease," they warned. But it acts as a sieve; men who are later to need treatment for mental disease are not the ones who readily find wives and willingly enter into marriage. If they do get married, they are more likely to be weeded out by divorce.

Spinsters Found Same.

Here are the striking figures presented at the meeting by Doctor Page: For every one married man admitted to mental hospitals during the period studied, two widowers were admitted, three single men, and about 4.5 divorced men.

For women, the figures are much the same. One married woman to two single women, three divorced women and about 14 widowed.

Young people under twenty-five years old were not considered in these figures.

Doctors Can Produce Fever by Suggestion

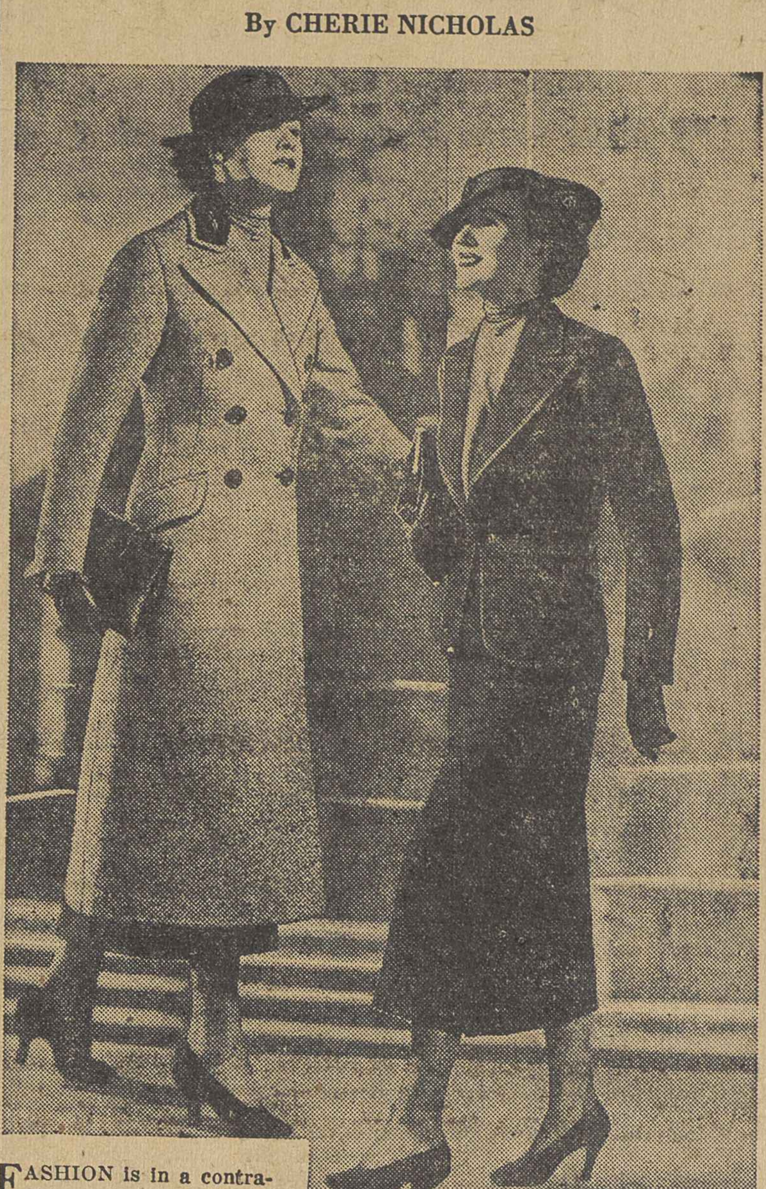
ATLANTA.—If you tell a person that he has a fever, you may actually give him a higher temperature.

The power of suggestion in raising the temperature and increasing the blood pressure and pulse rate was described to scientists at the meeting here of the Southern Society of Philosophy and Psychology by Dr. M. Kershaw Walsh of the University of South Carolina.

It is not necessary to hypnotize a person to cause this body change by suggestion; hypnotized subjects did not differ from normal subjects in the amount of temperature change.

Faultlessly Tailored for Spring

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



FASHION is in a contradictory mood this season, which makes the game all the more fascinating. Either you are more strictly tailored or you go beguilingly feminine with all sorts of furbelows.

Your wardrobe for spring and summer is made to play this dual role in that you may choose between being that faultlessly and uncompromisingly tailored the masculine members of the smart set will see themselves outrivaled in the matter of meticulous detail or your costume feminizes to the extreme via gay prints, gay flowers and a lavishment of adorably frivolous accessories that are utterly devastating in their coquetry of color and flutter and chic and charm.

Speaking from the smart tailored viewpoint every fashion-wise American woman is dashing out with joy in her heart to fit herself with a feminine version of the latest in men's swanky topcoats or trim business suits. Always she has envied the slim distinction of well-cut masculine attire, and from experience with riding habits and active sports costumes she knows that mannish styles accent rather than detract from femininity.

Broad shouldered and slender hipped, the two models pictured are man-tailored in the best tradition with a custom-built look that makes them eminently correct. The jacket suit of men's wear wool has arrived at a highspot of perfection which makes instant appeal with best-dressed women. Its lines are in the latest fashion with gracefully sweeping lapels, single-button jacket closing and braid-bound edges and pockets. One of the very smart details in high-style tailoring this season is the preference given braid-bound edges. The stunning straight-cut skirt closes oh-so-neatly with a concealed slide fastener at the side. The oxford shade of the wool is beautifully adapted to the formality of the jacket, and the skirt may be changed for a pinstripe matching flannel for the girl who has always had a hankering for a chance to pin a gardenia in her buttonhole and look like the handsomest usher at a fashionable wedding.

The Chesterfield type topcoat shown, of a fine herringbone medium weight woolen, is an ideal choice for wear over any tailored costume. The traditional velvet collar, high lapels and side pockets with flap tops are both chic and mannish. The coat is fitted for a slender-waisted effect, which is further accented by the double-breasted closing.

The varying length of this season's coats makes it important to suit your coat length to your wardrobe. This Chesterfield is cleverly designed in the new style which allows just an inch or two of the skirt to show at the hemline. As here pictured an excellent ensemble idea is carried out as it ties up accessories, skirt and hat as accent to the topcoat.

Because of its fitted lines, this model is easily adapted both to sports and street wear over the new sheer wool tailored frocks as well as over spring suits. The beauty of this season's woolens is that they are related in color so as to be friendly and tuneful to versatile combinations that admit of interchangeable alliances and effects.

LONG NET CAPE
By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Multi-color carnations on black silk crepe interpret the new fashion in prints that calls for dark backgrounds with widely spaced single flowers. The shoulder straps of cutout flowers forming a ruche effect are also of style significance. As to the long cape made of dotted net it defines fashion at its smartest, for wherever possible designers are veiling both daytime and evening prints with net or tulle. The jewels worn with this stunning gown are superb.

Paris Lingerie

In Paris, among sets of lingerie consisting of nightie, slip and pantie, they are showing a new length nightgown—one which comes just to the calf of the leg.

LESS UNIFORMITY SEEN IN NEW HATS

Less uniformity is noticed in the new hats than was previously the case. Besides the general tendencies already in vogue, there are new interpretations of Bretons by Agnes in grosgrain and rayon satin ribbons with hand-work on the crown. The crowns of her Abyssinian Negus hats are shaped something like a tiled roof and her Chinese caps are extremely pointed. Talbot shows little Flemish bonnets that are very cute. Among the Catherine de Medici coiffures and Reine Margot bonnets at Marie-Alphonsine's are models in crocheted rayon straw with open work, others in laize of slit cellulose film and bright straw of this weave.

New Colors and Materials for Women's Spring Shoes

New colors, contours and materials are making the spring shoe styles as exciting as the costumes they complement. Mannish pumps, strap sandals, ghillies and peasant type shoes with heels of all heights are only a few of the modes that will be represented in fashion's march. Graceful variations of the Cuban, continental and boulevard heel, in both built-up and covered models, will direct new attention to the back view of shoes.

Polka Dots

You can't down polka dots in the spring. Even so great a designer as Mainbocher uses them in a new dinner ensemble. The material is navy crepe de chine dotted with white, the same fabric in red and white marking the underarm and making a wide waistband. A fingertip mandarin jacket accompanies the dress.

BRET HARTE'S famous story, "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," has been a favorite bit of reading matter with the multitudes for years and years; it is one of those tales that grow no less popular with the passing of the years. Now it's to be turned into a picture with Norman Foster playing the lead.

Incidentally, they're pushing Foster right along at RKO, and first thing he knows he's likely to be a very popular leading man.

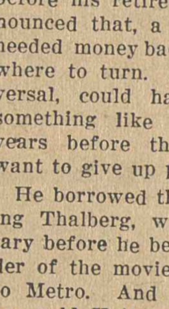
Incidentally, they've recently finished a picture at RKO studio that has everyone who has seen it raving about it. It is "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," with William Powell, and Jean Arthur, one of our most talented blonds. It's said to be as good as "The Thin Man," which is tops in the way of praise. Powell is a consistent performer, year in and year out. He has won new laurels for his portrayal of Flo Ziegfeld in "The Great Ziegfeld."



Wm. Powell

All of Bill Hart's friends are cheering because he won that case of his against United Artists. He asked for $500,000, claiming that they didn't do right by his last picture, "Tumbleweeds," on which he had spent $300,000, all of his savings. That was way back in 1925. The court gave him the verdict, but cut the amount to $85,000.

Jack Benny didn't mind writing his own script for one broadcast, when the chap who had been doing it fell ill, but he drew the line at writing it every week—for writing a script and then broadcasting a program as well takes practically all your time, as Fred Allen will tell you. So Goodman Ace, one of radio's best writers, is helping out; Benny has wanted him for a long time, so now he's happy.

"Show Boat" is finished at last, with Helen Morgan and Paul Robeson doing some marvelous singing in it; in fact, you ought to see "Old Man River." It will probably be one of the year's best pictures, certainly the best of the musicals; even if you saw the silent version made years ago, and the play as well, you must see this one.

Carl Laemmle startled everybody at that final dinner given for him before his retirement, when he announced that, a few years ago, he needed money badly and didn't know where to turn. His company, Universal, could have been sold for something like $80,000,000 a few years before that, but he didn't want to give up picture making.

He borrowed the money from Irving Thalberg, who was his secretary before he became the boy wonder of the movie world and moved to Metro. And now "Uncle Carl" has sold Universal, for less money than he once refused for it, and Junior Laemmle may work for Thalberg.

Sally Eilers had fun when she first reached New York for a vacation, with her husband, Harry Joe Brown, in tow. She was born in New York but left for California when she was six. So she spent her first Sunday seeing sights; riding on Fifth avenue busses, seeing the Empire State building, Radio City, and the Aquarium.

Louise Fazenda is loud in her praise of the scenario writers who worked on Kay Francis' newest picture, "The White Angel," which is based on the life of Florence Nightingale, famous nurse of the Crimean war. Says she couldn't see, at first, how they could possibly get a picture out of it. They did; they got a good one, too. But it does seem an awful waste to put Kay, one of our best dressed women, into a nurse's uniform! But here's betting she looks just as lovely in a uniform as she does in one of the latest Paris ensembles.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Fred Stone has never made a picture for the company that had him under contract; he startled a lot of motion picture men by saying so the other day . . . As soon as one company engaged him, he'd be borrowed by another one . . . Rochelle Hudson was so pleased with one of the period costumes that she wears in W. C. Fields' picture, "Poppy," that she bought it and is wearing it around town . . . Ann Harding's going to England to make pictures and may not return to Hollywood.

Musical Watch to Be Presented to Paderewski

Paderewski, the famous Polish pianist, is to be presented with a watch ornamented with music notes. The hours on the platinum dial are represented by 12 letters—I. J. Paderewski. A piano keyboard in enamel represents the minutes. The hour hand is in the form of a pen. The minute hand is like a conductor's baton. The second dial is marked with the 12 letters Polska-Podole, the Polish district in which Paderewski was born. Round the outside of the dial are notes of 12 phrases from 12 Paderewski compositions. In a smaller circle towards the center are the notes of his famous Minuet.

That's Advancement

As men in a crowd instinctively make room for one who would force his way through it, so mankind makes way for one who rushes toward an object beyond them.

Romance--Mystery At Strand Saturday

A story of mystery and romance on the Atlantic is unfolded by "The Princess Comes Across," to be Saturday at the Strand Theatre with Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray in the stellar roles.

The picture reunites for the first time the screen sweethearts who became national favorites in their first feature together, "Hands Across the Table." A balanced combination of comedy, romance, song and mystery, it gives the team a chance to show their best work.

Miss Lombard appears as a charming American girl posing as a Swedish princess, enroute to New York to land a film contract. On the luxury-liner "Mammoth," setting for the entire plot, she meets and falls in love with MacMurray, concertina-playing maestro of a "swing" band.

Before the "Mammoth" has docked at New York, the romance of the supposed princess and the music "king" has wound through a plot involving a pair of murderers blackmail, sleuthing of five international detectives and a nick-of-time solution by MacMurray.

An unusually varied supporting cast adds much to both comedy and mystery of the offering. Heading the list are the inimitable Alison Skipworth, "lady-in-waiting" to the Princess; William Frawley, manager for MacMurray's band; Douglass Dumbrille, Porter Hall and George Barbier.

New Sales Plan For Ford Cars Receives Acclaim. Local Dealer Explains Plan

Automobile dealers and used car purchasers universally laud the R and G—Renewed and Guaranteed—sales plan for used cars, recently introduced by the Ford Motor Company.

Ford dealers praise the new plan enthusiastically, declaring that it will tend to stabilize the merchandising of used cars and to protect the motor car purchasing public.

Adopted by Ford dealers everywhere, the R and G plan guarantees to the used car purchaser a completely reconditioned automobile, thoroughly overhauled and guaranteed. Under this plan, if the purchaser is dissatisfied he can return the car and get his money back.

Speaking of the newly introduced plan, Mr. G. T. Towery, manager of the Montevallo Branch of the Ford Motor Company, stated, "This new term—R and G—stands for Renewed and Guaranteed. It means that each car offered under the plan must meet a rigid set of specifications as to mechanical condition and appearance. The result is a product so fine that it can be sold with a written guarantee. The car purchaser is the judge of the car's quality. After purchasing, he may drive it two days, putting it to any driving test he wishes. If the car fails to measure up to expectations in any way, the purchaser may return it to the Ford dealer, and have his money refunded in full.

"In addition, the purchaser receives a written service warranty as a further protection. This double guarantee removes forever the elements of doubt and uncertainty that have troubled buyers of used cars for years.

"The R and G. emblem is the mark of an exclusive Ford dealer value. It is the buyer's personal guarantee of complete satisfaction in the purchase of an automobile backed by the pledge of the entire dealer organization," concluded Mr. Towery.

The plan is becoming increasingly popular with Ford dealers because it serves their customers efficiently. "Since the inauguration of the R and G used car plan by Ford dealers a few weeks ago, we have felt a quickening demand for used cars," says Mr. Towery. "Used car buyers, who may have been doubtful of used car values in the past, are gaining confidence under this sales plan, and are buying with the assurance that the cars are guaranteed to stand up.

"Although the Renewed and Guaranteed plan was only recently announced the R and G oval is already establishing itself as a symbol of quality and integrity," he continued. "Motorists know now, and many more will know, that when they buy an automobile with the R and G check tag on the radiator they receive 100 per cent value for every dollar invested. Before an automobile is ready for sale it undergoes the rigid R and G test, during which every function, every part of a car is laboratory tested.

"Another beneficial effect of the R and G plan is that it will lead to the establishment of a general price level. The used car market fluctuates so rapidly and there is such a constant ebb and flow of prices that even the most observing used car buyer cannot keep pace with the changes. The R and G plan of merchandising tends to set a more or less standard fixed sales price on most car models, and so protects the buyer."

Reports from Ford dealers, both in the cities and the smaller towns, indicate that the R and G plan has drawn general public approval. Many dealers declare that they are installing special R and G sales and service departments because of an increased interest in used cars as a result of the new plan.

GIRL SCOUTS

DO YOU KNOW?

By Marie Goudette
Girl Scout Naturalist

Where the Dandelion got its name? Why? What happens to it in winter? Where it grows?

Look for an interesting set of questions every week. See if you can answer them. Next week you will find the answers to this week's "Do You Know," also another set of questions. We expect to feature this every week for your enjoyment and instruction.

The girls of troop two enjoyed a picnic in the Forest of Orders recently. They were accompanied by Agnes Curtis, Lenis Vaughan, and Mrs. Vaughan. The walk along the creek bank was fun and finally a good picnic ground was found where everybody put down their "nose bag" picnic lunch and went up the creek to a nice place to wade. After a wade in the water, some of the girls cooked part of their supper, having a grand time doing the work and at the same time passing the cooking test. Tin can stoves were made and pancakes, bacon and eggs were cooked on them. After lunch dramatizations furnished much fun. One group had an amateur hour. The other had a Columbus comedy. After playing and talking a happy group sang taps and began the homeward journey. Those attending were Bill Kendrick, Sarah Henry Reynolds, Pat Weems, Bertha Wells, Edna Wells, Peggy Davis, Evelyn Ward, Billy Louise Mitchell, Sarah Rose Cook, Mary Pearson, Tootsie Clayton, and Jessie Mathews, a visitor.

The members of troop number five made up of Wilton girls have been busy passing tests. The lure of spring has been most inviting for compass work and outdoor cooking. Scouts learn to make different types of fires and out door stoves. The tin can stove is one of the simplest and most popular methods for cooking. Candy was also made by some and sold to secure money for dues. Bed-making is being studied, also nature. Nature work includes studying of birds, trees and wild flowers. Every member of the troop has passed the learning of the National Anthem. The mothers were invited to one meeting recently. Margaret Saunderson's and Frances Bassett's mothers came. The troop captain is Miss Lucile Thompson with Mary Agnes Curtis, of Alabama College, lieutenant. Troop members are: Frances Bassett, Georgia Canant, Dorothy Franks, Evelyn Sanderson, Margaret Saunderson, Margaret Harrison, Evelyn Fancher, Winslett, Sara Jo Lacey, Nellie Mae Chappell.

One of the requirements for being a first class scout is to plan and carry out a hike. Jean Appleton, who is one of the most advanced and enthusiastic scouts in Montevallo, passed her hiking test last Saturday. Jean, Ann and Sylvia Appleton, Kathleen Coyle and Ollis Mills hiked out to Big Springs with Miss Dorothy Waites, field captain of Alabama College and Mrs. Vaughan. The morning was largely taken up with preparing a "ham hole" where a most appetizing camp meal was prepared. Anybody who wants to know about making a good "ham hole" for cooking an excellent outdoor meal see Jean Appleton. Mrs. Wills, captain of troop number one, arrived in time to inspect the "ham hole" and enjoy the lunch and social hour.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

On Saturday, the 23rd, the Woman's Auxiliary will hold a joint meeting with the Girl's Circle in the Church at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. A pageant, "At the End of the Rainbow," will be presented by the Circle. As this is to be the annual celebration of the Auxiliary's Birthday Party a perfect attendance is requested. Refreshments will be served and a special offering will be taken.

The Sabbath meetings will be as follows:

At 9:45 a.m., the Sunday School with Prof. W. J. Kennerly presiding. The College Girl's Class will be taught by Miss Georgie Leeper. At 11:00 a.m., the church worship, during which Rev. Mr. Cox, the pastor, will speak on "Loyalty as a Challenge." Inspiring and worshipful music will be presented, with Prof. H. D. LeBaron at the Console of the Hammond Electric Organ. To all who need comfort, rest, companionship, and to those who need a Saviour and to whomsoever will come, this church opens wide its doors.

At 6:45 p.m. the Christian Endeavor Society. Meeting in front of Ramsay Dormitory at 5 o'clock all of the Presbyterian students will proceed to the college camp grounds where supper will be served. An entertainment, in honor of the graduating Presbyterians, will then be presented; followed by a period of worship and praise. A large attendance is expected.

Reception For Governor and Mrs. Graves

President and Mrs. Harman cordially invite the friends of the College, the student body and the faculty to the reception given in honor of Governor and Mrs. Graves and the Senior Class of 1936, at 8 P.M., May 29 in the parlors of Main Dormitory.

Baptist Church

Because of the Commencement program at Palmer Hall we shall not have any services next Sunday, except Sunday school. Everyone is urged to be at Sunday school on time in order to have time for the lesson period and get to Palmer Hall for the program there.

Also, everyone is urged to bring or send the church offering for the day, as the offering will be taken at the Sunday school hour.

The community Vacation Bible School, in which all the churches cooperate, will begin on June 8. The cooperation of all parents in this enterprise is earnestly requested. See the paper next week for full announcement.

Calendar of Commencement Week

COLLEGE EXTENDS PUBLIC INVITATION TO ATTEND THE PROGRAMS

The College extends residents of Montevallo and the vicinity a cordial invitation to the Fortieth Annual Commencement, May 29 to June 1. It is hoped that many underclassmen also will join the seniors in attending. The general program is as follows:

Friday, May 29—1:30 p.m. Annual meeting of the board of trustees; 8:00 P.M. President's reception for Governor and Mrs. Graves and the graduating class.

Saturday, May 30—10 to 12 A.M. Exhibition by Art Department; 4:00 P.M., Class Day Exercises; 8:00 P.M. Play by Senior Class.

Sunday, May 31, 11 A.M., Baccalaureate Sermon by Dr. J. B. Green, Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, Ga.; 4:30 P.M., Y. W. C. A. Vesper Address, Mrs. John C. Anderson, Montgomery, Ala.

Monday, June 1, 10 A.M., Baccalaureate Address, Associate Justice Joseph W. Cox, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C.

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Stokes and son, Gaines, of Prattville, were the week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Kelly.

Miss Laura Elliott has returned home from the University of Alabama.

Mr. Charles Bailey has returned from school at Auburn.

Business Review

The preparation of the special advertising and features in this Business Review of The Times is the work of Mr. E. B. Huston, an experienced newspaper man specializing in this particular field of publicity.

A Business Review of Montevallo

The publisher is pleased to present this issue of The Times as a fairly accurate and representative review of the business concerns of this community. Practically every firm in the Town and immediate vicinity has an advertisement in the paper. We want you to read them.

Those business institutions represented in this review are making a strong bid for patronage of the people who trade in Montevallo, and at the same time are affirming their determination to fill their places as important functioning units in the development of the commercial, social, civic, educational and religious aspects of Montevallo. They proudly and properly recognize this as one of the proving grounds of Alabama's cultural advancement.

We hope that every person who receives a copy of this issue will find it of interest as well as profitable to read the advertisements of these business concerns and the stories that have been written about the people who stand behind those businesses.

Some of the stores are offering price reductions. Others are calling attention to the special services which they are in position to render. We are gratified that our business people, as a group, are alert, aggressive, progressive, eager to serve those who are busy at their obligations to carry forward the activities that are centered in this community.

The Times is indeed grateful for the splendid patronage the local business concerns have given us in this Business Review. We are trying to give them a full and overflowing measure of benefit by mailing out a large number of extra copies. The circulation of this issue is more than double the number of papers we mail out regularly each week.

We do not believe any town the size of Montevallo can boast of more up-to-date stores. So complete are the stocks carried that there is no need for anyone to go to the larger cities to shop. And it is a fact that our local stores offer even lower prices than those offered by stores in larger cities.

In presenting this Business Review of Montevallo, The Times would like to impress its readers in this trade territory with the importance and advantages of trading at home. Some may have the idea that "I make my own money, and I spend it where I please." True, it is the privilege of every man to spend his money where and when he pleases. But the important thing for us to remember is that we have an obligation to support the community that supports us. In other words, this community is furnishing a living, a salary, many opportunities and conveniences to many people. It is the duty of those people, in turn, to give support to the development of the community by spending their money at home.

If every person will do all the buying and trading possible for him to do in Montevallo, we can, through this cooperation with each other, help to make Montevallo one of the best business towns in the state.

If we make this a better business center, who does it benefit? It directly benefits everyone who lives in the community. When a merchant does a larger business, he must necessarily carry a larger stock, employ more people, and his ability to contribute to the larger and broader activities of progress likewise are increased.

Who is it that local citizens and organizations call on when they desire to promote some worthy project for the good of the community? Is it the management of mail order houses or large city stores? No, sir! It is the home business man they go to for help.

Therefore, if we fail to support the home business man with our patronage, it diminishes his ability and interest in helping us promote the things we undertake for community development. On the other hand, if the local business men are prospering, they can and will gladly join every worthy movement for the advancement of the community's interests.

Recently, and continuing for an indefinite period, the merchants and business men of Montevallo have been engaged in a Trade-Building Campaign. Their hope and purpose is to attract more people to Montevallo, and get them in the habit of coming here to do their trading. The Times has taken an active interest in this movement, because we see in it the first step in building a better and broader trade center. We believe the people of this territory will find Montevallo business men as friendly and cordial and as interested in them as any you will find in any town in the vicinity.

On behalf of those in business here, we extend you an invitation to come to Montevallo. Here is a meeting ground for the leadership and the rank and file of agriculture, industry, education, labor, and all of whom are seeking constructive progress toward building a better relationship among people and a better community generally. You are welcome to come and join us!

MONTEVALLO LOCAL NEWS

Baptist Missionary Society

The Baptist Women's Missionary Society met at the church Monday for the regular monthly business and circle meetings. The meeting was opened with singing the hymn for the year, "Leod on, O King Eternal." Each one present gave her favorite verse of scripture and Mrs. Hare led in prayer.

The regular routine of business was carried out. Reports from all organizations were very good. It was voted to have a picnic on Thursday afternoon, June 4th, at the waterworks spring. The members of the missionary society will invite their husbands and any prospective members.

Mr. Glenn Elliott has returned home after attending the University of Alabama.

Miss Carmen Ersel Burns, of Birmingham was the week end guest of Mrs. J. R. Steelman.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Ivie spent last Thursday and Friday in Boothton and Birmingham.

Miss Pauline Jones of Birmingham has returned home after a visit of several weeks with her aunt, Mrs. George Bowdon.

Mr. Bernard Gilbert of Jasper was the week end guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Gilbert.

Mr. James Hodges has returned home after attending school at Auburn.

Mr. Authos Cooper has returned home from school at Auburn.

Miss Ruth Wiggins of Birmingham has returned home after spending last week with Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Kelly.

STORES WILL CLOSE EACH THURSDAY AFTERNOON

Beginning next Thursday, June 4, the stores of Montevallo will close each Thursday at noon for a half holiday. It is understood that this program will be followed until the first of September.

4-H CLUB BOYS ENJOYED PICNIC

VISIT TO BAKER DAIRY AND COLLEGE DAIRY; SWIM; STRAND THEATRE

About 130 4-H Club boys enjoyed a picnic Saturday, May 23, visiting the dairy farms of W. B. Baker and Sons and Alabama College, followed by a swim in Spring Creek and a picture show donated to the boys by Mr. Watson, of the Strand Theatre.

Assembling at nine o'clock at the Baker Dairy Farm, Mr. Baker showed the boys the cows, calves, and barn, which was a real show. This was followed by a tour over the farm to see the alfalfa hay fields, oat and crimson clover being harvested and baled, and on to the permanent pasture. We would like for every farmer in Shelby County to have an opportunity to visit this dairy farm.

The group next visited Alabama College Dairy, and were shown the barns and equipment and out to see the cows and calves. Mr. Bailey talked to the boys explaining the requirements necessary to make a success of dairying, what a good dairy cow should be, etc. The boys ate their lunch here and were served lemonade by Mr. Bailey.

The boys went from the college dairy to the creek near the Big Spring and enjoyed a swim. At two o'clock they went to the Strand Theatre where they were guests of Mr. Eddie Watson for the picture show.

T. A. Sims, state club agent from Auburn, talked to the boys on the subject of thrift and playing the game fair. J. W. Fant, county agent from Chilton County, and H. S. Gilmore, club agent from Elmore County, were visitors at the picnic.

This tour was very valuable as well as enjoyable, and the county agent and club boys thoroughly appreciated the kindness of the Montevallo folks.

May 31 Is Final Date To Make Applications

The time for making work sheets for the farm program was extended from May 15 to May 31.

This is a good program, and while the majority of farmers have already joined in, we hope all may come in by the 31st.

There are two payments, as follows:

1. Five cents per pound for the cotton reduced which is limited up to 35 per cent of the base production from 1928 to 1932.
2. Soil building payment for planting summer legumes, winter legumes and terracing.

Soil building is important on every farm, and a farmer may get this payment without reducing cotton, even though we think that is important.

Those who do not make a work sheet by Saturday night will not be eligible for either of these payments. So I want to urge those who have not already done this to do so by Saturday night. We have made every effort to get this before the people and to assist them in making the work sheets.—A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

MOTHER OF MRS. P. E. WOOLLEY DIED IN ANNISTON

CLASS DAY EXERCISES ARE SCHEDULED SATURDAY AFTERNOON

The Commencement Exercises at Alabama College will begin Friday afternoon with the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, followed that evening at 8 o'clock by the President's reception for Governor and Mrs. Graves and the graduating class.

The art department will present an art exhibition Saturday from 10 to 12 A.M. Class Day exercises are scheduled that afternoon for 4 o'clock and that evening at 8 the senior class will give a play.

The Class Day exercises are as follows: Welcome address, Miss Mary Nall Kendrick, Selma, president; Class history by Misses Isabel Henderson, Mobile; Betty Biship, Irvington; Nell Glenn Moorer, Evergreen; and Mary Ledbetter, Anniston; Last Will and Testament of the Class, by Miss Patricia Swift, Gadsden; "We'll Sing for Montevallo," directed by Miss Aleece Cooper, Prattville; Presentation of Class Ring to Junior Class, by Miss Mary Nall Kendrick; Acceptance of Class Ring, by Miss Jane Fowler, Columbiana; Presentation of Class Gift to the College by Miss Mary Nell Kendrick; Acceptance of Gift by President A. F. Harman; Singing of Alma Mater by the Class; March to President's home for his talk to the seniors.

Sunday morning at 11 o'clock Dr. J. B. Green, of the Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, Georgia, will give the Commencement sermon; and that afternoon at 4:30 Mrs. John C. Anderson, of Montgomery, will give the Y. W. C. A. Vesper Service address.

Sunday morning Dr. F. B. Pearson, pastor of the Montevallo Baptist Church, will deliver the invocation and scripture reading; and Rev. O. R. Burns, pastor of the Montevallo Methodist Church, the prayer and benediction. Special music will include two numbers by the college glee club under the direction of Harrison D. LeBaron, who will be at the organ for the processional and recessional.

Miss Frances Ribble, Bessemer, as president of the Y. W. C. A., will preside at the Vesper Service. Miss Brownie Lollar, Fayette, president-elect of the Y. W. C. A., will lead the devotional. Miss Mary Newman Graves, Waverly, soprano will be heard in a selection accompanied by Miss Ruth Schuessler, Lafayette.

Degrees will be conferred and certificates presented at the graduating exercises Monday morning, June 1st, at 10 o'clock. On this occasion Associate Justice Joseph W. Cox, of the District of Columbia, Washington, will be the speaker.

Mrs. George Bowdon is spending several days with her sister, Mrs. Jones, in Ensley.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Kelly and little son, James Agee, and Miss Ruth Wiggins attended the Bankers Convention in Montgomery last Saturday.

The Montevallo Civic Club will meet on Wednesday, June 3. All members are urged to be present.

Graves Demands Law Enforcement

EXECUTIVE LETTER SENT TO ALL SHERIFFS AND SOLICITORS

Montgomery, Ala., May 25. — A Montgomery County Grand Jury demanded that the state either enforce the prohibition law, or repeal it, was followed immediately last week by a letter from Gov. Bibb Graves to all sheriffs and solicitors, that the law be enforced. The Grand Jury said "no complaints" had been made to them, while the letter of the Governor said "complaints are constantly coming to the office of the governor."

The letter of the governor, addressed to all sheriffs and solicitors, follows:

"I am calling your attention to the fact that complains are constantly coming to the office of the governor relative to flagrant violation of the prohibition statutes and the anti-gambling statutes of our state.

"As governor, I am writing each sheriff and solicitor in the state requesting their active cooperation in seeing that all the laws are complied with and enforced, especially the prohibition law and anti-gambling law.

"You know what our prohibition laws are and you also know that a license from the federal authorities does not allow the sale of whiskey, wines or beers in Alabama, nor does such a license protect the seller.

"I hope to have your cooperation and will back you with all the powers of my office in the proper enforcement of these laws.

"I desire also to call your particular attention to the gaming laws which I understand are being flagrantly violated, especially to the vending machines, commonly called 'slot machines,. Under the act passed in 1931 any machine, whether slot machine or otherwise, which by the deposit of a coin, whether one cent or 50 cents, will produce 'pay off' either in money or goods or in merchandise, is in strict violation of the laws.—Respectfully, Bibb Graves, Governor."

Summer School At Alabama College

Alabama College will serve as one of the centers for Curriculum Work in the State Program during the summer school. It will be directed by Dr. D. W. Peters, state director of Instruction for Virginia and E. S. Brinkley, assistant superintendent of schools at Norfolk, Virginia, during the first six weeks of the summer school.

The Progressive Education Demonstration School will develop and teach units of work of the type which the state department of education plans to develop. This work will be open for observation.

In addition to its regular Progressive Education program, Alabama College offers courses in Orientation in Curriculum Making, Techniques in Curriculum Making and Laboratory in Curriculum Making.

Dr. Peters received his B. S. Degree at Roanoke College, and the M. A., and Ph. D., degrees at Columbia University. He was for two years connected with the elementary schools of Richmond; for four year supervising principal of Cape Charles, Virginia; for five years superintendent of Northhampton Schools; for three years supervisor of secondary education in the Virginia State Department of Education.

Mr. Brinkley received his A. B. degree at William and Mary College and his M. A. at Columbia University. He has served at principal of elementary schools and junior and senior high schools in addition to assisting in the Virginia Curriculum program. He has held his position at Norfolk since 1923.

The Alabama College summer school is divided into two terms, scheduled as follows: June 11-July 22; July 23-August 26. The Progressive Education Regional Conference will be held on the campus July 1-3 as one of the number of educational meetings planned during the summer school.

Mrs. McCoy To Make High School Address

Mrs. Mary M. McCoy, dean of residence and professor of Religious Education at Alabama College, will deliver the Commencement Address at Montevallo High School Friday morning, May 29, at 10 o'clock. The program will be held in Palmer Hall at Alabama College.

The theme of the exercises is "Youth Problems of Today." Fifty diplomas will be awarded by W. F. Tidwell, principal.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FOR two days Dr. Francis E. Townsend replied mildly to the questions of the house committee investigating the activities of the organization behind the old age pension movement which the doctor started. Then the Californian lost his patience suddenly, refused to answer any more "nonsensical" queries, spoke of "thick-headed congressmen," denounced the committee for its "unfriendly attitude" and asserted the administration was a "hostile force" behind the inquiry. He declared he would form a third party after the November elections.

Dr. F. E. Townsend.

Finally Doctor Townsend told the committee: "I am retiring from this sort of inquisition and I do not propose to come back except under arrest. And I do refuse absolutely to make any further statement regarding this movement to this committee."

Escorted by Gerald K. Smith, former adherent of Huey Long, and another man, the Californian fled from Washington to Baltimore. The committee decided to ask the house to cite him for contempt.

When he was questioned regarding large sums contributed by Townsend club members the physician said the contributors had faith in him and that "we need millions to promote a movement of this kind and we will get them."

His testimony developed that Doctor Townsend, his brother, Walter Townsend and Gilmour Young own the assets of the Townsend organization, estimated now at about $60,000, and that Townsend club members have no property right in them.

Doctor Townsend testified he has received about $68,000 in salary, dividends from the Townsend weekly and expenses, but now had only about $300 and his wife about $200 to show for their efforts.

GOV. ALF LANDON captured nearly all the New Jersey delegates to the national convention, defeating Senator Borah about 4 to 1 in the popular vote. This victory gave the Kansan a total of more than 200 votes to start with at Cleveland, and his manager, John Hamilton, claimed he would have at least 300 of the 501 votes necessary to nominate and would win on the second or third ballot.

The statement by Herbert Hoover taking himself out of consideration for the nomination is generally judged to have helped Landon. With Mr. Hoover out of the picture it will be difficult to hold California, Texas, and other potentially Hoover votes away from Landon.

James A. Farley, postmaster general and also Democratic national chairman, told the Michigan Democratic convention he believed the Republican Presidential nominee will be "the governor of a typical prairie state" and that his election, if he won, would be a "perilous experiment." Farley criticized the man he did not name as devoid of experience in national affairs, and predicted that if he is the Republican standard bearer "even Kansas" will not be in the Roosevelt doubtful column.

About twenty of Pennsylvania's delegation to the Republican convention were pledged to support the popular choice of the state, which turned out to be Mr. Borah, no other name being officially entered at the April 28 primary. The delegation, which is uninstructed, has now voted that those members must keep their pledge on the first ballot or until it becomes manifestly impossible for their choice to win. This action was taken on motion of former Senator David A. Reed.

CONSTITUTIONALITY of the railroad retirement system was contested before the District of Columbia Supreme court by attorneys representing the class 1 railroads and 289 lesser railway enterprises. The lawyers argued that the pension law and a tax law enacted at the same time are together "substantially the same" as the "unconstitutional railroad retirement act of 1934."

The two separate acts, one providing pensions and the other taxing the income of railroads and employees, were passed last year after the Supreme court ruled unconstitutional the 1934 law in which a levy and a pension system were combined.

The government contended that the alleged relation between the two acts could not be proved, and that the railroads were suing, in effect, to enjoin collection of a tax. Such a suit, the government contended, was barred by federal law. The government further defended its railroad retirement system as an exercise of its constitutional power "to provide for the common defense."

POSTPONEMENT of action on the Patman-Robinson chain store bill until next session was urged on the house rules committee in a letter from six powerful farm organizations.

Charging the bill would restrict operations of farm co-operatives by preventing them from receiving wholesale discounts, the letter warned also that higher consumer prices would result from enactment. The measure, already passed by the senate, prevents price discriminations by manufacturers to big customers.

The letter was signed by representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the National Co-operative Council, the National Co-operative Milk Producers' Federation, the Farmers' National Grain association, and the Northwestern Farmers' Union Legislative committee.

SIX members of the Supreme court of the United States ruled that the Guffey act to control the bituminous coal industry is invalid, and another of the New Deal experiments goes into the discard. This is the act which President Roosevelt urged congress to pass notwithstanding doubts of its constitutionality "however reasonable."

Sen. Guffey

Five justices — Sutherland, Butler, Van Devanter, McReynolds, and Roberts—joined in the majority opinion which invalidated the whole act. Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone joined in a dissenting opinion in which they upheld the act. Chief Justice Hughes held in a separate opinion that the act was constitutional with respect to the marketing provisions but unconstitutional with respect to the labor regulations.

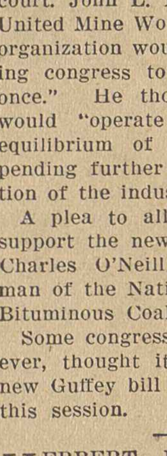
The court in the majority opinion held that there is no authority in the Constitution for the control of the coal industry attempted in the Guffey act. The act was not valid either under the commerce clause or the welfare clause. Power was unlawfully delegated to set up a coal code similar to the codes of the invalidated NRA and the regulations establishing working hours of miners were a violation of the fifth amendment prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law. Mining, the court declared, is a local industry, the state jurisdiction whereof the federal government has no authority to invade.

Senator Guffey of Pennsylvania, author of the act, lost little time in introducing a substitute measure, concentrating on price fixing and omitting the labor provisions which were outlawed by the Supreme court. John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, declared that organization would "join in requesting congress to enact the bill at once." He thought the measure would "operate to maintain the equilibrium of the coal industry pending further study of stabilization of the industry."

A plea to all coal operators to support the new bill was made by Charles O'Neill, legislative chairman of the National Conference of Bituminous Coal Producers.

Some congressional leaders, however, thought it unlikely that the new Guffey bill could be passed at this session.

HERBERT H. LEHMAN announced suddenly in Albany that he would not be a candidate for a third term as governor of New York, saying: "I feel the time has come when I may ask release from the cares and responsibilities of the governorship." But leaders of the Democratic party, including President Roosevelt, National Chairman James A. Farley and Senators Wagner and Copeland undertook to persuade Mr. Lehman to run for re-election. They all agreed that his retirement would be a loss to the state and the party and that he should be "drafted."



Gov. Lehman

The immediate political result of the governor's surprise action was that New York again became a doubtful state for the Presidential campaign, in the minds of many politicians. The morale of Republican leaders in the state improved, and Democrats began speculating as to which of a group of five or more candidates could be groomed for the gubernatorial nomination this fall if Lehman persisted in his determination.

GENERAL rejoicing marked the inaugural of Dr. Miguel Mariano Gomez as president of Cuba—the first elected by the people since Gerardo Machado. The new executive, a lawyer and revolutionary leader who has twice been mayor of Havana, took the oath of office in the ball room of the President's mansion in the presence of 400 foreign and Cuban officials. The guns of Cabanas fortress across the harbor fired a twenty-one gun salute and on the signal all public buildings were illuminated and thousands of merrymakers began parading the streets.

President Gomez appeared on a balcony and told the shouting throngs that he would do his best to maintain a constitutional government "by the Cubans and for the benefit and interest of all Cubans." In his first message to congress he assured the nation that personal rights would be respected. Among his policies he listed "ample tolerance to all ideas, ample guarantees for all rights and sufficient energy to maintain order and the necessary strength against offenders against the laws."

THE resettlement administration headed by Rexford Guy Tugwell was declared by the District of Columbia court of appeals to be "clearly unconstitutional delegation of power," in a case involving a model community project in Somerset county, New Jersey.

Going beyond the issue before them, the justices of the Appeals court called the entire relief appropriations act of 1935 into question. The act was invalid and hence RA was invalid, according to the court. Legally, however, none of the rest of the act will be affected by the decision because the other multitudinous activities of the New Deal under the appropriation were not before the court.

BENITO MUSSOLINI advised Prince von Starhemberg of Austria not to start any domestic trouble because he was ousted from the cabinet by Chancellor Schuschnigg, and when the prince returned to Vienna the cabinet fixed things up neatly by decreeing that the country should have three fuehrers, Schuschnigg, the unofficial dictator, becomes national leader of the fatherland front; Eduard Baar von Barenfels, the new vice chancellor, is national commander of the front militia; and Starhemberg continues as sports leader and head of the Northerhood Protective association.

DR. ANTON PAVELIC, alleged leader of Ustashi, the Croatian terrorist organization, and accused as one of the "master minds" in the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslovakia in Marseilles, has been set free by the Italian authorities. Released with him was his lieutenant, Eugene Kvaternik. The two were arrested at Turin in October, 1934, soon after the murder of Alexander, but the French authorities who were working on the case were never permitted to question them, and an Italian tribunal refused the request of the French government for their extradition to France for trial.

JOSE LUIS TEJADA SORZANO was forced to resign the presidency of Bolivia by a junta of army officers and Socialists who staged a bloodless coup d'etat in La Paz. Col. German Busch, acting chief of the general army staff, leader of the coup, will be at the head of the government until Col. David Toro, hero of the war with Paraguay, returns from the Chaco, when Toro will be installed as president.

The immediate objective of the new administration was complete settlement of a general strike which the officers asserted was imperiling the country's economic stability. The labor federation quickly suspended the strike movement, expressing solidarity with the army-Socialist coup.

NATIONS that are especially hard up might consider the method said to be employed by Rumania. A Bucharest newspaper asserts that government employees have been paid largely in counterfeit money, vast quantities of bogus 100 lei pieces having been issued in sealed bags by the ministry of finance. That ministry then announced that the counterfeit coins would not be redeemed and that persons who passed them would be prosecuted.

SECRETARY OF WAR DERN allocated nearly $138,000,00 for river and harbor improvement projects throughout the country that had been recommended by the engineering corps.

Of this sum, $103,458,839 will be used for entirely new waterway and port improvement while $34,408,150 will be employed in maintaining existing river and harbor facilities.

MRS. SARA DELANO ROOSEVELT, aged mother of the President, fell while on a visit in New York some days ago and is laid up at Hyde Park with an impacted hip and cracked bone. She made light of the injuries but Mr. Roosevelt was gravely concerned. He spent the week-end with his mother.

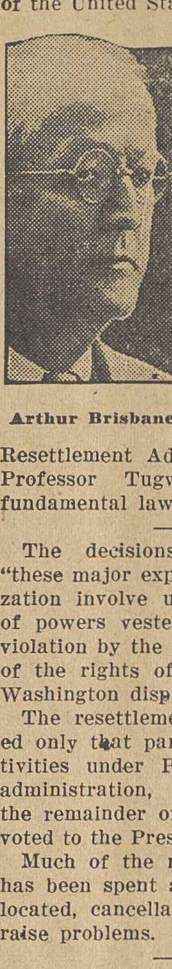
Big news from the Supreme Court of the United States and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Two "far-reaching experiments" of the Roosevelt New Deal are declared unconstitutional.



Arthur Brisbane

"The Supreme court in a sweeping decision killed the Guffey coal act; the District of Columbia Court of Appeals held the Resettlement Administration under Professor Tugwell violates the fundamental law of the land."

The decisions set forth that "these major experiments in socialization involve unlawful delegation of powers vested in congress and violation by the federal government of the rights of the states," the Washington dispatch avers.

The resettlement decision affected only that part of the relief activities under Professor Tugwell's administration, leaving undecided the remainder of the $4,800,000,000 voted to the President last year.

Much of the resettlement money has been spent and much more allocated, cancellation of which will raise problems.

At Angels Camp, Calif., 25,000 persons watched the annual Calaveras county frog-jumping contest and saw "Can't Take It" cover a distance of 12 feet 3 inches in three hops. Another frog, raised on the ranch of the late Will Rogers, was second, with 12 feet 2 inches.

Twenty-five thousand human beings watched some frogs hop; not half as many would have gathered to hear Einstein lecture on relativity.

It is suggested that every American can be compelled to go to school until twenty-two years of age to cut down the competition for jobs.

It might be simpler to keep everybody in school until sixty and then give everybody a pension of $200 a month. What could be simpler than that?

The average sensible American starts making a living long before he is twenty-two and would do well to continue on that basis.

Sir Hubert Wilkins, who has flown in the Arctic, Antarctic and other queer regions by plane, crossed the Atlantic by dirigible recently.

Says Sir Hubert:

"From almost anywhere in the United States, a business man could spend Wednesday and Thursday going about his business, catch the dirigible by airplane Thursday midnight, spend two business days in Europe and be at his desk the early part of the next week."

New York police arrested a middle-aged woman begging near a church and "acting strangely." She wore men's shoes, five dresses, one over the other, and carried bank books showing deposits of $25,000.

This should not discourage wise charity. Not every old woman, begging, has four extra dessses and $25,000. But it might well discourage thoughtless, indiscriminate giving, which encourages professional beggary and causes young beggars to graduate as criminals.

Following an old Roman custom, Mussolini is taking a census of the Ethiopians that remain. The total number is between six and fourteen millions. Exact figures are wanted.

The able-bodied will be put to work with plows, spades and shovels supplied by Mussolini, with Italians telling the Ethiopians where and what to dig. That need not horrify us, for it is what we have been doing in this country for a long time. It will be better for the Ethiopians than killing and selling each other into slavery.

Americans ask three questions: "What is the news? Who won the game? Have you heard the story about—?" For that reason, the successful newspaper pays attention first to the news, told accurately and vividly, then it concentrates on sport, then on humor. Such dry things as opinions, editorials, books, in the rear. Fiction ought to be number four but good fiction is scarce and the other kind not worth printing.

Anti-religious hatred persists in Spain. While Pope Pius in Rome was addressing representatives of Catholic newspapers deploring Communism and the Hitler attitude toward the Catholic church and the Catholic press a Spanish mob in Valencia was burning two Catholic churches, beautiful monuments of early days. Former indifference to religion has turned to actual hatred in many countries, and in those that were most deeply religious.

Speed New Soil Program

Washington.—The Department of Agriculture and its stepchild, the Agricultural Adjustment administration, have launched the initial phase of the new soil conservation program. This, it will be remembered, is the agricultural benefit policy worked out to supersede the unconstitutional AAA, and the speed with which the department has developed the early phases of its new program is noteworthy. It has not wasted any time, nor could it waste time, in order to make the new program effective in this crop year.

While the work of policy making has gone on at an unusual speed for governmental procedure, I am afraid it cannot be said that the soundness of its program can be commended in the same manner.

Some of the soil building practices proposed under the new scheme of aid to the farmer undoubtedly will work out, but there are others about which there is much doubt. Indeed, already it has been pointed out that certain of the practices proposed are vulnerable and are likely to lead to serious trouble both for agriculture and the government.

More than a score of the states were included in the first set of rules and regulations governing soil building practices and rates of payment. The others are nearing completion and will be promulgated at an early date. But the first block of rules and regulations and rates of payment establish the general outline of the department's ideas, and it can be said, I think, that in these rules and regulations (the government must lay down general provisions) lies the trouble. They are replete with that which we usually describe as red tape and red tape never has failed to cause trouble.

Practices for which farmers may receive payments vary from state to state. They include the new seeding legumes and grasses. The plowing under of green manure crops, the planting of forest trees, the eradication of perennial noxious weeds and, in certain areas, a variety of special soil handling methods such as listing, strip cropping and fallowing, terracing or approved summer fallow. In addition, farmers in certain dry land areas have the option of substituting some of the practices for acreage of soil conserving crops.

In announcing the new practices and rates of payment, the Agricultural Adjustment administration declared that the policies follow in general the recommendations made to the Adjustment administration by the several state committees. It was declared that the sentiment throughout has been "to adapt the general plan to the specific needs of the states in conformity with the approved methods which have been tested by the land grant colleges, the experiment stations and soil conservation service." The Adjustment administration considered that these three agencies furnished the best foundation, for the construction of the generally new program. It follows, therefore, that a considerable part of the new setup comes by way of expansion of the old soil conservation service which has had much experience in that work. It cannot be said, however, that the new phases have been tested nor is it more than conjecture how the farmers themselves will take to the plans now offered.

Payment Rates Vary

Just as the soil conserving practices vary, so do the rates of payment as between the several states. It is the claim of the Adjustment administration that variation in rates "is due largely to variations in the cost of seed, in rates of seeding or in differences in the requirements with respect to soil building practices." Rates of payment for soil conservation on irrigated land are higher than for those on dry land and likewise long standing agricultural practices have been taken into account in calculating the rates to be paid in various sections to offset the greater or less expense to which farmers normally are put in producing their crops.

Generally in the dry land states, the seeding and growing of perennial legumes, such as alfalfa, will net the farmer about $2.00 per acre but in irrigated districts the rate of payment varies from $3.00 to $4.00 per acre.

For most states, the rate for biennial legumes is $1.50 on non-irrigated land and from $2.50 to $3.00 an acre on irrigated land. Rates of payment for growing sweet clover are somewhat less as are the rates of payment for growing annual legumes.

The rates for plowing under green manure crops are from $1.00 to $2.50 an acre, depending upon the amount of growth which is turned under. For planting forest trees on crop land, farmers are scheduled to be paid $5.00 an acre.

For weed eradication the program proposes to pay $5.00 an acre where only periodical cultivation is required, but it will reward the farmer for taking out weeds by chemical treatment in addition to periodical cultivation by paying him $10.00 an acre. In addition to these methods of soil conservation, strip cropping and fallowing command about $1.00 an acre of benefit to the farmer while terracing will be paid for around the basis of $2.00 or $3.00 an acre.

Other states, as they are brought under the soil conservation program, may expect rates similar to these for the first half of the country. It is obvious, however, that in the more thickly populated areas where agriculture is carried on in a more concentrated way, new and different practices must be prescribed. It is certain, also, that these practices must be made to take into account the varying types of crops where farming is done on smaller acreage per farm or in the fruit and truck garden areas.

Opinions Differ

From this program, two sets of conclusions have been drawn. One school of thought maintains that the regulations are simple and easy of enforcement; the other group argues that it is utterly impossible to apply rules and regulations, administered from a central bureau in Washington, to the whole country and yet enable flexibility of management sufficient to meet the countless problems that will arise.

One conclusion is that by administration of the rules and regulations through state and county organizations and with the aid of state experiment stations, individual farmers can be advised and can work out their individual problems with ease. The other school of thought contends that this very fact means a permanent maze of different applications of the rules and regulations both as to language and intent; this group likewise maintains that favoritism will permeate the whole structure and that there will be injustice, ill will and politics in the way the local organizations deal with the farmers.

While the policy makers in the marble palace known as the Department of Agriculture contend that the soil conservation program will spell the end of surpluses and will accomplish better prices for what the farmers produce, another argument stresses the claim that the new program means dislocation of agricultural output and the market to which that output normally goes.

* * *

Find New Dislocations

As the new soil conservation plans unfold, those who doubt their efficacy point to numerous new dislocations that are comparable to those of the old AAA which I have just enumerated. For example, it is claimed, and there seems to be justice in the claim, the placing of a premium on growth of hay crops such as alfalfa, alsike and clover, can mean only an overabundance of those crops. I do not say that it is certain to occur, but if conditions repeat themselves, the prices for hay crops in the market are due to fall. The law of supply and demand still governs regardless of theory and regardless of the attempts of bureaucrats to plan what the farmer shall or shall not grow. If world consumption falls low, crops of hay will be valuable. The chances, however, seem to be wholly in the other direction.

Time alone can tell how this thing will work out, but I cannot believe any sound-thinking person or any person who analyzes the program through to its ultimate end can say that it is free from weaknesses. The tragedy of the thing is that government is experimenting on the farmers. With that I am not in accord and never can be. Further, while I dislike to disparage honest efforts, I am afraid the new soil conservation program embodies some politics as well as efforts to help agriculture.

If it were a purely critical report of the soil conservation policies that I am making to you, I would be inclined to add to the above analysis the assertion that these plans embody too much organization. I have observed government administration from close at hand through a number of years. There is one conviction that I have gained. That conviction is that every time a new policy is proposed that requires the scattering of government-paid administrators, executives, field agents, inspectors and countless other nomadic individuals, clothed with official authority, throughout the country, just then does the policy fail of its purpose. Many hands may make light work, but many heads, partly politicians, make a mess.

CHAPTER VI

—9—

BARRY proceeded to The Globe, quite expecting to find his dismissal there.

"I'm going to draw down fifty bucks," he thought, "and what have I done for it?"

"The other papers have practically dropped it," he said. "Okay. We'll go on working quietly, and some day we'll turn up the story. It's good any time. And I'm dead sure now the cops have got the wrong party. What're you doing?"

Barry told him.

"Let's see those phone numbers."

Standing over him, Barry pointed out that somebody had made two calls from Kelly's within eleven minutes after the receipt of the message from Betty Barclay. Harwood saw nothing remarkable about that. "But," Barry persisted, "who was 'somebody?' Kelly didn't get home till 11, the Filipino says. Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem. Who called the Yale Club, and the flat on Riverside drive?"

Harwood sent for a newspaper file.

"I thought so," he observed, his finger on one of its pages. "Betty Barclay's the dame Mrs. Kelly named when she was going to divorce Kelly."

Barry whistled.

"That might explain Mrs. Kelly's calling a lawyer named Hood."

The city editor glanced back at the file.

"Especially since he was her lawyer. Gimme that big red book."

Barry obeyed.

"Hood. Graduated from Yale. He wasn't at home, so they tried to get him at his club. Law firm: Hood & Loring. Gimme the telephone book. Just a hunch, but—Okay. The Riverside number's the home of Horace Loring. Somebody wanted legal advice that night, and wanted it bad."

"Who?"

"Use your imagination."

"Mrs. Kelly."

"Sure. She took the call from Betty Barclay—"

"She didn't. The butler took it."

"All right. Then he gave it to her, and she went wild. You want to know why the Oriental's 'cagey.' Well, that's why. He's trying to shield Mrs. Kelly. What you've got to do now is to check up on that alibi."

They discussed ways and means. Also, they discussed Barry's other activities. Barry showed Ernie his advertisement, and the two responses. Harwood was skeptical.

"We might get the number of the taxi that killed the woman. What then? That was two hours after the murder. And, if you have the good fortune to get the taxi—the one that brought the midnight caller to Kelly's, if there was a midnight caller—how's the driver going to know who his fare was? No, son; that's beet-tops!"

Barry defended himself.

Harwood was searching for that inevitable pipe.

"You're enthusiastic," he commented, "and that's something. Now, beat it."

He smiled, almost as warmly and kindly as Winslow had done.

"You've got a nose for news," he went on. "When I hired you, I said you'd get a raise if you were worth it, and fired if you weren't. Well, I think you're worth a hundred a week."

"That's swell of you," Barry glowed, "but I don't see what I've done—"

Wednesday brought the desired letter from Bad Nauheim, and three more from gentlemen who hoped to receive the fifty-dollar reward. With these, as with their predecessors, Barry made appointments beginning at four o'clock Thursday. Mrs. Ridder's envelope contained a check drawn to her order by "the old man," and endorsed simply "Eleanor Ridder." "She's a good business woman," Barry said to himself, ironically.

It hadn't occurred to her to doubt the sender of that cablegram, or what he meant to do with the money. "Winslow'll take it," Barry told Peggy, "and take his retainer out of it. Then he can give up his check for the rest. Winslow's name will be on this check when it's returned to the old man, and, of course, that's all right."

"What'll we do with Winslow's check?"

"Start a bank account in your name. Then I'll go to you when we need funds, and tell you what for. Give this letter to Jack, and tell him it ought to make him ashamed of himself."

It almost did. Even more than the communication Barry had shown him, this answered Jack's question as to whether his mother cared. "I'm so glad you've got work," she had written, "and so glad you're taking an interest in that boy. It shows I've always been right about you. And it will help you, too. We can't help others without helping ourselves — making character."

The real Jack Ridder answered that letter without prompting, and the "fake" Jack Ridder posted the answer.

At three Thursday afternoon, he was in his rooms, preparing to quiz the reward-seekers. Barry had reason to know the ways of imposters. The first caller was just that.

The second applicant was waiting by now — a lunch-counter clerk who'd run out of his place "to see what the excitement was about," but hadn't seen much. On his heels, came an exceptionally interesting Jehu. He was an M. D., he told Barry, "but business is bad, so I'm out to make a little."

"A little business?" Barry asked.

"Well, I haven't hit anyone yet."

He was thirty-five, neatly dressed, and wore glasses, and his English was pure and undefiled. Moreover, he had a scientific instinct for observation. "I saw the taxi," he said, "and the woman step off the curb. I knew the cab would hit her, and it did."

"Get the number?"

"Of course," the visitor answered. "Took it down as the runaway crossed in front of me."

He produced a prescription pad.

"O26017."

Barry wrote it in the note-book to which he had transferred the number of Kelly's lost latch-key.

"How did you happen to be in lower Fifth avenue at that hour?" he asked.

"I went down—some time before—with a very singular person."

"Why do you say he was singular?"

"He acted strangely. At least, I thought so at the time. I picked him up in a tobacconist's shop a few minutes before twelve o'clock. 'Where do you want to go?' I asked him.

"'To a drug store,' he answered. "There's one in the Flatiron building, at Broadway and Twenty-third street. Take me there.'

"It seemed a long way to go for a drug store, but I supposed he knew someone, or wanted a special prescription. Anyway, it was none of my business, and I took him. He gave me a fifty-cent tip, and went into the Broadway entrance. Five minutes later, while I was wondering where to go next, I saw him walk out of the door that opened on Fifth avenue. I started back uptown.

"About half past one, I picked up a couple that wanted to go to the Brevoort, on Eighth street. I took 'em, and was making for Times square again when the traffic lights stopped me at Sixteenth. Then I saw the woman and the cab. The whole thing was over in a minute. The taxi struck her, went right up on the pavement, smashed a lamp-post, and kept going. But I got the number."

"Then, of course, I jumped out of my cab and went to the woman. She was beyond help, though. And, by this time, a policeman had turned up, and I decided to move on." He smiled. "A taxi-driver learns to avoid the constabulary."

"So you didn't give the cop that license number?"

"What for? The woman was dead, and arresting some poor, scared taxi-man wasn't going to do her any good. I started back to my cab, and whom should I bump into but the chap I'd driven to the drug store. He was coming out of Sixteenth street, so lost in himself that he hadn't even noticed the crowd. 'Hello,' I said. 'We seem to be meeting a lot tonight.'

"'Who are you?' he asked, curtly.

"'I'm the taxi-driver who took you to a drug store on Twenty-third street a couple of hours ago.'

"'I never saw you before in my life. You've made a mistake,' he said. "I live in this street, and I've been home all evening. You never drove me anywhere.'

"'Have it your own way,' I said, and climbed into my buggy.

"I wasn't mistaken, and neither was he. He was in kind of a daze until he recognized me, and then he got almost hysterical. You'd've thought I'd accused him of murder."

The doctor rose from his chair.

"Maybe I'm doing that," he added. "There was a murder that night, you know; in that street. But, of course, you know. Your ad didn't fool me."

"Then why did you answer it?"

"Well, my conscience has been hurting me a little." He smiled again. "That's my number, and my name and address, if you want me."

"There's your fifty dollars."

"Thanks."

"Would you mind leaving me a receipt for that money?" Barry asked.

"Certainly not."

"I like to have vouchers for what I pay out."

The doctor nodded, and went to the desk.

Barry was halted by an exclamation.

"What is it?" he asked.

The doctor turned to him.

"That's the man I saw in Sixteenth street," he said. "Believe it or not, that's the man."

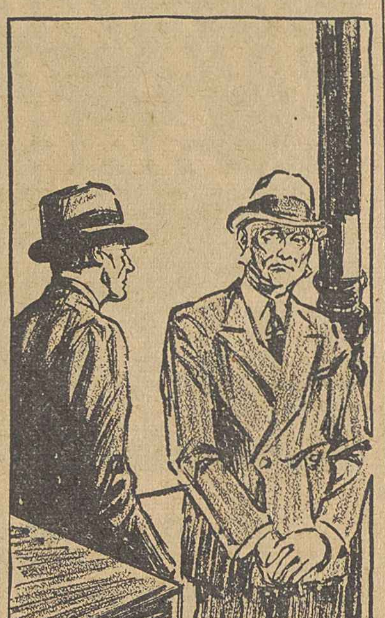
"I must see Pat at once," Barry thought.

"Damn it," he raged; "I can't blame her for wanting to protect her own father! And it doesn't make the least difference, anyway. I'd go on loving her if she'd committed the murder!"

Once more, he asked himself what right he had to assume that either Pat or the Judge had anything to do with that murder. Pacing the floor, he reviewed all his evidence again, and reached a conclusion as to what it indicated. That brought him back to the idea of himself as Pat's ally. "If I can make her see that," he said. "She's got to come clean, though. And she will. When I can tell her about Peggy, and make her understand that the truth will clear that boy. And then we can get together to clear the Judge. There might have been a whole lot of reasons—decent ones—for his going to Kelly's that night."



"Who Are You?" He Asked Curtly.

Evans phoned at ten.

"I've been having dinner with Kelly's chauffeur. His name's Nolan." Evans said, "and he don't talk much. We got pretty thick tonight, though."

"Suppose we start for home at nine in the morning," Barry said.

Precisely at nine the next morning, he called Pat and told her he was coming. "Something important's happened," he said.

"Why not lunch with us?" Pat suggested.

"We're lucky if we get out by two," Barry told her. "And anyway, I want to see you alone."

"I'll expect you at two," she said.

Evans was waiting, and full of his evening with Nolan. "I didn't dare ask a question," Evans reported. "He's the suspicious kind. I think he drinks, though, and a fellow that drinks is bound to loosen up some day."

"Buy him all he can hold," Barry counseled.

Conversation lapsed after that. Evans' passenger was rehearsing his part of the coming interview. "I'll bet she knows now what it's about," he speculated.

And she did.

Pat indicated a chair. "Sit there," she bade him. "It's awfully warm—for June."

"Pat—" he began, still standing. "I've stumbled on something."

"So I gathered," she observed. "And I assume that it has to do with your pet murder."

"It has to do with your father."

She smiled.

"I suppose you've discovered that he killed Kelly."

"I've discovered that he called on Kelly that night."

"Wonderful!" Pat mocked. "Who told you that?"

"The taxi-man who drove him downtown."

Pat listened almost indifferently.

"It was sheer chance," Barry concluded. "I hadn't any idea of implicating your father. But now he is implicated. You must see that."

"At the expense of one equally innocent?"

"What does your father stand to lose by telling the truth? We know now that Kelly was alive when Rogers left the house. I'm just as sure that he was alive when the Judge left. But he must have been killed soon afterward. We've got to find out who killed him."

"Why?"

"Because now we've two men to clear."

"If my father saw Kelly after the boy left—"

"That clears Rogers."

"And puts it up to my father."

"Your father didn't kill Kelly," Barry said. "I know that, and I know why he went to that house."

"Really?"

"He went to protest against filing that Jefferson street decision."

"And then filed it."

"He had to. The pressure was too strong for him. He'd been struggling against it for weeks. In politics, even honest men have to listen to reason sometimes. Your father had to."

"How interesting!"

"In spite of the hullabaloo, he wrote the decision. And, that day, came the bitterest onslaught of all. The Globe had a direct accusation. Your father was frantic. Just before midnight, he telephoned Kelly from the tobacconist's shop, and went straight to Sixteenth street.

"He told Kelly this verdict would ruin him. Might ruin everybody. For more than an hour, he pleaded and argued. No use. Kelly was adamant. Your father gave up at two o'clock, left Kelly—alive—and filed his decision next morning, before anyone knew that Kelly was no longer alive. That's the truth, isn't it?"

"So plausible that telling it publicly would probably end my father's career."

"And so?"

"And so I think we'd better forget it."

"You mean that, to continue your father's career, you'd let this boy go to the gallows?"

"Of course, I don't."

"There's no chance of that, and you know it."

"There's always a chance."

"We'll face that when we come to it."

"We've got to face it now, Pat."

"Why?" she pleaded. And then, passionately: "What right have you to demand that we do anything? You don't even know this boy."

"I do."

"Since last—"

"And you know him. He's the real John Clarke Ridder."

That gave her pause.

"Whoever he is, he's got a wife and a baby. I can't risk his life to save you, or myself."

"If he's convicted—" Pat began.

"I won't have him go through that. If the Judge doesn't tell the truth now, I will."

Pat's mouth became a straight, hard line.

"And who'll believe you?" she asked.

"I can prove—"

"Listen, Pat—"

"You listen. I've warned you to stop prying into our affairs. You went right on. And now you—the scum of the earth—"

She was losing her head.

"Now you come into my house with a story villifying my father and threaten to tell it if we don't. My reply to that is: Go ahead! And, an hour after you do, you'll be arrested for robbing the mails!"

They stood facing each other.

"That letter you opened before Willetts—the letter with the hundred dollar bill—that wasn't addressed to Barry Gilbert, was it?"

"No."

Pat crossed the room.

"I'm sorry," she said, "but you asked for it."

"I did, but I can't take your answer. I can't because—God help me, Pat—I'm in love with you."

She gave no sign of hearing.

"I'm an adventurer," he went on, "and you're a lady. The realest I ever met. That's why you can't do this."

No answer.

"I couldn't," Barry continued, "and I'm a fake gentleman. I wanted to. I wanted to drop the whole business. I told Willetts that after you'd warned me last Friday. And Willetts said, 'That isn't done. A gentleman's got certain responsibilities.' He has. That's a tradition stronger than we are."

Pat turned, at last.

"This is funny," she said. "You—"

"It is funny," he cut her short. "I'd like to behave like a loafer, and I can't. I'm willing to go to jail to save this boy—and I'm the scum of the earth. You're a lady. How about you?"

"If it were only me—" she broke.

"Your father's a gentleman. How about him?"

Before she could reply, the double doors opened.

Judge Hambidge was standing there—erect and soldier-like.

"Mr. Gilbert's right, Pat," he said. "I release you from your promise to me. I can't go through with it. I'm too tired, and full of self-loathing."

He turned squarely to Barry.

"You're right about everything. About my going to Kelly that night, and the reason I went. He let me in himself. We quarreled violently. So violently that he took a revolver out of his desk drawer and kept it in his hand. Then I walked out of the house. But you were wrong about just one thing, Mr. Gilbert. I left the house at two o'clock, but, when I left it, Kelly wasn't alive."

More Limestone for Better Crops

Proper Use of Lime Very Important to Growth of Legumes.

By L. B. MILLER, Associate in Soil Experiment, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Revival of limestone spreading will pay extra dividends if farmers will use more legumes on the limed soil. On an experiment field the fertility level of limed land was raised an extra 50 per cent through the use of legumes.

A more normal rate of limestone use is expected to be resumed this year as a result of the improvement in farm income.

During the depression years tonnage fell off.

In addition to adding organic matter to limed soil and raising its general fertility level in that way, a catch crop of clover or other legumes lessens leaching losses and cuts down erosion damage. The direct benefit of limestone to grain crops is relatively small. Full returns from liming cannot be had without the frequent and regular use of legumes in the cropping system.

This is shown by results on the Carlinville experiment field in Macoupin county, Illinois. Since 1921 a two-year rotation of corn and wheat has been grown on land which received five tons of limestone an acre. Prior to treatment this land was medium acid, typical of the level soils of that section.

On one portion of the limed area sweet clover was seeded each year as a catch crop in the wheat and plowed down the following spring for corn. An adjacent area, although limed, has been cropped with corn and wheat in the same way, but with the use of sweet clover.

Yields have averaged 22 bushels of wheat an acre and 47 bushels of corn in the rotation where sweet clover has been used as a catch crop. In contrast wheat made only 13 bushels an acre and corn only 34 bushels in the rotation where no legumes were used. In other words the clover improved the fertility level of the soil 50 per cent.

Here is evidence that the farmer who has gone to the trouble and expense of liming his soil is cheating himself if he does not plan a regular rotation including clover which will save and make the most of his investment.

Science Colors and Improves the Onion

Agricultural science now takes another step forward in serving the farmer by painting onions a golden brown color, and thus saves the farmer thousands of dollars a year. In this paint job, the scientist uses minerals instead of ordinary paints, and the onions grow golden-brown in color with thick skins instead of a lemon-yellow with thin skins. The painting is done with the application of copper sulphate on muck soil.

In 1929 growers asked why onions grown on certain muck soils had thin skins of pale yellow color instead of thick brownish skins. They didn't keep and wouldn't sell.

Experiments were started in the greenhouses at the college of agriculture, Ithaca, N. Y., with muck brought in from the deposits where onions grew with poorly colored skins. There it was learned that under controlled conditions, copper sulphate would produce the kind of onions wanted. Results were then checked out in the open.

The scientists recommended 300 pounds of pulverized or snow grade copper sulphate to the acre. Most growers mix it with their fertilizer, spread this mixture on the muck, and harrow it into the surface layers.

Oats as Feed

Oats are not so high in fattening properties as corn. However, oats are very desirable as part of the grain ration, especially for breeding animals and growing young stock, says the Rural New Yorker. On a strictly nutritive basis oats contain an average of about 16 per cent less starch and sugar, or as the chemist calls them, carbohydrates; about 1 per cent less fat, but a little over 2 per cent more crude protein than corn. On the average oats contain about 15 per cent less total digestible nutrients than corn. Corn contains an average of about 1,714 pounds of total digestible nutrients per ton and oats an average of 1,408 pounds.

More Colts

More than 900,000 horse and mule colts have been produced the past year, largest number in recent history. High prices for horses have stimulated production for past three seasons. Heavy demand exists for young mares, accrding to the bureau of agricultural economics. Any considerable increase in colt production will result in a supply of work animals three or five years hence somewhat in excess of number now on farms. Producers of horse and mule colts for sale are advised to study closely trend of next few years, also use mechanical power, in order to adjust production to future demand.

Body Tells Tales About Its Owner's Emotional Upsets

"Organ Jargon" Is Clue in Discovering Ailments

THE human body sometimes turns tattler and tells tales that its owner would never reveal by word of mouth. Such tale-telling, in which the internal organs are spokesmen, is described by a psychiatrist, Dr. Douglas Gordon Campbell of the University of Chicago in a report in a recent issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

"Organ jargon," Doctor Campbell calls this tale-telling, quoting from the Viennese psychiatrist, Dr. Alfred Adler. This does not mean the kind of "organ recitals" sometimes indulged in at sewing circles when the conversation turns to operations, gallbladders and appendixes.

"Organ jargon" is what goes on in certain perplexing ailments for which the physician can find no material cause and no successful medicines. These ailments, it is estimated, make up two-thirds or more of the cases coming to practitioners and general clinics.

Organs Are Affected.

The patient complains of a too rapid pulse, or digestive disorders, or impaired sexual function. Yet careful examinations show that there is nothing wrong with the organs complained of except that they are not functioning normally.

As Doctor Campbell sees it, they are telling tales of social or emotional disturbances that the patient fails to put into words. The organ jargon is a "kind of language by which a patient expresses his attitude to some problem of social adjustment confronting him."

The social adjustment may be caused by the loss of money or the birth of a child who takes from the patient his or her accustomed place in the spotlight of family attention.

Whatever the adjustment, it causes emotion in the patient. Some experience emotion as a "mood"—a so-called psychic experience, Doctor Campbell explains. Others experience an emotional reaction which is a physiological experience.

Valuable Finds in Astronomy Made by Amateur Students

WASHINGTON.—The fascination of amateur astronomy lies, in no small part, in the possibility that one may make original contributions to the oldest of sciences. In August, 1933, a British vaudeville performer, Will Hay, discovered a remarkable white spot on the planet Saturn.

And a Japanese melon patch worker in California, Masani Hagata, received a medal from the Astronomical Society of the Pacific in 1931 for his discovery of a new comet. Both men were amateur astronomers observing with their own small instruments.

Mr. Hay, fellow of the Royal Astronomical society, who takes the role of a mirth-provoking schoolmaster as his routine stage skit, has just written a book, "Through My Telescope," which tells in simple language some of the facts of astronomy which most people want to know.

New Stars Found.

Sir Richard Gregory, editor of the most famous of all British science journals, Nature, writes the foreword to Mr. Hay's new book.

Says Sir Richard in part:

"Some of the most interesting discoveries in astronomy have, indeed, been made by non-professional observers, who may only be called amateurs if the term is rightly understood to mean people who take up a subject voluntarily, but not that their work is superficial or defective in the sense of being amateurish.

"Professional astronomers are so closely concentrated upon routine work that new celestial objects or phenomena are often first detected by voluntary observers."

One-Man Movie Theater Invented by New Yorker

WASHINGTON. — A one-man motion picture theater, which could be completely operated by a single attendant, including ticket selling, the making of change, taking the admission fee, and working the projecting machine is described in a patent (No. 2,032,410) granted here to A. N. Goldsmith of New York city.

By a novel arrangement, the conventional ticket booth would also become the projecting room in which one person could run the whole "show." Use of fireproof film would be used to eliminate the fire hazard. The film would be of small size so that a complete two-hour show would be contained on a single reel. This eliminates the need of two or more projecting machines usually required where larger film is used, says the inventor.

Sunlight Beats Strongest on Tops of High Mountains

This paradox of solar physics was brought down from the heights of the Andes by an exploring party of the Smithsonian institution headed by C. P. Butler, says Science Service. With instruments packed up steep trails, they found that the sunlight at the top of Mt. Aunconquilcha, almost 20,000 feet high, was nearly one-sixth greater than at sea level. Yet in the middle of the day the temperature hardly rose above the freezing point.

Cardui Helped Three Times

"I used Cardui, when a girl, for cramps, and it helped then," writes Mrs. Ike Wright, of Sealy, Texas. Next, after marriage, she reports having taken Cardui when she felt weak, nervous and restless before her children were born. And during middle life, it helped her again.

"I was miserable," she explains. "I did not have an appetite. I was very blue and upset. I remembered Cardui had helped me, so took it again and soon began to pick up. I ate and had more strength. I kept up the Cardui and did not have any more trouble. Is it any wonder that I recommend Cardui to all my friends?"

Thousands of women testify Cardui benefited them. If it does not benefit YOU, consult a physician.

At the End of Our First Year

This issue marks the end of the first year The Times has been under its present management.

When I came here a year ago I was a stranger to practically every person in Montevallo. But I did not remain unknown to local people very long.

Many of you greeted me with a cordial interest and wished me good luck and success.

This interest you showed made me glad. It gave me enthusiasm for hard work which I knew would be necessary in making and keeping a good newspaper in the community. I have found that the friendliness of the people has grown steadily, and I want all of you to know that I sincerely appreciate your kindnesses.

When I came here the mechanical equipment of The Times was in bad condition. It has been necessary to expend a considerable amount of money to improve the mechanical facilities. All of the improvements planned have not yet been done.

Meanwhile, as time goes on, I shall strive to make The Times a better paper. My aim is to make it an exponent of the community's every interest.

Altogether, I am pleased with my first year of newspaper operation in Montevallo. I am delighted with the good friends I have come to know.

I thank everyone who has been so kind as to help me in any manner, whether it was in business given me a kind word spoken, or a cheerful greeting when things were blue. I thank you honestly.

This issue of The Times is the largest we have published since taking charge of the paper. We particularly thank those business concerns who have cooperated and made possible this Business Review of Montevallo.

Looking toward another year of association which we hope will add more and more to the cordial and pleasant relations among us, we pledge you "Bigger and Better TIMES for Montevallo."

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS ITEMS

The Home Economics III girls of Montevallo Training School took as a house project the imprvement of the department's bedroom. This project was under the direction of Mrs. Peggy Ford, a student teacher. The following plan gives the work, cost, and accomplishments of the class:

Purpose—To make the bedroom more convenient, more comfortable, and more attractive.

Jobs to be done—Wash and dye curtains, refinish floor, make dressing table, paint screen, paint table and chairs, recover chairs, wash windows, choose accessories.

New things to learn—Recover the chair, make dressing table, how to dye curtains, choose accessories.

Itemized costs—Dye, 15c; material for chair, $2.45; material for table, $2.45; map, 25c; lamp, $1.65; waste paper basket, 10c upholstery tape, 32c; cushions, 19c tacks, 5c wire, 10c; 2 pictures, 30c, total $8.01.

The comments made by teacher, student teacher, members of other classes, and visitors indicates that much has been accomplished.

The Whaley Furniture Co.

OPERATES ONLY EXCLUSIVE FURNITURE STORE IN THIS TERRITORY

The opening here of the Whaley Furniture Company's store, several years ago, was one of the best boosts Montevallo has received from a trade standpoint in years, as the opening of this business here makes it unnecessary for the public in this territory to leave to secure hte best lines and prices in furniture.

In fact those who are interested in purchasing furniture will find that their prices are as low as the larger stores in the cities offer, and the Times desires to point out that those who do their trading here at home are helping to boost Montevallo in a very effective way.

The many who will receive bonus checks, will find this company in a position to give prompt service, as it is understood that a great many veterans and their families plan to add new furniture to their homes at this time and in order to promptly supply the demand, they are adding to the stock, and it will be of interest for all to call and see the complete displays.

The stock consists of furniture, house furnishings, radios, Crosley electric refrigerators, and all other lines that a person would expect to find in any other up-to-date furniture store.

R. E. Whaley, owner, came here from Birmingham at the time he opened this business, and his store is indeed a credit to the town and a convenience to everyone who lives in this section.

Montevallo Brick & Tile Co.

The Montevallo Brick and Tile Company, located at Aldrich, is one of the largest manufacturing concerns in this section of the county.

They manufacture face and rough brick, and a person has only to call at their yard and see the up-to-date facilities and examine the finished products to know that all lines manufactured are the best standard lines.

This is a home enterprise. Owned and operated by home people, and local citizens can do much to help boost this up to date concern by telling their friends who live in other sections about the high character of their products.

Luther Shaw, manager, has cperated this business for the past 7 years, and the large payroll paid out weekly is contributing much to the prosperity of this section.

He takes a very active interest in civic and church work.

Bobolink Beauty Shop

OFFERS SPECIAL BEAUTY SHOP SERVICE TO PEOPLE AROUND HERE

Before the Bobolink Beauty Shop purchased a new permanent wave machine, inquiries were sent to a number of the leading shops in the larger cities of the United States, asking "What, in your opinion, is the best machine to buy?"

The replies were overwhelmingly, "Buy Thermique." The Bobolink has since this urchase featured the Thermique method of permanent waving. The attraction to this machine is heaterless, feather weight attachments, time clock precision, plus comfort and time saving. This firm first gives test curls to insure the patron satisfaction.

In addition, thorough investigation was made to obtain a solution that was entirely safe for miladys hair, result: Mode Paree. This modern and up-to-the-minute shop offers the ladies of this trade territory the identical service they would receive if they were to go to the nation's largest city. The only difference being, Bobolink does not charge exhorbitant prices.

It has been suggested by the manager for patrons to make appointments by phone to avoid waiting.

THE MASTERPIECE OF TIRE CONSTRUCTION

AVOID accidents—take no chances—buy your tires on Proof of Performance. Make sure that you and your family will be safe! Skidding, blowouts and punctures caused more than 37,000 accidents last year. Many of these accidents could have been avoided with safe tires.

PROOF OF GREATEST NON-SKID SAFETY

A leading university made 2,350 tire tests and found that the new scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread stops a car up to 25% quicker than other tires.

PROOF OF GREATEST BLOWOUT PROTECTION

Every year, since Firestone developed the Gum-Dipped Balloon tire, Firestone Tires have been on the winning cars in the gruelling blowout test of the Indianapolis 500-Mile Race.

PROOF OF GREATEST ECONOMY

Firestone engineers designed the new Firestone High Speed Tire for 1936 to give you up to 50% longer non-skid mileage. This is proved by our own test fleet records and the fact that the world's largest transportation companies, such as Greyhound, to whom safety and tire economy means business efficiency, use Firestone Tires. This is further proof that they are the safest, most economical tires ever built.

Why risk an accident when it costs so little to protect lives worth so much? Equip your car today with new Firestone High Speed Tires—the Masterpiece of Tire Construction.

J. A. Brown's Enterprises

Operates Seven Different Business Concerns in This Territory; All are Popular.

We mentioned above that J. A. Brown operated eight different lines of business in this section, but after a re-count we find we were wrong, there are seven lines, as we had failed to take in consideration that he is a cotton buyer.

The lines represented are two Golden Rule stores, which for years have been popular trading places. He has two up to date ice plants, one in Montevallo and the other at Calera, where the public is supplied with the best in pure ice.

He is wholesale and retail distributor in this section for Independent gasoline and oil, this business is being operated under the name of Acme Oil Company.

Few men have worked harder or done more to help make Montevallo a popular cotton center than he has and is doing. He operates an up to date cotton gin, and offers the highest possible cash prices for all cotton brought here, and many thousands of dollars in business is brought to Montevallo annually on account of his providing an extra good market.

Each of the different lines of business he operates are conducted on a strictly business basis, and the public has learned from experience that when they make any business transaction at any one of his concerns that they will get full value, and a service that is indeed pleasing, as he has established each of these lines on the basis of fair and square dealings, and his determination to please the public appeals to everyone.

Mr. Brown established in business here in 1906, and is making an outstanding business success.

Palace Service Station

The Palace Service Station is one of the most popular stations in this territory. It is located near the center of the business section. Is in a convenient place for everyone, and added to this they offer only the best nationally known brands.

Shell products are sold exclusively, and the many motorists in this section who have tried Shell gas or oil, have found that this is one of the best nationally known brands and the good service they are giving is adding greatly to the popularity of this station.

Goodyear tires is another nationally known line carried exclusive here. There are more Goodyear tires sold than any other brand, which shows that they give the public the best of service.

They also wash and grease cars and offer every service that the public would expect to receive at an up to date service station.

Inzer Reid, owner, has operated this station for several years. His father is Dr. J. I. Reid. He attended the University of Alabama, and is so well and favorably known to all home folks that no introduction is necessary.

It is sufficient to state that all his friends are proud of the splendid success he is making with this business.

Sheriffs can collect the increased feed bill allowance provided by recent legislation, according to an opinion issued by the Attorney General's Department last week. The appropriation for feeding prisoners is not affected by the budget act, it is claimed.

Rebuilding Cement Plant At Leeds, Ala.

Air conditioning of important sections of the industrial plant will be a feature of the extensive rebuilding program to start in June at the Leeds, Ala., plant of the Universal Atlas Cement company, United States Steel corporation subsidiary, according to L. M. Funderburg, superintendent of the plant. The Leeds mill was the first portland cement plant built in the Birmingham district.

The improvements include a new concrete stock house with capacity of 164,000 barrels of cement, the construction of which will require the employment of between 300 and 400 extra men; electrically operated quarry shovel with capacity of five tons per minute to replace hand loading in the quarry; a new stone crusher with double the capacity of the present one; entirely new grinding equipment for both raw materials and final grinding; new unit coal pulverizer for each kiln, eliminating storage of pulverized coal and its consequent danger from fire; new shops, offices and laboratories.

Work on the stock house begins in June and is expected to be completed in September. The entire program is scheduled for completion early next spring.

The improvements, Mr. Funderburg said, will increase plant efficiency and improve working and living conditions.

Merchants & Planters Bank

Total Resources Over Two Hundred and Seventy-Five Thousand Dollars. Making Fine Progress.

The Merchants and Planters Bank was organized in 1902, and during this long period of time it has been safely managed through panics and depressions and the statement recently published shows that the institution is in a strong ifnancial position, and also that it is enjoying a splendid growth.

The combined preferred and Common stock total $25,000.00, deposits $236,956.16, and the total resources are $275,996.16.

Not that strong banks like the Merchants and Planters needed to offer an additional guarantee to depositors, but to cooperate with banking officials at Washington and other banks throughout the country, they offer a guarantee on all deposits to $5,000.00 through the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The directors includes such well known citizens as Dr. J. Alex Moore, F. H. Frost, Dr. T. H. Napier, W. P. McConoughy and J. P. Kelly.

The Enduring Protection in Brick Construction

The Great Chinese Emperor, Chi'in, 200 B.C., has many notable achievements to his credit. None, however, rank with his great brick wall—1200 miles—which kept the Tartar hordes out for so many years and still stands today.

Modern builders who are seeking for both beauty and enduring strength might do well to pattern after Chi'in and use brick. The same brick that repelled invaders will successfully keep out extremes of heat and cold. The enduring brick that protected generations will shelter great-grandchildren. The same beautiful brick will delight the eye of mankind long after the hand that laid it is a memory.

are refined at Mobile, Ala.

They are refined by a brand new refinery at Mobile, Ala., and if you try either of these brands one time you will then know that they give perfect satisfaction and long mileage per gallon.

Each gallon of gasoline you use that is refined in Alabama, you are helping to add to the wealth of your home state, instead of some other state.

To Station Owners who do not now sell these brands, we want to state that you will find it to your interest to call and investigate the advantage of handling them. If you desire, write Mr. Tucker, state gasoline inspector, about the high character of these brands.

To Motorists who do not now use one of these brands, we ask you to try them. We are certain that you, like hundreds of others, will become regular users.

Towery Motor Company

Sell Ford Cars and Operate Modern Garage. New Ford's Very Popular.

In publishing this special edition to tell about the advantages Montevallo has to offer, the Times takes pleasure in calling attention to the Towery Motor Company, Ford dealers and operators of a complete one stop service station and garage.

The garage is one of the best equipped in this territory. Some of the best mechanics in this section are employed here, and they are in a position to do work on all makes of cars and do the work promptly.

They offer every service at the service station that the public would expect to secure at a modern place, and their good service appeals to everyone.

Ford cars are more popular this year than at anytime since Ford cars were first introduced. Many people in Montevallo and this section have purchased a new Ford this year, and all state this new model is decidedly the best Ford they have owned.

All who have not had the distinct pleasure of driving a new Ford for 1936 will find it time well spent to call and be their guest at the wheel.

G. T. Towery, manager, has operated this business for the past year and a half, and his good service is attracting many new customers to his widely known business.

Montevallo Drug Company

Is Largest and Most Complete Drug Store In This Territory. Offer Exceptional Service.

Any review of Montevallo business would be incomplete without referring to the Montevallo Drug Company's store, which is the largest in this entire territory.

Visitors to Montevallo for the first time cannot help but be impressed with the extent of the business. Everything in drugs is carried and in a great variety, and few, if any stores in this section of the south have a larger seating capacity to accommodate patrons of the fountain.

And not only do they have a large seating capacity, but the seats are full, often several times during the day, as everyone enjoys to call here for a cold drink or ice cream, and also to enjoy the fine hospitality of Mr. Cowart and assistants.

It is indeed interesting to call here any afternoon or evening. You hear "hello Tom", hello Mary," for this is a meeting place for hundreds of people, who greet their friends, and discuss the latest news and happenings of the day.

Z. S. Cowart, owner, is to be congratulated for operating a business which is such a fine asset to Montevallo, and also a convenience to the public. He together with his brother, Cecil, operate two modern drug stores at Calera.

Walter M. Shaw, Insurance

WRITES INSURANCE OF ALL KINDS; OFFERS HELPFUL INSURANCE SERVICE.

Mr. Shaw writes insurance of all kinds, and devotes his entire time to this work. In fact he does more than just write an insurance policy. When any policy holder has occasion to put in a claim against a policy he has written, he makes every effort to see that they secure a settlement which is fair both for the policy holder and the insurance company he represents.

It is this service which is winning for him the confidence and good will of everyone. Many local people turn all of their insurance problems over to him.

Mr. Shaw is district manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, and has the distinction of being a member of their $250,000 club a number of times. This is a distinction that hundreds of agents for this company aspire to, but very few accomplish this goal. Mr. Shaw also has the distinction of operating the oldest established agency in this territory, having conducted this business for ten years.

In addition to his business, he is very active in civic work, and Montevallo and this section does not have a more progressive citizen than he is.

F. W. ROGAN

LARGE STOCK FURNITURE, HARDWARE, UNDERTAKING DEPARTMENT.

F. W. Rogan operates the oldest established retail concern in Montevallo, and it is also one of the most popular.

He established this business in 1892, and his good service to the public and efforts to give extra good values is winning for him the confidence and good will of everyone.

His stock consists of very complete lines of furniture and hardware. Both of which are very complete and strictly up-to-date.

The undertaking department is a feature of the business, and they have every modern convenience for carrying out every detail of this work.

In addition to their regular stock they are certified dealers for the Sherwin-Williams Paints and Varnishes and the Westinghouse line of electrical appliances, specializing in refrigerators and washing machines.

KLOTZMAN BROTHERS

Klotzman Brothers—Joe and Sam—have operated their dry goods and clothing house here for the past 10 years, and it is not an idle boast to state that no town the size of Montevallo in the state can boast of a more up to date dry goods and clothing store.

Everything to wear for all the family is carried here and in a great variety, and with a store like this here there is no need for any citizen of this section to leave Montevallo to trade, as they have the stock, and not even the large city stores offer lower prices.

There might be a reason for people from larger cities to come here to shop, but decidedly there is no reason for home people to leave Montevallo to shop for dry goods and clothing.

They are offering an unusual large stock of everything to wear at this time, and the public will find that a visit to their store at this time will be of much interest.

In addition to the dry goods and clothing stock, they also carry a fine line of hardware, which is a convenience to their many customers.

It is not amiss to state that this large and well managed store is a credit to Montevallo, and a great convenience to all who live in this section.

Jeter Mercantile Company

Carry Complete Stock General Merchandise. Is Also Funeral Director.

The Jeter Mercantile Company is the largest and also the oldest retail business concern in Montevallo. The business was established in 1900, and during these many years, it has always been one of the leading retail concerns in this territory.

The stock carried consists of dry goods, clothing, shoes, groceries, hardware, etc. In fact, the stock is so complete in all lines that the public can secure everything to wear for all the family, and also about everything used on the farm.

Many people prefer to trade here on account of the fact that they can do all of their shopping under one roof, which does away with the necessity of having to shop at several different stores, and on account of the many lines and large volume of business, they are in a position to offer exceptional values, which also is attracting many customers.

They are also funeral directors, which is a very important feature of the business. Few people care to read about the details of an undertaking department, yet it is a satisfaction to know that modern provisions have been made to take care of this very necessary work.

M. P. Jeter is so well and favorably known to all the people in this section, that no introduction is needed. It is sufficient to state that his up to date store is doing much to help popularize Montevallo as a trade and business center, as many shoppers are attracted here from other sections on account of the large stock and low prices.

Hayes Chevrolet Company
Montevallo

The DOLLAR STORE

IS ONE OF MONTEVALLO'S MOST POPULAR SHOPPING CENTER.

Those who drive to the business section of Montevallo after night are at first attracted to the Dollar Store, as the large neon sign in front of the store is kept lighted, and it adds much prestige to the town's business section.

Ike Nathews, owner, goes to the expense and effort to keep his store attractive. At frequent intervals a window trimmer from Birmingham is brought here to keep the window displays up-to-date, and they are also lighted at night, and create much attention.

Mr. Nathews has been a resident of this section of Alabama for thirty-five years and has operated this store for about eight years, and it is not amiss to state that his determination to keep his store up-to-date is a great aid to help popularize the town as a trade and business center.

No one devotes more time and effort to help work for the good of the town, than he does. He is never too busy with his own business to help work for any worthy cause that is for the good of the town or the public.

Helping boys and girls to have every advantage in athletics, in the schools, might well be termed a hobby with him. He has probably done more in this regard than anyone else, and all Montevallo citizens greatly appreciate his efforts.

E. Baer Dry Goods and Clothing

CARRY LARGE and COMPLETE STOCK OF DRY GOODS. IS A FINE PLACE TO TRADE

Mr. E. Baer has been catering to the public here in Montevallo for the past five years, and that the public appreciates his efforts to offer popular lines in dry goods, clothing and shoes at low prices is shown by the large number who shop here daily.

The store is filled almost to completion with stock, which is one of the largest carried in this section, and a great many people find it a convenience to do their shopping here on account of the complete lines.

This store not only enjoys the patronage of many local people, but a large number from other sections call here to take advantage of the complete stock and low prices.

Mr. Baer enjoys a wide acquaintance throughout this territory, and his up-to-date store is a spendid asset to the business of Montevallo.

McCulley Grocery Company

Carry Large Stock of Groceries and Offer Free Delivery Service.

Some say that it is necessary to be where hundreds of people pass your store daily to do a large business, but T. E. McCulley has proved that this is not entirely necessary, as he has many customers from all sections of this territory.

He attracts shoppers to his store through good service and fair prices. And all enjoy to call here on any business.

He has the distinction of being Montevallo's youngest business man. He is only 21 years old, but is old in experience, as he has been connected with the grocery business since he was fourteen and has successfully operated this business for the past eighteen months.

HAYES CHEVROLET CO.

The Hayes Chevrolet Company is known far and wide. First, for the reason that it is owned by Jack Hayes, second baseman for the Chicago White Sox, and second, for the reason that they operate the largest garage and service station in this section of the state.

They operate two Chevrolet sales rooms and garages, Montevallo and Clanton, and salesmen for this organization cover a large territory.

A complete one stop service is offered here, and this is indeed a convenience to motorists, as they can drive their cars here and secure service desired.

At the present time they are offering a large number of used cars, and veterans who receive a bonus check, and who desire to purchase a used car, will find it time well spent to call here and see the display of cars, which have been thoroughly overhauled in their shop.

The new Chevrolets for 1936 are proving to be the most popular model Chevrolet has yet offered. All who have purchased one are strong in their praise of their good performance and low cost of operation.

Barney Burnett, manager, has had charge of the Montevallo business for the past two years, and through his enterprising efforts, the business is growing and expanding.

This organization has one of the best sales forces of any like organization in the state. Among the personnel of the salesmen are Bob Reid, former owner of the garage here, and also a rpresentative in the legislature. Also Emmett Waldrop, Ike Harrison, Johnny Hardy, Clyde Cosper and Burr Harris.

J. R. SIMPSON

J. R. Simpson has represented the Birmingham Memorial Company here for the past six months, during which time he has had monuments installed in cemeteries in this section.

The Birmingham Memorial Company is said to be the largest retail concern of this kind in the country, and on account of the large volume of patronage, they are in a position to offer very reasonable prices.

Another feature that enables them to offer low prices is the fact that they are allied with four large concerns who do the manufacturing work, and they have the latest and most modern equipment to finish the work economically.

One of the latest and newest pieces of equipment is the Carborundrum, a mechanical device with which they can finish monuments in any styles and at a great saving.

Mr. Simpson has a catalogue of all the different styles in monuments, which includes inexpensive headstones to the finest monuments made, and he invites those who are interested to call and get complete details.

A monument placed at a grave is the last thing that we can do for our loved ones, and a well constructed monument will last on throughout the ages, and insures that those whom you love will not be forgotten.

W. C. Weems, Insurance

WRITES INSURANCE OF ALL KINDS, OFFERS EXCEPTIONAL SERVICE

Any review of the business interests of Montevallo would be incomplete without refering to W. C. Weems, who for years has served the public in this section in the insurance business.

He writes fire, automobile, liability, and all other lines of insurance, and his good service during the many years he has catered to the public in this line, is winning for him the patronage of many people.

All have learned from experience that when he writes a policy that it will be correctly written, and also that it will be with a company who pay any just claim promptly.

In addition to his insurance business, he takes a very active interest in lodge work. He is trustee of the local Masonic lodge, and is widely known throughout the state for his activities in this work.

Wilson Drug Company

Offering the Best in Drug and Prescription Service; Is a Popular Place.

The Wilson Drug Company's store is the oldest established drug house in this territory. The business was started by P. C. Wilson in 1918, and the store is known far and wide as a place where the best in drug and prescription service can be had.

The store is up to date in every particular, and the stock consists of everything that a person would expect to find in a modern drug store.

The soda fountain is a popular feature of the store at this time. As the weather grows warmer, more people call here each day for a cold refreshing drink.

A large number of tables are provided where the public can enjoy cold drinks or ice cream. The store can well be described as community headquarters, as this is a popular meeting place for both home folks and visitors.

Mr. Wilson served Montevallo as Postmaster for 3 years, but on account of the increased patronage at the store, he found it advisable to resign this position, so that he could devote his full time to this business.

Eugene May, Jeweler

Expert Jeweler and Watch Repairer; Offering Complete Service.

In publishing this special edition to tell about the advantage of trading in Montevallo, the Times takes pleasure in calling attention to Eugene May, and his up to date jewelry repair business.

He has operated this business for several years, and his good work is winning the patronage of many people from a large territory.

Those who need work in this line will find him in a position to do it promptly, and in a manner that will be most satisfactory.

He is secreary of the local Civic Club, and is never too busy with his own business to help work in every way possible for the good of Montevallo.

At the meeting of the Men's Bible Class here Sunday morning Dr. A. W. Vaughan, head of the English Department at Alabama College, was the speaker. He was presented by Luther Shaw, who presided and led the singing.

LUCAS GROCERY

In writing about the business interests of Montevallo, The Times takes pleasure in calling attention to the Lucas Grocery Company, which is one of the best known retail concerns in this territory.

The stock carried consists of everything in groceries, and the fact that they carry the best lines, it is appealing to a great many people.

Mr. Lucas has operated this business for one year, but has been associated with Montevallo business for 10 years, and his experience in catering to the public in the grocery business has taught him that it is economy for his patrons to buy the best in groceries.

However, we do not wish to imply that this is a high priced store, for such is not a fact, as he offers the best lines at the lowest possible prices, and judging from the large number who trade there each week, that the public fully appreciates his efforts to serve them.

In addition to groceries he also carries a complete line of feed. The widely known Jazz feeds are featured.

Kirk Lucas is so well and favorably known to every person in this section that no introduction is necessary. It is sufficient to state that through his progressive efforts, he is doing much to help make Montevallo such a popular trade and business center, and his store is indeed a credit to the town.

High School Band In Radio Program

The Alabama College radio program over Station WAPI, Sunday afternoon from 3 to 3:30 featured an address by Dr. M. L. Orr and selections by the high school band. Dr. Orr spoke on the Summer school program, of which he is assistant director. He is also director of the training schools here. The band is in charge of York Kildea, of the Alabama College music faculty.

And Everything In Hardware

WHITE HARDWARE CO.
WANTS YOUR HARDWARE BUSINESS

Hicks' Variety Store

Carries a Large Stock of 5c and 10c Goods; Is One of Montevallo's Busiest Stores

A person has only to call at the Hicks Variety Store to know that they carry a large and very complete line of variety store goods.

In fact the stock is so complete in all lines that they have practically everything that a person would expect to find in an up to date store of this kind, and the same low prices are offered as those charged by the 5c and 10c stores in the large cities.

Anticipating an unusual large trade for the summer months on account of veterans bonus, they are offering one of the largest stocks they have displayed at this time of the year.

Mr. and Mrs. Hicks have an up-to date store and it is a real convenience to the local public.

White Hardware Company

The Only Exclusive Hardware Store in Montevallo; Is Popular Trade Center.

Stanley White came to Montevallo from Uniontown about three months ago and bought the hardware business formerly operated by Pat Kroell, and since taking charge of the business he has enjoyed a patronage that has by far exceeded his expectations.

His stock consists of everything in hardware that the public would expect to find in an up to date hardware store, and a visit here will convince anyone that the lines are complete and up to date.

A complete line of farm implements are also carried. In fact he has about everything in stock in this line that farmers need to make a crop with.

At the present time he has a special display of electric fans and garden tools, etc., on display at the front of the store, and many other seasonable lines are also featured in the store.

Since coming here he has made many warm personal friends, and takes a very active interest in civic affairs.

Montevallo Cafe & Bakery

New Place Becoming Very Popular; Operating Up-to-Date Bakery.

P. E. Woolley has operated the Montevallo Cafe and Bakery less than one year, but during this short time he has built up a patronage that is indeed remarkable.

The bakery is up to date in every respect. Bread, pies, cakes and pastries of all kinds are made, and their high quality is winning the approval of everyone.

The cafe is a real feature of the business. Short orders are served at all hours, and the regular meals are fast becoming very popular. In fact those who dine here one time will go away praising the good food and good cooking.

Those who have not tried a regular meal here, will find it time well spent to call the next time they are hungry.

This up to date business is adding greatly to the popularity of Montevallo as a trade and business center, and it is indeed a credit to the town.

Mr. Woolley is so well and favorably known to all local people that no introduction is necessary. He was born and reared here, and few men enjoy a larger local acquaintance.

Montevallo Cleaners & Dyers

Modern Dry Cleaning Plant Haberdashery and Laundry Agency; Rendering an Unexcelled Service.

L. D. Gilbert has operated his Montevallo Cleaners and Dyers plant here for years. In fact this is the oldest established business of this kind in this territory and also one of the largest.

In addition to his dry cleaning business, he also has a complete men's store. Everything in men's suits and furnishings are carried, and he also makes a specialty of taking orders for tailored suits.

Few business men make a greater effort to gain business through good service, than he does. When any garment goes through the dry cleaning department he makes sure that the work is as near perfect as possible before it is delivered to a customer.

It is this painstaking effort that is winning and holding the patronage of a great many people, as they know in advance before sending work here that they will get good service.

In fact no town in the state, this size can boast of a place where better work is turned out daily.

In addition to his business he takes a very active interest in all civic affairs. He is past Commander of the local American Legion, in which position and also as just a member, he has and is doing much to help work for the good of this worthy organization. He is also a member of the Civic Club.

City Shoe Shop

Has Up-to-Date Equipment and Offers Prompt Service and Reasonable Prices.

Mr. W. C. Hamm came here last January an dtook charge of the City Shoe Shop, and since coming here he has won many patrons through the good service that he gives each one who call here for work.

The shop is equipped with the latest and most modern equipment, which places him in a position to do work while you wait, and customers do not have to wait long.

Before coming here Mr. Hamm had had years of experience in the shoe repairing business, and his good work is appealing to a great many people.

Atlas Service Station

Offers A Complete Service; Has Hydraulic Lift For Greasing Automobiles.

The Atlas Service Station is located on one of the most prominent corners in town, in the business section, and it is also one of the busiest stations in this territory.

They sell Standard gasoline, and oil, and feature the latest system of specialized greasing, which is attracting many customers to their place. They also sell Chrysler and Plymouth cars. Both are very popular here.

Atlas tires are fast becoming one of the most popular tires sold in the state. They are made to stand up under the strain of the hardest usage, and they are also sold at reasonable prices, and those who have not tried one will find it time well spent to call and try one.

Pete Givhan, manager, has had charge of the business for the past year, and his good service together with the high character of the products he sells is winning many new patrons for this station.

"The Story of Wool and Mohair"

How wool and mohair are processed and woven in modern factories is depicted in a new sound film produced by the Ford Motor Company and now available to educational societies, schools, clubs and other organizations upon request. The film is entitled "The Story of Wool and Mohair."

Through the visual medium of the sound slide film, a comprehensive study of the textile industry is presented. The story begins with the early history of sheep and goats and continues with a presentation of modern methods of processing the wool and mohair. Sorting, scouring, dyeing, spinning and weaving operations are all pictured and explained.

Linking the wool industry to automobile manufacturing, the story continues with pictures of fabric wear and color testing devices used on automobile upholstery and views of upholstery at work on automobile bodies. The automobile industry annually requires the wool from about 2,400,000 sheep and mohair from 270,000 goats, the film states.

Distribution of the educational film is to be made through Ford dealers who in most cases will also supply projection equipment. The film is the first of a series of illustrated educational studies for which plans have been made by the Ford Motor Company.

Utilizing the latest developments in sound slide film equipment, the educational subjects are produced with recorded explanations and appropriate musical accompaniment.

Seeking Both Benefits

"Contentment is better than riches," said the readymade philosopher.

"True," replied Mr. Dustin Stax; "but my observation is that a man who is rich has a better chance of becoming content than a man who is contented has of becoming rich."

Just Like a Native

Jake—I understand Frank is learning French. Can he speak it?

Shorty—He can speak it like a native.

Jake—Well, that's fine.

Difficult Advice

"Can you laugh at misfortune, as philosophers advise?"

"Perhaps I might learn," answered Senator Sorghum. "But why deliberately cultivate a bad sense of humor?"

Cochrane Is Certain Tigers Will Regain Vigor Come July 4

EVEN though he could not believe his ears, the reporter felt that he had something for which to be thankful. He rendered thanks for not having to believe such an oversized set of lugs as those which waved in front of him, and returned resolutely to his task.

"Don't," he coaxed the gentleman, "you mean Christmas? You know that's the day when Santa Claus comes along. Maybe he could unload you a few such knick knacks as a third baseman who could hit or an outfielder who could field. From what I've seen of this outfit of yours, you certainly could use something like that, and the quicker you get it the better."

The gentleman did not twitch an ear at such blasphemy. He had been balancing his weight on his left foot, so as to provide some solace for a bruised right instep. Now, while he repeated the words which had caused all the trouble, he shifted back to the right dog again. The reporter noted this effort to ease the ache of a left-leg charley-horse.

Mickey Cochrane

"Maybe we can settle on Labor day, then," he offered to compromise. "Your gams already are approaching that state of decrepitude which comes from extremely old baseball age. So are those of some of your more estimable and high-priced hired men. Think of what is going to happen when the ground really gets hard. Sure, that September holiday is the one you mean. Then you'll have only another month to go, and—"

There was a wistful look in the eye of the gentleman who now was fondling three big black bats. The reporter understood that, too.

"Hnnh," he said. "So you're just a great big boy, are you? All you want is the noise and the excitement. Well, all I've got to say is that the way that big Rowe blew up in the first frame today and the way that Lawson fizzled like a Roman candle and the way some of the other birds have been blasted lately, you should already be having all the fireworks you want. Why—"

"Nevertheless," said the gentleman. "Fourth of July is the day and" (he waved a bat invitingly) "if you would like to debate the subject any longer, there is—"

But there are some ideas the reporter could get even if it was only one of the Dodgers up there swinging. He hereby passes along the word that July 4 is the day on which the Tigers will resume their pennant progress. Also he desists from the writing of Sanskrit to inform the world that this information comes direct from the lips of Mickey Cochrane.

Simmons' Potential Power Is Reason for Prediction

Incidentally, the full facts of the case indicate that the Detroit leader has some very good reasons for setting this belated date for the return to form of the team that had been expected to romp through the American league race. By that time Schoolboy Rowe may be pitching in the manner to which he was once accustomed. Tommy Bridges may have overcome the tough luck which is besetting him. Hank Greenberg may be avenging his broken bones by breaking down enemy fences and there may be other success angles far more important than the fact that the 1935 and 1936 winners did not do their best until mid-season.

One of these angles could concern Al Simmons. Until recently, Al was going along in fair fashion. Then, because the fans who once cheered him so heartily now booed him with equal vigor, he tightened up while striving to obtain hits. The result was that the big fellow, who should be driving in 100 runs a season and making up for the absence of Greenberg, continually left runners stranded on base in time of need.

If—and it may be mentioned that he obtained two of the three hits the Tigers made in the Yankee series opener recently—he resumes swatting, with at least average vigor, Detroit should not slump below its present standing.

PERHAPS it is just as well that one Annie Oakley was unused at the Canzoneri-McLarnin fight. If Max Schmeling had taken advantage of the same free opportunities afforded G-Man Hoover and numerous other Broadway celebrities, he might have departed with ideas which eventually would have wrecked the peace of mind of thousands who already have invested upon Joe Louis' next triumph.

Canzoneri

By this I mean that Tony Canzoneri's upsetting victory over Jimmy McLarnin provides a ring lesson which should be carefully studied by any fighting man who finds himself facing long odds. Admitting that the raw courage of the gamecock who won seven out of ten rounds is a rare item in the human make-up, the fact remains that Tony won because he outsmarted the sturdier opponent even more than he outslugged him. Aside from any lesson Schmeling may have missed by not being there, another idea might be gleaned out of the evening which brought so many bright memories. It is that if the officials will rematch the two they need have no worry about what to do with their air-cooled Garden upon any summer evening they care to name.

Cincinnati hand books got taken for plenty when Bold Venture won the Kentucky rodeo. The tip was red hot in that town . . . Bill Terry ordinarily is a straightaway hitter, but when he has two strikes on him he chokes his bat and pokes at the ball. That is why he so often confounds the left fielders by dropping short hits into their territory . . . Jimmy Dykes uses zippers instead of buttons on his baseball uniforms . . . Although he is only twenty-six years old and probably better than ever, Barney Ross' blue-black hair is now flecked with gray . . . Cal Hubbard, the veteran pro footballer who became an American league umpire this year, has a funny stiff arm motion while indicating balls and strikes. But players say he is one of the most competent arbiters to come along in recent years.

Big League Sun Glasses Cost Sixteen Buckeroos

Chicago is pulling all wires to bring a heavyweight boxing show there in August . . . The sun glasses used by major league outfielders cost 16 buckeroos. A man in Boston makes them out of a special blue lens . . . One of the most excited persons in the Churchill Downs clubhouse was a blonde whose friend had given her a C note to bet for him on Brevity. She slapped $10 on Bold Venture's nose and held out the other 90 smackers. . . . The Giants call Adolfo Luque "Charley."

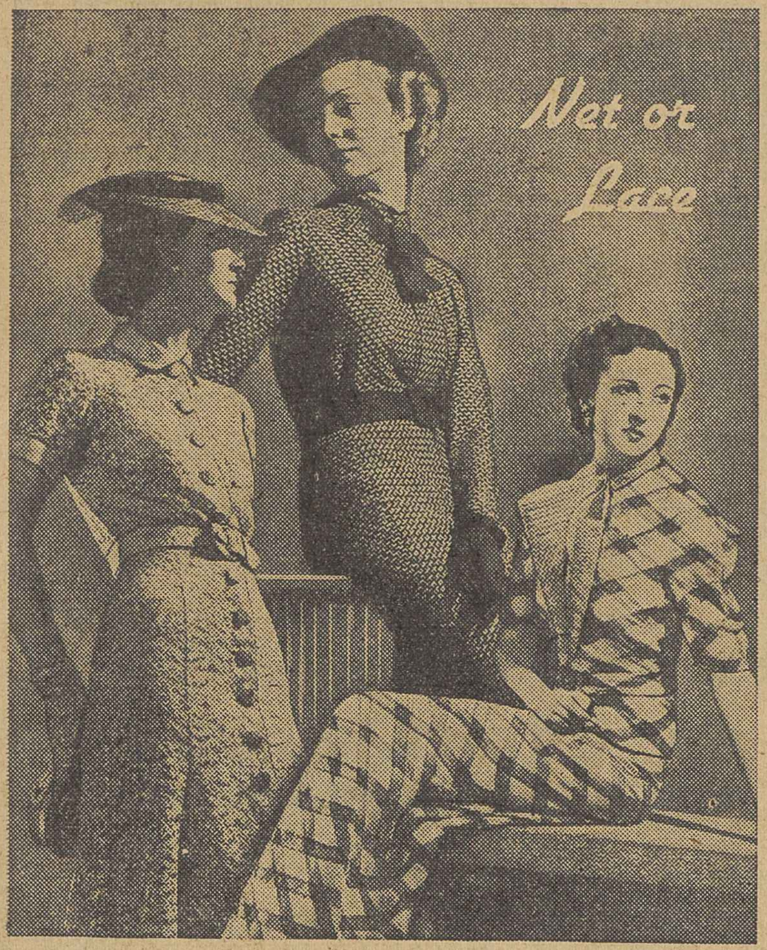
The boys about the barns have a new explanation of what happened to Granville in the Kentucky derby. Several days before the race the son of Gallant Fox posed for an advertising picture. The ad then appeared on the back of the program. "How could you expect a hoss that was put in such a spot to do any better'n last!" they argue. "It was a jinx" . . . Max Schmeling is an excellent mimic, and even though he cannot carry his art to such an extreme that he looks like a guy who can belt over Joe Louis, his imitation of Mike Jacobs is enough to wow all beholders . . . Although he is being boomed for mayor, Alderman Eddie Sullivan, one of New York's more celebrated sportsmen, probably would settle for a state senator's berth . . . Lou Gehrig has become a collector of first editions. He is particularly proud of a swell buy he made of a set of Chaucer while in Philadelphia with the Yankees this spring.

Did the papers carry all the details about why Mickey Haslin held out on the Bees? The truth seems to be that the Phillies promised to give him a big salary boost if he made good by May 1. So they traded him for Pinkey Whitney and cash on April 29, and the Bees offered him considerably less than the promised pay raise . . . Jockeys swear that one of their number who did very well rode the first half-mile of the Derby with his eyes closed . . . The real name of Freddie Miller, N. B. A. featherweight champion, is Friederich Mueller . . . Jeff Dickson says that the animal show is the best attraction offered at France's Palais de Sports. Everything is for sale, and customers depart with lion cubs, snakes and such things under their arms.

Could it be true that poolroom bookmakers are being assessed by collectors for a fund to fight the Dunnigan pari-mutuel bill? The gossip is that they are threatened with competition if they don't come across . . . Mike Vetrano, who played football at Mount Vernon and Dean academy and was a promising amateur heavyweight boxer, now wrestles on the Curley circuit . . . Nomination for the country's best track manager—Col. Matt Daiger of Pimlico . . . The Yankees still remember with awe the strong-arm stunts of Wally Schang, who now coaches the Indians. Especially the night on the train when Schang roared "I'm not to be trifled with!" and then tossed Babe Ruth into an upper bert'

Daytime Tailleurs of Net or Lace

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



A MOST significant trend in current fashion is the preference shown for materials that are decidedly sheer. Not only does the employment of dainty sheers pertain to the evening mode but the real news lies in the fact of their outstanding vogue for practical daytime wear. From all style centers comes the persistent report of the supremacy of nets, laces, marquisettes, tulles, mousseline de soie and various other media of like character.

The fact that designers have taken to tailoring net as if it were a heavier material is providing one of the most exciting and fascinating ventures e'er recorded in the annals of fashion history. To refer to the new tailored net suits and ensembles as costumes of sheer delight is no mere play on words for they are just that—delightfully cool, sheer and smart as can be to wear on a late spring or a midsummer day.

A jacket suit strictly tailored of net in black, navy, Dubonnett red or any other dark color is about the neatest daytime fashion one could choose for immediate and summer wear. The net employed for these practical tailleurs is of an especially firm and dependable weave which, however, does in nowise detract from its sheer coolness.

Tailored frocks of printed net (many suits are also of net prints) are among the big successes of the season. A very handsome dress of plaid-patterned net is worn by the young woman seated in the group pictured. It is ideal to wear to an afternoon bridge party. In fact it is the dress-ideal for most any daytime social event where one hopes to look smartly gowned and to keep cool at the same moment. The sheer frill that enhances this dress is also an important style note for these frilly accents are inevitable this season if you would be chic. By all means have a printed net frock, it is exactly the sort that you will love to be wearing the whole summer through.

Lace for daytime wear has come definitely into its own this season. White cotton alencon makes up stunningly, as you will see by the swank gown to the left in the illustration. For all its tailored simplicity, it takes its place charmingly and definitely for afternoon wear and the cocktail hour. This attractive model features the newest silhouette. It buttons demurely all the way down the front, and has a little stitched collar and cuffs of white linen. Lace has every advantage in tailored clothes, for it has pattern and texture in itself that allows for no extra trimmings or furbelows.

The tailored day dress centered in the group is as honest-to-goodness a product of the lace looms as the cobwebby laces and various cotton laces to which we have been accustomed. The dress is made of wool in one of the fabric lace types so much talked of this year. The colors are navy and gray with an accent of navy wool for the neckline and belt. Rosevienne of Paris is the creator of this high-style gown. The model wears it very smartly with a dark tulle Dache hat.

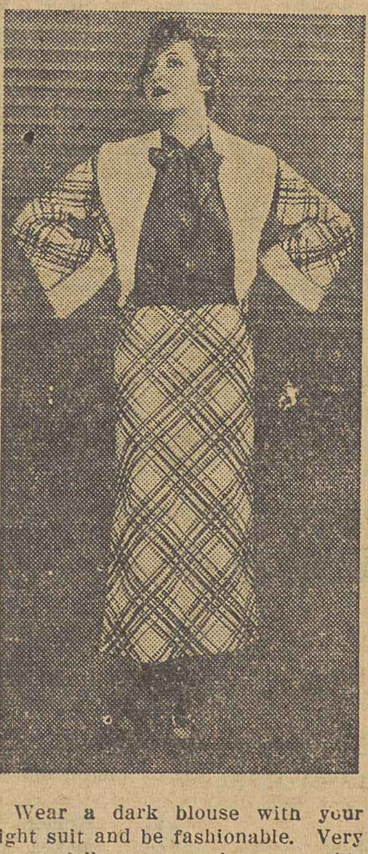
DARK BLOUSE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Wear a dark blouse with your light suit and be fashionable. Very smart folk are carrying out this edict by toning up their natural or white linen suits with blouses in navy, brown, black or Dubonnet red linen. The ensemble in the picture selected from among showings in the Chicago wholesale market district plays up the slogan now popular in fashion circles that three fabrics are better than one or even two for the spring and summer costume. In this instance the color of the blouse picks up the leading shade in the plaid of the jacket suit.

Amethyst Jewelry

The tremendous vogue for purple and violet in the fashion scheme has brought back the amethyst as a favored stone for jewelry. Amethyst necklaces and clips are being shown in Paris to wear with new gowns in these tones.

VEGETABLE COLORS DOMINATE STYLES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Vegetable colors will dominate the summer styles, according to a fashion preview held in New York. Rhubarb pink, wax-bean, parsley green, red cabbage and garden blue (bluebonnet) were shown in every gown or its accessories. Hats were all in color, contrasting with the gown.

Two organza frocks for lunching in town indicated that dark sheers will replace prints for summer wear. With a black organza tunic dress was worn a large Swiss hair hat in rhubarb pink, with black streamers at the back. Gloves in rhubarb and nail polish in rose, carried out the color of the hat.

The ensemble that won the biggest hand was a bicycle culotte of Mt. Airy cloth. Beautifully tailored and practically wrinkle-proof, this new fabric made its formal bow to the world of fashion. Under her pert, tiny straw fedora, the model wore a light tan make-up and rust nails and lips carrying out the off-red tone of her belt and scarf.

Coats shown for travel were of tweed or lightweight wool with exaggerated shoulders. Long coats were fitted at the waist; swagger, boxy models were finger length. Particularly effective was a swagger top-coat in red cabbage over a navy suit. The mannish line of the large rolled straw fedora was softened by a veil, both in navy. Shoes and bag were navy, and ruby lips and nails carried out the purple red tone of the coat.

Prints Are Designed for Girls Who Take to Golf

The golf-minded girl may carry a country club course on her back this season, if she keeps an eye on the new prints which manufacturers are introducing. Topping the list for novelty patterns introduced this season is the fairways print, ornamented with an entire 18-hole golf course. Designers also have taken inspiration from sea and sky to introduce figured cottons and silks containing piscatorial prints and the signs of the zodiac.

STAR DUST

★★★ By VIRGINIA VALE ★★★

IF YOU'D like to see a motion picture that has everything, be sure to be on hand when "Under Two Flags" is shown in your neighborhood. It's great! Ronald Colman donned his Foreign Legion uniform again for this one. Claudette Colbert gives a fine performance, and so do Rosalind Russell and Victor MacLaglen. In fact, the whole cast is good. And the story! No doubt you're familiar with it; it has been popular ever since Ouida wrote it, years ago. It's been dramatized and performed over and over again on the stage; it has been turned into a motion picture twice. But Twentieth Century Fox has probably done better by it than anyone else.

Garbo

Now that the reticent Garbo has broken down and talked and been photographed and been interviewed by reporters, almost anything can happen. Arriving in New York on her way back to Hollywood from Sweden, she made no effort to dodge newspaper men. She did her best to give a good interview but was so nervous that it was almost pitiful. After all, facing cameras and reporters is no easy thing to do, Microphone fright is a strange thing, as the news reels show you over and over again. Take the case of Nellie Grainger, the air line hostess who showed such remarkable courage when the plane she was on crashed not long ago. Her bravery saved two lives. But when she posed for the news reel boys she was so frightened that she could hardly speak!

Sylvia Sidney wanted to dodge the people who appeared to interview her when she traveled from Hollywood East, but she had a good excuse—make-up poisoning, an ailment that causes a good many of the stars to suffer, and in some cases does lasting damage.

These are the days when a talented child is a better investment than stocks, bonds or real estate. The greatest difficulty is that, provided you have the child, you've got to be a talented parent as well, for success is likely to spoil the child, and then movie and radio contracts go by the board.

Young Walter Tetley, who is fifteen now, and began his career when he was six, has the right kind of mother; consequently he is now heard on about 12 important network radio shows each week—Town Hall Tonight, the March of Time and Showboat among them. He has appeared with practically all of our best known actors. He has been earning about $1,000 a week for more than five years — and his mother allows him just one dollar a week for spending money.

Buck Jones

Buck Jones experienced one of his worst moments recently in Max Factor's studio. Buck is planning to do his next "western" in color, and wanted some advice on make-up for it, so he went, naturally, to Factor, who has specialized in Technicolor make-ups ever since Hollywood began going color-mad; he's responsible for the realistic effects in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." And though Buck has been in pictures for years, he was embarrassed almost to death when he walked into the salon and had to tell the hostess, in front of a lot of beautiful ladies, just why he was there.

Radio has done something to Fifi D'Orsay that Hollywood couldn't do. Her fiery temperament used to be the bugaboo of the directors for whom she made pictures, but when she gets up in front of a microphone, with some 200,000,000 people listening in, she doesn't dare blow up. No matter how she rages inwardly, she goes on without a break, and usually by the time the broadcast is over the rage is gone, too.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Spring may be here, but Paramount is getting ready for autumn by making a football picture . . . Bette Davis rushed home to Hollywood from her New York vacation, just in time to be asked to take a three-weeks' layoff, without pay . . . It's all in her contract; she works forty weeks a year . . . John Boles has just signed a new contract with Paramount, which calls for $50,000 per picture . . . Think of the income tax he'll have to pay!

Enduring Books Written by Authors Under 44

ATHENS, OHIO.—Best sellers are most frequently written by young writers between forty and forty-four years old, Dr. Harvey C. Lehman, of Ohio University, here, told a meeting of the psychology section of the Ohio Academy of Sciences.

When Doctor Lehman speaks of best sellers he does not mean those works that flare into popularity for a period only to fade out like a rocket or a hit-of-the-week song. He means those books that have sold in enormous quantities over a long period of time. "In His Steps," for example, published in 1896 by a Kansas minister, Charles M. Seldon, is said to have sold more than 20,000,000 copies. And it is estimated that 50,000,000 copies of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" have been sold.

"Such best sellers are books that make a very strong appeal to humanity in general," Doctor Lehman said. "In many instances they are books which appeal strongly to children and to semi-literates."

Women's Peak Earlier.

Books judged by critics to be among the world's best are also most likely to be written by authors between forty and forty-four, Doctor Lehman found.

Women writers are likely to publish their greatest works at a somewhat earlier age. Their peak is reached between thirty-five and thirty-nine.

This does not mean that beyond that age authors lose their ability to do creative writing. Good books are often written by writers of advanced age. Goethe was over eighty when he published the second part of the great "Faust."

"Best books have, of course, been published by authors of almost every chronological age level beyond early youth," Doctor Lehman said. "Literary masterpieces of the first rank have been published most frequently, however, by men who were not beyond their forties. The age curves suggest that it would be highly absurd to attempt to establish a dead line."

World's Oldest City Had Huge War Tower Described in Bible

That time amazingly stood still in this way in ancient Bible lands is revealed by latest excavations at that famous site, "the oldest city in the world," Tepe Gawra in Mesopotamia.

Searchers Find Ruins.

A joint expedition of the University museum, University of Pennsylvania, and the American School of Oriental Research at Baghdad, has found ruins of a big round temple-tower at Tepe Gawra. The sweep of an almost perfect circle of brick foundations 60 feet in diameter has been unearthed. Outlines of 17 rooms can be traced. This big round house was built about 4000 B. C.

The field director of the expedition, Charles Bache, identified this as a fortress because of thick walls, single entrance, and stone weapons still lying in some of the rooms. It has temple features, too, suggested by the plan of the central rooms.

The discovery turns archeologists to Bible history, where King Abimelech's wild and warlike reign ended in a fight at just such a temple-tower. That happened in Palestine, a little over a thousand years before Christ.

New Job for Pituitary Gland Found by Science

BOSTON. — Discovery of a new activity of the pituitary gland and possibly of a new pituitary hormone was reported by Dr. David Perla of New York city at a meeting of the American Association of Pathologists here.

The new hormone from the powerful but tiny gland in the head stimulates the spleen, red blood cell forming organ of the body. The spleen is endowed with enormous recuperative powers, so that when a part of it must be removed because of disease, or is damaged, the organ regenerates itself, forming new spleen tissue to replace that lost.

Roomy Beach Pajamas With Yoke, Sleeves, Front Panel in One to Facilitate Making

Hiding Places for Money Before Banks Were Used

The great abundance of ancient coins is due to the fact that there were no banks in those days, so persons were obliged to find hiding places for their wealth, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Underground burial in bags and jars seemed to afford the safety desired. A university expedition found 26,000 bronze coins in huge clay jars and rotting cloth bags while exploring Egyptian ruins; a French peasant digging in his barnyard unearthed 4,000 copper coins of the time of Louis XII; a chicken picking in the soil uncovered $5,000 in coins dating back several centuries. Two poor boys stumbled on a cache of United States gold coins in an old cellar of a sea captain's house in Baltimore. Coin collectors paid $22,500 for the coins at auction.

Annual Senior Class Banquet Held Friday Night

The Senior Class of 1936 held its annual banquet Friday night, May 22 at the Methodist church. A three-course dinner was prepared and served by the ladies of the Methodist Church.

A very unique and interesting program was planned and given by a committee with Helen Nix as chairman. Colonel Crow and his ambitious amateurs presented a delightful musical program over the Skimmed Milk hour.

Taylor Hardy, crooner; Mary Cobb Deshazo, blues singer; Dorothy Warren, opera singer; Reesie Mae Woolley, child prodigy; Anne Wills, Arthur Seale danced and sang together; Reno Villadsen, impersonations; Charles Finley, barnyard imitations; Billie Ruth Fitts, torch singer; James Black, and his one man band, and a quartet, Clifford Fulford, Taylor Hardy, James Black and Douglas Broyles.

Following the banquet a dance was given at the home of Marie Orr. It began at nine o'clock and was over at midnight.

The dance, which was a great success, was chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Orr, Miss Stephens, Miss Coke and Miss Utterback. Music was furnished by the Bama Skippers.

Progress Made In WPA Program

INTEREST OF CITIZENS GETS NEW GYMNASIUM HERE

Montgomery, Ala., June 2.—The foresight and public spirited efforts of city and county officials in Shelby Conuty are responsible in a large measure for the progress that section has enjoyed through the Works Progress Administration program, according to Ray Crow, state W.P.A. administrator, who announced that as a result of such state-wide cooperation Alabama has under way the largest public building program of any one time in the state history.

A total of 154 public buildings are under construction or have recently been completed by the works progress administration and will represent a permanent and tangible investment of $3,542,460 to the state.

In Shelby County, the WPA building program includes the construction of gymnasium and hangar at Montevallo at a total cost of $35,096. Of this amount, the sponsors, usually the city or county, contributed $6,281. The remainder represents the WPA investment.

Largest item in the new construction of public buildings program is the number of new school buildings and additions. There are 71 school buildings recently combuildings, several city halls and of new school buildings and additions. There are 71 school buildings that have recently been completed or are now being built. Included also are 18 armories in various sections of the state, 18 community buildings, six jails, five airport hangars, eight county office biuldings, several city halls and court house additions.

Aside from the building program, the state and counties, with the aid of the WPA are paving 450 miles of farm-to-market roads and carrying forward the gigantic malarial control program in which more than 679 miles of ditches have been excavated.

While the public building program was necessarily restricted to the amount and type of relief labor in the respective counties, Mr. Crow said, the program could not have attained half the size and importance without the efforts of local authorities, many of whom had blue prints prepared and titles to property cleared in preparation for the program when it opened last July. In many instances, also, the sponsors have employed skilled labor at their own expense, that was not available on relief rolls, as additional contribution.

Recently introduced by the Ford Motor Company, the new Ford V-8 convertible sedan with trunk, is expected to increase the popularity of the convertible models which in 1936 have received more public acclaim than in any year.

Gounty Agent' Says Grow Your Seed

Why buy Otootan seed or fail to grow them because you cannot buy the seed? Hundreds of Alabama farmers who formerly bought Otootans are now growing their own seed and in place of spending hard earned money are selling a few bushels of surplus Otootans. The yield of seed is low yet only 15 to 30 pounds of seed per acre are usually planted.

Grow your own seed so you too may have this leading soybean for hay, as a green grazing crop for hogs, poultry and as a soil builder.

Just a few single steps and most years you can produce sufficient Otootan seed. Here they are:

1. Where to plant—a. Plant Otootans between the hills in a few acres of corn, or b. plant between watermelon rows or between first year kudzu, or c. plant Otootans alone. Many farmers, if planting Otootans alone, plant in rows three feet apart and dropping 8 to 12 seed every 18 inches.

5. How to harvest—Otootans may tan for seed from cotton planting time until the first of June.

3. What fertilizers—Use either basic slag or superphosphate.

4. How to cultivate—Cultivate once or twice to control weeds and grass.

5. How to harves—Otootans may be left in the field until leaves have fallen and rush of harvesting other crops is past. If interplanted in corn the plants may be cut with a hoe or pulled, gathered up in bundles and flailed across the wagon body and later clean up the seed. The vines may be cut with a scythe or mowing machine and the seed beaten out with sticks if the beans were planted alone.

Plan now to produce sufficient Otootans for your farm in 1937 and a few bushels surplus for sale.—Yours very truly, A. A. Lauderdale County Agent.

Graduating Exercises At Alabama Collegs

At the graduating exercises at Alabama College Monday morning the honorary degrees of Doctor of Letters and Doctor of Laws were conferred upon Mrs. Dixie Bibb Graves and Miss Myrtle Brooke, respectively.At the same time certificates of appreciation of services spectively. At the same time certificates of appreciation of services were presented Edward Houston Wills, business manager and registrar and Walter Maurice Jones-Williams, engineer and superintendent of Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. Wills has been connected with the institution for 26 years and Mr. Jones-Williams for 31 years. Miss Brooke, head of the Sociology Department, has been a member of the faculty for 25 years.

In the awarding of diplomas 139 members of the graduating classes with Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music degrees were recognized, while 18 received the certificates for completion of the two-year course in secretarial science.

The main address was given by Associate Justice Joseph Winston Cox, of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, Washington, who was presented by President A. F. Harman. Dean T. H. Napier presented to the President the candidates for degrees and certificates.

Harrison D. LeBaron, head of the school of music, was at the organ for the academic procession and recession. York Kildea, of the violin department, rendered a solo in which he was accompanied by Elizabeth Blair Chamberlin, also of the music faculty. The invocation and benediction were given by Reverend A. J. Cox, pastor of the Montevallo Presbyterian Church.

This program closed the commencement exercises which began Friday with the meeting of the Board of Trustees and the reception of the president for Governor and Mrs. Graves and the graduating class. Dr. James Benjamin Green, of the Columbia Theological Seminary, delivered the Baccalaureate sermon Sunday morning.

Dr. Leary Coming Here This Month

WILL MAKE SPECIAL LECTURES DURING SUMMER SCHOOL

Dr. Genevieve M. Leary (below) director of Practice Schools at New Haven, Conn., will come to Alabama Collegeduring the first term of summer school for a week of special lectures. She will hold seminars on redirecting the elementary school program in terms of child and community needs, the teaching of the language arts in the new program, and recent developments in children's literature. Dr. Leary is widely known for her elementary school work, particularly in the fields of language, literature and reading.

DR. GENEVIEVE M. LEARY

The first special lecturer to visit the campus during summer term will be Dr. Laura Zirbes, professor of Education at Ohio State University, who is noted for her interpretations of progressive philosophy in terms of field problems. She will cnduct discussions in curriculum building, the use of the community in education and problems of re-directing teacher education.

In connection with the Progressive Education program, which coincides with the first term of the summer school, June 11-July 22, Alabama College is offering special conferences by these and other lecturers. The progressive education work, on both high school and elementary school levels, is in charge of Dr. Alive V. Keliher, chairman of the commission on human relations of the Progressive Eduation Association.

Shelby County Man Heads Committee

Ft. McClellan, Ala.—J. L. Appleton of Columbiana, Ala., heads this years Shelby County committee of public spirited residents who will assist local young men to qualify for enrollment in the coming Citizens' Military Training Camp, to be held at Fort McClellan, Alabama, From July 29 to August 27, 1936. He announced yesterday that several vacancies in Shelby County still exists.

Prompt action will be necessary to gain acceptance for the C.M.T.C. because of the large number of early applications being received at Army Headquarters at Fort McClellan, Alabama. Young men of good character and sound physique, between 17 and 24 years of age, who may be interested in attending this camp, should apply without delay to J. L. Appleton, or to the CMTC officer, Fort McClellan, Alabama.

All necessary expenses are paid by the government, including fare to camp and return, uniforms, wholesome food, athletic equipment, laundry service, and medical attention. Scholarships are being offered by various institutions of learning to be awarded to boys making the best showing while in attendance at this camp. No obligation for future military service is incurred by those attending these camps.

Short School Term In 51 Counties

REPORT GIVEN OUT BY THE ALABAMA EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Montgomery, Ala., May 28. — More than 205,000 rural white elementary school children in 51 counties of Alabama had less than a seven-month school term this year, Frank L. Grove, Secretary of the Alabama Education Association, announced yesterday. This number represents 82 per cent of the total enrollments in the state of rural white children in the elementary grades. These facts were determined from answers recently received at the Association's office from 65 of the 67 county superintendents. Included in the above number are more than 98,000 rural white elementary school children who had less than a six-months school term. This latter group includes the children from 24 counties.

Only three counties in Alabama, Dallas, Mobile and Montgomery, had a full nine-month school term for the rural white children in the elementary grades. Four counties, Greene, Hale, Jefferson and Marengo, had more than eight but less than nine months of elementary school, and seven counties, Bullock, Conecuh, Elmore, Macon, Perry, Pike, and St. Clair, had more than seven but less than eight months.

The returns also showed that two counties, Chambers and Russell, had less than six months of high school work, and that nine counties, Autauga, Chilton, Escambia, Marion, Morgan, Sumter, Talladega, Tallapoosa and Winston, had less than seven months of high school work. The short terms in the high schools of those 11 counties, together with 18 other counties that had less than eight months of high school instruction, seriously jeopardizes the chances of the seniors of this year to enter college next fall. Of the remaining counties 30 had more than eight but less than nine months of high school work, while only six, Dallas, Elmore, Greene, Mobile, Montgomery, and Pike, had a full high school term of nine months.

When asked how some counties were able to operate schools for longer terms than others, Mr. Grove explained that this advantage was gained from one or more of several reasons. In practically all counties that had less than a normal term donations and tuition fees were used to extend the term. Those donations consisted of money, supplies and janitorial services. Again, in more than one county some of the money allowed for overhead and capital outlay was used to extend the term. Moreover, some counties have special school taxes which only apply to the counties concerned, and a few counties had cash balances left from the preceding session which were used for term extension.

The counties which operated the rural elementary schools for white children less than seven months were as follows: Autauga, Baldwin, Barbour, Bibb, Blount, Butler, Calhoun, Chambers, Cherokee, Chilton, Choctaw, Clarke, Cleburne, Colbert, Coffee, Coosa, Covington, Crenshaw, Cullman, Dale, DeKalb, Escambia, Etowah, Fayette, Franklin, Geneva, Henry, Houston, Jackson, Lamar, Lauderdale, Lawrence, Lee, Limestone, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Monroe, Morgan, Pickens, Randolph, Russell, Shelby, Sumter, Talladega, Tallapoosa, Tuscaloosa, Walker, Washington, Wilcox and Winston.

Trustees Urge The Paying of Salaries

RESOLUTIONS MADE AT THE MEETING HERE FRIDAY

At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Alabama College Friday a resolution was adopted calling on the legislature, if it assembles in special session to appropriate adequate funds to pay in full the salaries of officers and faculty of the institution, pointing out that the present salary schedule was previously approved but that it cannot be paid in full by the college unless the state meets the appropriation. The board further agreed through the resolution to be subject to the call of President A. F. Harman in bringing the matter to the attention of the legislature. This resolution followed a discussion of the financial situation of education in the state in the president's annual report and at the meeting.

Members of the Board attending the meeting were Governor Graves, chairman, ex-officio; Dr. J. A. Kellar, Dr. George Vann, Fred Fite, Mrs. James Fitts Hill, L. Sevier, Bruce Beveridge, J. E. Delony, and W. D. Graves. Absent were W. B. Oliver, Samuel M. Johnston, Mrs. W. B. Peebles and Mrs. A. Y. Malone.

The members of the board were in the receiving line Friday evening at the annual reception of the president for the Governor and Mrs. Graves and the graduating class, while at noon Friday President and Mrs. Harman entertained the Board at luncheon in their home on the campus.

It is estimated that more convertible models of the Ford V-8 have been sold during the first four months of 1936, than in any corresponding period in Ford history. Especially popular has been the Ford V-8 convertible coupe. Trim, graceful, with an easily convertible top, this car places its accent on youth.

Labor Federation To Oust Nine Unions

Washington, June 1.—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor was reliably reported today to be planning to suspend its nine richest and strongest unions which have more than a million members.

The craft union group led by William Green, federation president, was said to be prepared to read out all of the industrial unionists who follow John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, and to be willing to sacrifice a third of the federation's membership and a much greater portion of its finances rather than effect a compromise.

Green wants to continue to organize industry by skilled groups while Lewis would seek to unite all workers, skilled and unskilled, by industries into one big union.

The craft unionists, it was learned, intend to suspend the charters of the nine industrial unions at the July executive council session, a power granted the council under the A. F. of L. constitution.

The groups in the powerful industrial combine include Lewis' 400,000 miners, Sidney Hillman's Amalgamated Clothing Workers, David Dubinsky's International Ladies Garment union, the Oil Workers, Typographers, Flat Glass Workers, Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, and Textile Workers.

Drive To Be Made For School Funds

Taking the position that the school problem is one that concerns all the people and is not a political issue, the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers has launched a drive to raise funds for conducting a state-wide campaign to acquaint the people with educational needs.

"A dime a member" has been adopted as the slogan for raising the fund "for the protection of our schools." Each of the thousands of members of P. T. A. units thruout the state has been asked to contribute a dime to pay expenses of a program designed to give the citizens the facts about school conditions.

"This is not a campaign to raise money for the schools," said Mrs. James Fitts Hill, state P.-T. A. president. "We want to get the real facts before the people. Naturally, such a campaign will cost some money, and we are asking each member to contribute a small sum to defray these expenses."

The letter announcing the 'dime' a member' drive declared that "nothing was done" by the legislature to assure a full school term next year, and explained the recent joint action of the P.-T. A. and the Alabama Education Association in abandoning the fight for "parity" in favor of earmarked funds for education.

Unemployment Situation Is Discussed

Again it is my pleasure and privilege to discuss with you something concerning unemployment compensation. Alabama's great governor, the Honorable Bibb Graves, saw fit to have introduced at the 1935 general legislative session Social Security laws. The Unemployment Compensation Law, which is one of them, is for the betterment of humanity. It tends to stabilize employment; it encourages the working man, as he has something to look forward to and something to fall back on in time of adversity, for he is building up a financial credit for himself and his family when he may be in dire need and in time of distress, as a result of being unemployed.

If Alabama did not have an Unemployment Compensation Law the employer would still have to contribute one per centum of his payroll direct to the Federal Government for the year 1936, and greater per centum in subsequent years; thus, the workers of Alabama would lose all of the benefits that come to them through such an Unemploynment Compensation Law by the fact that the employer could not get credit on his income tax for his contributions made to the State, whereas under the Alabama Unemployment Compensation Law the employer can, by making the contribution direct to the State, take credit against his Federal Excise tax up to 90 per cent.

We all know that the "dole" as such, is distasteful to the average self-respecting citizen, and we also know something of the aftermath of the so-called "dole system."

The average rate of benefits for the worker when he or she is unemployed is 4 to 1, that is, they may receive one week of benefit payments for each four weeks of employment. The average ratio for benefits that the worker receives in money for his contribution is about 10 to 1; thus, if he has a salary of $20 per week, his contribution would be twenty cents. His weekly benefits, when unemployed, are the basis of 50 per centum of his earnings, but not to exceed $15 per week. The $20 per week worker would receive $10 per wek, or better than 10 times his contribution. Does this not sound good, and does this not sound beneficial to the working man? These are actual figures I have been quoting.

Also, as a result of the Unemployment Compensation Act, the State has an Employment Service Bureau, which will be continuously at the service of the working people in this state, to help them obtain work should they become unemployed, as well as assisting them toward securing unemployment benefits. One of the features of the Employment Service is to help unemployed people secure work on the basis of the prevailing wage paid for the type of work which they are qualified to perform.

There are now thirteen states that have adopted Unemployment Compensation Laws, and it is my opinion that as fast as the legislatures meet throughout the other states of the Union, they will likewise adopt such laws.

The Alabama Unemployment Compensation Commission has now in the process of preparation rules and regulations concerning this law, and as soon as they are completed they will be published and distributed for the information and guidance of those interested.

Every cent contributed to the Unemployment Compensation Fund goes toward benefit payment, and not a dollar for administrative cost, as the entire operating cost is borne by the Federal Government.

Our greatest problem at the present time is to educate the public on this vital and important issue. It is therefore my earnest suggestion tnat those who desire further information regarding this act either call or write to the office of the Unemployment Compensation Commission at 623 Adams Avenue, Montgomery, Ala., where a courteous staff of employees will cheerfully furnish information asked for.—J. L. Kaufman, Unemployment Compensation Commission.

Sophomore Class Is Awarded Cup

The Sophomore Class was awarded the Class Cup at Alabama College by the Athletic Association for winning the most points in individual sports and team games.

The cup was relinquished to the sophomores by the Juniors who have held it for the past two years.

Class athletes awarded individual cups are: Misses Eleanor Lewis, Martha Dean, Carolyn Slade, and Ruth Joyce. The awards are in recognition of outstanding sportsmanship and ability on the field as well as scholarship. The committee making the selections is composed of old and new officers of the athletic association, class representatives to the association and the physical education faculty.

Alabama College Letters, pins and guards were awarded to outstanding class athletes at the same program, Miss Martha Dean, president of the association, making the awards.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Anderson had as their guests Friday Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Burch, Mrs. Shelby Jackson and Miss Lucyle Easterling, of Clio.

How Bonus Bonds Will Be Handled

POSTMASTER FARLEY GIVES INFORMATION TO VETERANS

Washington, May 23.—Postmaster General Farley predicted today that "payment on a great majority" of the bonus baby bonds "will be made within one week of June 15, the first date of payment."

Farley announced final plans for delivering the bonds to veterans and arrangements for veterans to cash in their bonds if they choose.

The bonds will be mailed out to the 45,000 postoffices June 15 from Washington and from the 11 federal reserve centers at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas, and San Francisco.

"The date of recept of these bonds at the various communities throughout the nation will depend on the transit time between the mailing office and the office of destination," Farley said in a prepared statement.

Mail carriers have been given instructions to "go out of their way wherever necessary with a view to effecting delivery," Farley said. The bond packets must be delivered to the veteran in person.

"If it is impossible to locate the veteran to whom the bonds are addressed," Farley continued, they will be held for 30 days at the postoffice of destination before being returned to the respective federal reserve centers and thence to the treasury department."

The bonds will be in $50 denominations with accompanying checks to cover the odd amounts.

To collect cash, the veteran must have his bonds certified through his local postoffice.

"If the veteran is personally known to the postmaster or designated employe, witnesses are not necessary," Farley said. "If he is not known, one or two witnesses who know the veteran and who are known to the certifying officer must sign the bonds in the space provided.

"Space is also provided in the bond for taking fingerprint impressions in exceptional cases. The method of identification is within the discretion of the postmaster. Postmasters will find veterans' organizations interested and willing to render all assistance possible."

"Upon the surrender of his bond at the postoffice, following proper identification, the veteran will receive an interim receipt until such time as he receives his bond payment, all of which will be by special treasury department check supplied to the paying postoffices."

Postoffices in 241 cities have been designated as paying centers for their districts, and 59 large city offices have been empowered to pay bonds issued outside their own districts.

Smaller postoffices will forward the certified bonds to the nearest paying postoffice, giving the veteran an "interim receipt" until he receives the cash. The small-town veterans will receive their cash payments from the nearest paying postoffice, where checks will be drawn and mailed at no expense to the veterans.

"Persons presenting bonds for payment to a departed veteran," Farley said, "will be instructed to communicate with the Treasury of the United States, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., as all transactions of this nature will be handled through that office direct."

Although the bonus bonds earn simple interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, Farley added, no interest is payable on any bonds redeemed prior to June 15, 1937.

Farley will give "full and complete information" about the bond payment, he said, on a nation-wide radio hookup on June 13.

Bible School Begins Monday, June 8

The churches of the community are cooperating in a community-wide vacation Bible school which will begin next Monday, June 8, and run through Friday, June 19. The school will be held at the Baptist Church. The hours will be 8:15 to 11 each morning. All the children of the community are invited to be present promptly at 8:15 next Monday morning. We are requesting the parents to cooperate fully in order that we may reach as many children as possible and that we may make the school a great blessing to the entire community. It is sincerely hoped that nc group in the community will foster activities that would conflict with this enterprise.

There will be classes for all from age 3 (or under) through age 16 (or over). All equipment will be provided free. A splendid group of voluntary workers will give their best to the school for ten days. The school is for everybody. We anticipate hearty cooperation on the part of all.

Plans For State Wild Life Federation

Montgomery, June 1 — With 30 county conservation councils either completely or partially organized, Commissioner I T. Quinn of the State Conservation Department, hopes to organize an Alabama Wildlife Federation early in July.

Thomas A. Ford, director of county conservation planning for the department, has been in the field organizing county councils for the past two months and expects soon to have councils established in more than half the counties of the State.

When a majority of the counties have been organized the representatives of the various councils will meet at the call of Commissioner Quinn and set up the State federation. This federation then will become affiliated with a National organization through which President Roosevelt hopes to develop the nation's natural renewable resources.

The counties in which councils have been organized include Jackson, Madison, Limestone, Lauderdale, Cullman, Morgan, Jefferson, Dallas, Calhoun, Etowah, Bibb, Marengo, Tuscaloosa, Blount, Houston, Geneva, Dale, Hale, Randolph, Chambers, Lee, Tallapoosa, Coosa, Chilton, Escambia, Autauga Barbour, Bullock, Lowndes and

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FACTORIES and farms in 15 states, in all parts of the Union, were affected by labor troubles which intermediaries were trying in vain to settle. Leaders of organized labor claimed that from 30,000 to 45,000 strikers already were out, but employers challenged the union claims that the strikes were effective.

Workers in six plants of Remington Rand, Inc., were out on strike after union leaders ordered a walkout at Syracuse, N. Y. They said 6,000 workers in the company's New York, Ohio and Connecticut plants were involved. Company officials asserted there were 4,200 affected.

Six thousand barbers in lower Manhattan, New York, were ordered to join 3,000 others in a strike which had spread over a wide area of Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn.

Striking seamen in New York were said to number 7,000 and there was a good deal of trouble over their efforts to picket the piers and the house of Mayor La Guardia.

Two hundred office workers and company police in Portsmouth, Ohio, were besieged in the strike-closed plant of the Wheeling Steel corporation; and in Akron, Ohio, employees of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company were arrested for violating an anti-riot law.

In other states the union leaders thus estimated the number on strike:

Arkansas—Three thousand tenant farmers.

California—One thousand celery field workers.

Oregon and Washington—Seven thousand loggers.

Wisconsin—Twenty-five hundred workers in various industries.

Minnesota—About 500 millwrights, fur and cereal workers.

Indiana—About 175 in various industries.

South Dakota—Three hundred butchers at Morrell packing plant, Sioux Falls.

Nebraska—One hundred highway workers.

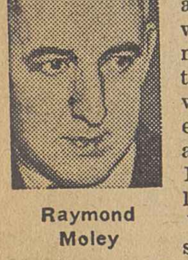
Vermont—Two hundred marble workers near Rutland.

RAYMOND MOLEY, who used to be considered the chief of the "brain trust," fears that his friend President Roosevelt may be destroyed politically by the radicals within the Democratic party who at the same time would "destroy moderation and the very system which he attempted to improve." In a speech before the National Economy league in New York, Doctor Moley said he saw confronting the Roosevelt administration these dangers:



Raymond Moley

1. That federal relief agencies will be turned into political machines to perpetuate the rule of state and local politicians.

2. The tendency, "all too prevalent in this congress, to engage in muckraking, marauding expeditions which destroy the liberty of all of the people while they seek to restrain the abuses of a few. These orgies of public castigation . . . may be means of furthering individual political ambitions, they may be build-ups for those with Presidential hankerings, but so far as the public interest is concerned they are simply sound and fury."

3. The tendency "of those in charge of the New Deal to overemphasize adherence to the belief in the philosophy of the movement and to minimize the importance of complete technical administration."

Doctor Moley defended capitalism; declared that already there has been a wide distribution of wealth in this country, and warned the average man that he eventually must pay the mounting bills for relief—that he is the "missionary being fattened for a cannibalistic feast."

FIVE justices of the United States Supreme court held invalid the municipal bankruptcy act of 1934, declaring it to be an unwarranted invasion of state sovereignty. Four justices dissented, these being Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo. The majority opinion was written by Justice James C. McReynolds. The case was brought by bondholders of a water improvement district in Texas.

The municipal bankruptcy act was designed to permit cities and other political subdivisions which found themselves in financial straits to effect a composition, with the approval of two-thirds of the bondholders or other creditors, whereby the indebtedness could be readjusted, scaled down, or, as Mr. Justice McReynolds put it, "repudiated."

THE United States treasury will undertake the biggest peace time borrowing operation in the nation's history, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau disclosed in an official announcement revealing that $2,050,754,416 of government securities will be offered the middle of June. This financing calls for an even billion dollars of new money, in addition to the $1,050,754,416 required to meet maturing obligations.

"FRANK O. LOWDEN of Illinois will be the choice of the Republican convention for President if he will accept the nomination." That was the confident prediction of a political observer who is usually well informed and close to sources of national party news. He declared there was a steadily growing demand from many parts of the Union for the nomination of the former governor of Illinois, who always has been popular with farmers and whose qualities of statesmanship are recognized generally throughout the country. Mr. Lowden is vigorous and hale, and he is always actively interested in the welfare of his state and nation, especially in the problems of the agriculturist.

Frank O. Lowden

CONGRESSMAN TINKHAM of Massachusetts is one of those Republicans who think the chances of their party for victory in November would be enhanced if a coalition of disaffected Democrats were formed and the ticket shared with them.

"The country is facing as great a crisis as it faced in the Civil war," he said. "This involves the very character of the government of the United States. The question is, 'Are the government and the institutions of the United States to remain American or become European or Asiatic?'

"This crisis is so great that it should eliminate all party lines, and the Republicans should nominate as Vice President a Democrat. I suggest that they nominate Alfred E. Smith."

SENATOR ROBINSON'S resolution authorizing the continuance of the Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tide harnessing projects was favorably reported by the senate commerce committee after Mr. Robinson had told the members the administration wanted the schemes kept alive as work relief measures

Senator Vandenberg of Michigan warned the majority leaders they had better not bring the resolution up in the senate if they really wanted adjournment by June 6, for he had 21 amendments to offer, and each one would lead to prolonged debate.

Robinson's resolution authorizes the President to appoint two boards of three engineers each to examine and make reports upon surveys that have already been made of the two projects. They would have to report to the President by June 20 of this year.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT starts on his trip to Arkansas, Texas and Indiana on June 8, and he told the correspondents it would not be a political tour. His speeches, he said, would be historical, dealing with early days in the three states. He has no slightest intention of stealing the show from the Republican national convention.

Mr. Roosevelt planned this trip some time ago so that he might take a cruise along the Maine coast in June with his sons.

ARABS of Palestine, rebelling against British protection of Jewish immigration, are causing Britain a lot of trouble. English soldiers fought real battles with the Arabs in several localities, and Jews throughout the Holy Land were arming themselves in self-defense. Casualties in the fighting were few, but the situation was so serious that Sir Arthur Wauchope, British high commissioner, asked the government for more troops.

A mandatory curfew was put in force throughout Palestine. British women and children were evacuated from Nablus, in Samaria, where British troops engaged a strong force of Arabs in a furious battle. The Arabs cut telephone lines between Nablus and Jerusalem.

EDWARD VIII is going to be crowned king of England at Westminster Abbey on May 27, 1937, the privy council having selected that date and the monarch having approved it. So the duke of Norfolk, earl marshal of England, put on his scarlet uniform and, accompanied by three kings of arms, heralds, pursuivants and trumpeters in gorgeous attire, went to St. James' palace, Trafalgar square, Temple Bar and the Royal exchange and proclaimed the coronation date.

A court of claims was appointed to determine who shall perform the services at the crowning, and it will be busy with this job for several months.

LEON BLUM, elderly and rather fragile leader of the French Socialists, will soon be premier of his country, and he is going to have a hard time living up to the expectations of all the leftists, who are making a national hero of him. The other day hundreds of thousands of French reds and pinks marched behind Blum or stood cheering on the sidelines, and pictures of the leader were carried in the ranks or sold by hawkers in the crowds. This was on the occasion of the traditional memorial ceremony in Pere Lachaise cemetery for the Marxist martyrs of the Paris Commune in 1871.

Leon Blum

M. Blum is said to be watching closely his publicity in the United States since his speech in which he intimated a desire to agree with Washington on the elimination of war debt discussions. He is hoping to be able to obtain loans from New York bankers. The Johnson law is naturally an insurmountable obstacle to France's obtaining any kind of credit in America, but as the Paris Midi pointed out Blum went out of his way to declare that France has not forgotten the war debt and fully expects to bring it up for discussion some time in the future.

ITALIANS celebrated the anniversary of their country's entrance into the World war with imposing ceremonies that included the promotion of more than half a million boys and girls in the organizations of young Fascists. Premier Mussolini presided over the "graduation," and after reviewing a great military parade, the Duce told the shouting crowds:

"The spectacle of the force of youth exhibited this morning on the anniversary of our intervention in the World war, the first phase of the Fascist revolution, has been magnificent and a warning at the same time. We are preparing the young armies of tomorrow for defense of the empire. Since they are animated by the Fascist spirit they will be invincible. This is the law of the revolution. This is the supreme will of the whole Italian people."

While his conqueror was thus engaged, Haile Selassie, deposed emperor of Ethiopia, was embarking at Haifa, Palestine, for England, on the British destroyer Capetown. Two sons and a daughter accompanied him, but former Empress Menen remained at Jerusalem. The exiled monarch, after a visit in England, intends to go to Paris, hoping to stiffen French resistance to Italy in the League of Nations. He may succeed in this, for the incoming Socialists regime in France will endeavor to restore the league's prestige.

THE office of transportation coordinator, held by Joseph B. Eastman, is due to expire on June 16, but Senator Wheeler of Montana had ready for introduction a resolution extending it for two years, and President Roosevelt was on record as approving some of its activities.

J. B. Eastman

It was reported in Washington that railway management and labor, both of which have opposed some of Eastman's doings in the past, might unite in an effort to block extension of the office, but Eastman said he had heard "nothing substantial" on that line.

Eastman announced last February he would exercise his powers to compel railroads in 11 cities to carry out terminal unifications as economy and efficiency moves. He withheld the orders at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, however, to permit rail management and labor to agree on some plan of protection for employees thrown out of work in such consolidations.

ON JUNE 15 the bonus baby bonds will be mailed to 45,000 post offices from Washington and from the eleven federal reserve centers. Final plans for delivering the bonds to the veterans were announced by Postmaster General Farley, who predicted that payment on a great majority of them would be made within one week.

Mail carriers have been given instructions to "go out of their way wherever necessary with a view to effecting delivery," Farley said. The bond packets must be delivered to the veteran in person, and not to another person or firm at the veteran's address.

"Draft Lowden"

Washington.—A week or ten days ago, the name of Frank O. Lowden was scarcely whispered around where politicians foregathered. They talked about the forthcoming Republican National convention and they mentioned Governor Landon of Kansas; Col. Frank Knox of Illinois; Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan; and others, but never was the name of Lowden mentioned.

In the short space of a fortnight, there has come first a whisper of the name of Lowden, then a mention of him as a possible Republican nominee and finally a full voice that approximates a "draft Lowden" movement.

A few weeks ago I reported to you in these columns that the prospects were very good for the Republican National convention to turn to a dark horse. There was no name at that time upon which anyone could pin a prediction but there were circumstances, undercurrent in character, that seemed to point the way to the nomination of a man not then in the forefront of political prognostication.

Of course, with the Republican convention delegates pledged and unpledged here, there, and everywhere, it is possible for almost anything to happen but my information is that the leaders desire most of all to avoid a bitter battle. They wish to avoid the very thing which New Deal political strategists have been seeking to foment. Only the final ballot will tell the story, of course, but it does appear at this time that the Republican leadership may display some good horse sense and seek to accomplish a nomination without splitting their party wide open.

This "draft Lowden" movement has come on with almost startling suddenness, as I have indicated above. It has resulted from the fact, apparently, that Mr. Lowden, while he was governor of Illinois a number of years ago and since that time, has built up for himself a record as a friend of agriculture. Thus, the strategy would seem to be that the Republican leadership is turning to a man who can give President Roosevelt a run for his money in the farm belt states.

As far as I know, Mr. Lowden has not been consulted respecting the nomination. It would seem, however, that if he were nominated he would accept despite the fact that he has not sought the nomination in any way nor has he been very active in politics since he sought the nomination for President in 1920. It was on that occasion, it will be remembered, that he and the late Gen. Leonard Wood fought through into a convention deadlock and Warren G. Harding of Ohio was nominated as a compromise candidate.

It is difficult to see how the conservative element in the Republican party could refuse to back Mr. Lowden and it is equally difficult to see how the farm representation and the liberals in the party could withhold their support when the Lowden farm record is considered. But all of this represents subject matter that must await convention action because, after all, there are still other candidates who have blocks of delegates behind them and they may be unwilling to withdraw unless they are satisfied with the dark horse that finally trots out onto the convention platform.

Tax Muddle

One hears more and more discussion in Washington these days of the tax muddle in which President Roosevelt has found himself. I think it is fair to say that his prestige has suffered considerably from the way his proposed tax increase was handled and I think it is the general consensus that this year's tax bill was a proposition to which the President gave too little thought.

Sometime in the future, the history of the New Deal will be written in a clear and comprehensive manner. The story then will show in retrospect that which we can hardly understand now—the good and the bad in the bewildering adventures attempted under the policies of reform and recovery. I believe those who write that history will dwell upon the 1936 tax legislation as one of the important political weaknesses developed by Mr. Roosevelt.

As far as I know, there has never been a public official who has been entirely consistent at all times in his methods and policies. Mr. Roosevelt, being human, has been inconsistent like all of the rest and there was no reason to expect that he would be the one exception despite the fact that some of his followers maintain that he cannot make mistakes.

But to link the tax legislation with the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is human, let me call attention to the further fact that he has been bold, even daring, in many of his moves. Where his quick decisions have been sound, the country has been benefited. Where he has made mistakes by acting too quickly, his spokesmen have sought to deny that there were errors.

* * *

Here's the Point

Now, the point is this: if Mr. Roosevelt had done as he has done on numerous occasions, he could have avoided the situation that has reacted unfavorably to him. It will be recalled that several times the President has tried out his theories on various governmental problems and has studied the popular reaction to his trial balloons. He did not do this with the tax bill. He left the job of drafting the legislation to the treasury and the treasury, being populated with a number of men who have no conception whatsoever of business practices and care little for American traditions, produced a piece of legislation that would have forever prevented any business unit from saving funds to carry it through times of depression, the proverbial rainy day.

In the discussions around Washington, it is frequently stated that had Mr. Roosevelt taken his so-called tax experts into a room and made them explain the character of the bill they were presenting, much of the difficulty would have been averted. But he did not use this foresight and the result is now history. He has alienated a considerable amount of congressional support that he ordinarily could have for the mere asking.

As the tax legislation stands, it is nothing more nor less than a makeshift boost in rates. It has added nothing at all to strengthen the nation's general taxation policies. It seems to me that the time is ripe for a general study of the tax structure with the idea in mind that a wholesale revision should take place and that scientific methods should be employed. We must not forget that we have a national debt of more than thirty-one billions and that several other billions in securities are really to be counted in since those obligations are guaranteed by the United States. That debt must be paid eventually.

It may be that all of the twenty-one billions in tax payments and borrowed money which Mr. Roosevelt has expended can be justified in every respect. It may be that in future years the nation will be grateful that this era of extravagance is a part of our history, but the fact still remains that when a government or an individual borrows money, that money must be returned to those who hold the evidence of the debt.

U. S. Pay Roll Grows

The civil service commission lately has compiled some statistics indicating that the merit system in the federal government is being pushed aside at an alarming rate. The commission's figures show how every President since Arthur in 1883 has expanded the scope of the classified civil service during his administration until the administration of President Roosevelt.

It would be a list much too long to record here how the number of employees of the federal government has increased each year as the government has expanded but as a matter of history it struck me as interesting to see how 41.5 per cent of employees of the federal government under President McKinley held their jobs under the civil service system and laws and how this percentage increased to 61.5 per cent under President Taft; to 72 per cent under President Wilson; to 79.8 per cent under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, and to 80.1 per cent under President Hoover.

By the end of June, 1935, the number of civil service employees in the federal government amounted to only 63.3 per cent of the total number and, while the civil service commission has not tabulated the record for this year, I understand reliably that the ratio will be about 57 per cent of the total.

The total number of employees of the federal government has grown consistently since the turn of the century when it stood at 256,000. In Taft's administration, the total was 370,000. President Wilson's first administration employed 438,000 and then with the advent of the World war the government expanded its personnel to its highest point, 917,000.

As the war agencies were liquidated, the number of employees declined obviously until during the Harding and Coolidge administrations the highest point reached was 540,000. The Hoover administration numbered 583,000 on the pay rolls but the election of President Roosevelt immediately brought on greater numbers and by June 30, 1935, there were 719,000 on the federal pay roll and this number was further increased to 806,000 at the end of March this year.

The Big "Black Legion"
More and Better Babies
A Worried Empire
U. S. Dollars Emigrate

The "ritual" of the murderous secret society called the "Black Legion" contains some "Know Nothing" features. The candidate for admission must be "willing to commit murder, to proceed against Catholics, Jews and Negroes"; he must be "native born, Protestant, white and gentile."

Arthur Brisbane

The "Black Legion," which probably will not last long, had ambitious plans. Among other things it proposed to overthrow the federal government, which is not an original idea. It was also going to set up a dictatorship, with night-riding regiments to enforce discipline. Dictatorship is not a new idea, either.

Strange things are done or planned in the name of "liberty" now, as they were when Madam Roland mounted the guillotine platform.

Russia wants bigger families, like Mussolini and others with "plans." Stalin wants plenty of new little citizens.

A thousand million rubles will be set aside by Moscow to "subsidize large families and aid mothers." Birth control ladies and gentlemen will hear, surprised, that aid to large families will begin after the seventh child. Seven are taken as a matter of course; that is just the beginning of a Russian family.

Chancellor Hitler of Germany joins in the "more and better babies" cry.

The German ideal is no longer the beautiful golden-haired Margaret, spinning her wheel and saying "No." The Nazis demand women who, "above everything else, can become the mothers of several children" and are willing to do so, according to a representative of Chancellor Hitler.

William Philip Simms, English, is afraid the British empire may not survive, on account of "air fleet peril."

Britain is disturbed by the thought that her whole imperial line of communication, stretching 4,000 miles from the Straits of Gibraltar to the Gulf of Aden, is under Mussolini's bombing planes. Except that her empire is the biggest, England should not worry more than other countries. With surface ships losing all importance, except in the opinions of some Americans, anybody's bombers can break up any line of communications temporarily.

"Americans investing huge sums in the Bahamas, to escape income tax," says the New York Times, big type, front page.

Americans have been "investing huge sums" elsewhere, outside the United States. Billions of American money have gone to Canada, England and other "foreign parts." More will go.

In all the Bahamas, 4,403 square miles of beautiful territory, there is no income tax. Think of that for a happy country.

Needless to say, if enough American money pours in to make it worth while the intelligent British will find a way to tax it.

Many Frenchmen are disturbed and puzzled by the situation in Europe, and General Mordacq, close associate of Clemenceau in the war, discusses the question, "What would Clemenceau do if he could come back?"

France feels the need of "a man with a fist," un homme a poigne, and Clemenceau was that kind.

Concerning that fine old fighter from the Vendee, it is safe to say that if he came back he would hasten preparations for another war. But he would not have waited until now.

Marshal Badoglio, who cleaned up Ethiopia so swiftly, has been called to Rome, perhaps as part of a wise plan not to let anybody grow too big, like the tree Igdrasil, supposed to have its roots in hell, its topmost branches in heaven.

A new comet now approaching us, discovered by and named for L. C. Peltier, amateur astronomer, who works in a garage, will be the first comet visible to the naked eye since 1927.

Germany cut off the head of a sixty-five-year-old man convicted of killing 12 boys. Before death, "examined" by Nazi officials who thought he might be a Communist, he admitted many other murders. He used a secret poison that doctors could not detect.

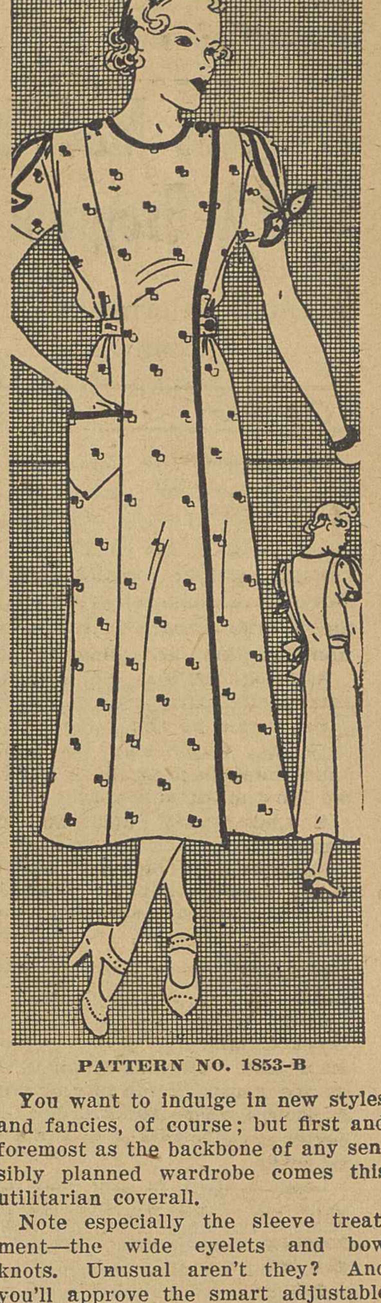
Slenderizing Coverall With Many Features



PATTERN NO. 1853-B

You want to indulge in new styles and fancies, of course; but first and foremost as the backbone of any sensibly planned wardrobe comes this utilitarian coverall.

Note especially the sleeve treatment—the wide eyelets and bow knots. Unusual aren't they? And you'll approve the smart adjustable belt which can be tied or buttoned as shown. The front panel buttons at the shoulder and contributes a most appealing feature. Who'd ever guess this model was a smock dress? Surely not the casual observer, who's so taken with the slenderizing lines and neat appearance.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1853-B is available for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 34 requires 4⅞ yards of 35 inch fabric. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

Say Boundary Dispute Caused Trojan War; Helen a Myth

Debunkers now tell us that the Trojan war was probably the result of a boundary dispute, and was not caused by the abduction of Helen, the beautiful wife of King Menelaus, by Paris, and that Helen was a myth.

Still, Helen's story must have happened somewhere; it's too good a story just to be made up, even by a war office propagandist.

—10—

THEY were a curiously inert little group for a minute or two after the revelation.

It was like a play, Barry thought; curtain down on a climax, and the actors relaxing until it should rise again for the next scene.

Pat turned on him.

"Well, now you know," she said. "You know about us, but remember we know about you, too."

She was herself again; hard and defiant.

Ignoring her, for the moment, Barry asked the Judge, "Do you want to tell me what happened?"

"I wrote my opinion in the Jefferson street proceedings, and then, again as you say, I couldn't go through with it. I'd never done a crooked thing in my life. I don't know how I ever made that speech at the Astor. The instant it was finished, I telephoned Kelly. 'You'd better come down and talk it over,' he said.

"Of course, it would have been fatal for anyone to learn of that meeting. That's why I got out of the taxi at Twenty-third street. As I told you, Kelly admitted me himself. He was drunk, and in a bad temper. 'What's the matter with you?' he asked, when we'd gone into the drawing room. 'White-livered? Here; take a drink, and forget it.'

"There was a bottle on the table, and two glasses. Both of 'em had been used, but he half-filled them, and gave me one. I needed it, but I can't drink Scotch—never could. I told Kelly so, and he blazed out at me. 'You're too good to drink with me—is that it?'

"'No,' I answered: 'that's not it. But I can't hand down that decision. I simply can't, Mr. Kelly. It's rotten, and everyone knows it. I've got the cursed thing in my pocket, and—'

"'And I've got something in my pocket,' he shouted—"

"Father!" Pat intervened.

"For over an hour, I pleaded and argued. And Kelly kept drinking, and getting uglier. He was a big man, with a bull neck, and huge hands. At last, he said, 'Shut your damned mouth, and get out of here!'

"I said, 'I'm not going.'

"'No?' he sneered, and got up from his chair. He stumbled across the room to a great, old-fashioned desk, and got a revolver. 'Now, beat it,' he yelled, 'and damned quick!'

"'All right,' I said, 'but I won't file that decision.'

"I walked into the hall, and Kelly stood, leaning against the door, with the pistol in his hand, so furious that I half expected him to shoot before I could get my hat. 'You think you can scare me,' he shouted. 'You and The Globe. You think you got something on me. Witnesses. Squealers. Well, I know how to take care of them, by God! Beat it! And, if that decision ain't filed by noon, today, I'll—'"

Again, Pat said, "Father!"

"I know," Hambidge interrupted himself.

Pat's admonition had come just in time, Barry thought. The Judge had risen, tense, and so excited that he seemed on the verge of collapse.

"And that was that," Barry calmed him.

"Not quite," Judge Hambidge continued, but in a lower tone. "When I got to the bottom of the steps—the stone steps, I mean—I stood thinking. If I left that way, there was no telling what Kelly might do. 'I've got to go through,' I thought. 'It's ruin either way, but, if I obey orders, ruin only for me. I'd better give in.' I couldn't make up my mind, though. I kept looking back, half decided. And, suddenly, a queer thing happened. The front door swung open."

"I'd shut it carefully," he resumed, "but there it was, wide, almost like an invitation. I walked into the hall. The glass doors to the drawing room were closed, but I could see the light through them. When I put my hand on the knob, the lights went out. I turned the knob, and pushed, but the door wouldn't open. Not latched—it was as if some one was holding it. 'Kelly,' I thought. 'He won't let me in. I've got to act quick now.' Almost in a daze, I wandered up to the avenue. At nine o'clock, I gave the decision to my clerk, and told him to file it immediately. A few hours later, I learned that Kelly was dead. The papers said his body was found stretched across that door to the hall. I knew then it was there when I left the house, and that was why I couldn't open the door."

Pat said, "Are you satisfied?"

"Are you?" Barry asked. "Or would you rather that I tried to find who killed Kelly?"

"What does it matter—" Pat began, hotly.

"It think Mr. Gilbert's answered that question," the Judge interrupted. "We've got to clear young Ridder. At any cost, Pat, we've got to clear him."

"Mr. Gilbert's our friend," her father went on. "He says so, and I believe him."

"What do you want to know, Mr. Gilbert?"

"How long did you stand at the foot of the steps before that door swung open?"

"Five minutes. Maybe, a little more."

"Do you think some one opened it? Some one who, then, went in to Kelly?"

"You mean, the murderer?"

Barry nodded.

"No. That's the last thing he would have done. The door probably didn't latch when I closed it."

"While you were in the house, did you see anyone but Kelly?"

"No. We were shut in together."

"Did you hear anyone?"

"Since you mention it, once I did think a heard the front door close. I may have imagined it, but now I remember Kelly asked, 'Who's that in the hall?' It was about half an hour after we went into the drawing room, and I looked out, but there wasn't anyone."

"He—or she—may have gone into the dining room," Barry said. "Whoever killed Kelly came out of the dining room; I'm certain of that."

"Why?"

"Because the drink Kelly offered you was Scotch whisky. Was there anything else in the room?"

"If there had been, I'd've asked for it."

"Exactly. And the weapon that crushed Kelly's skull was a cut-glass decanter containing rye whisky.

"In the five minutes you were standing on the pavement," Barry reasoned, "some one came out of that dining room with that decanter, and struck Kelly. There was no time for a quarrel. That man—or that woman—knew what he—or she—was going to do."

"Why do you say 'she'?" Pat asked. "This wasn't a woman's crime."

"It's not a criminal's crime, either," Barry answered. "A criminal would have brought the weapon, and it wouldn't've been a cut-glass decanter. A criminal might have worn gloves, to prevent leaving finger-prints. But, since this wasn't a criminal, the fact that there were no finger-prints suggests that the murderer just happened to be wearing gloves."

"And?" Pat inquired, tensely.

"And men don't often wear gloves on a warm night. Women do. It was a warm night."

"It was very warm," the Judge said.

"You are a shrewd young man," the girl gibed at him. "But your assumptions are ridiculous. Gloves! Anyone might have worn 'em. Anyone might remember the risk of leaving finger-prints, and wipe them off a bottle with a handkerchief. Anyone might've come in through an unlatched door—any time after my father left."

"But," Barry objected, "Kelly was dead then."

"How do you know that? How do we know my father wasn't right when he thought Kelly was keeping him out? All your conjectures lead nowhere, Mr. Gilbert. The only discovery you've made is that father saw Kelly after young Ridder did. And, as I told you, that's merely implicating one innocent man instead of another."

"And you—"

"Naturally, it's the second innocent man I care about. Especially since his innocence—of murder—wouldn't keep your disclosures from disgracing him."

Her voice broke.

"Ridder'll be free in a few weeks," she pled. "Wait, Mr. Gilbert. You don't know how many innocent people you may drag into this."

Barry hesitated.

He now remembered that he had told Pat he loved her. "It didn't get me anywhere," Barry thought. "It never will. I'm not even sure that she heard me, but I'm glad I spoke, all the same."

Aloud, he said, "I'll wait, Pat."

She glanced at him gratefully.

"Not until the trial, though," he warned her. "I won't take that chance. I won't let this girl, Peggy, go on suffering until then. But now I believe I know who murdered Kelly. Someone who came into the house while your father was there. Someone so full of the thought of it that she bungled the new lock on the front door."

"You think—" Hambidge began.

"I think that's why it blew open. And I think, too, that revealing your visit—now—would be merely 'tipping our hand.' The person I suspect has already covered her tracks pretty well."

"Then," Pat said almost incredulously—"Then you're not going to repeat this story?"

"Not even to Winslow. He hasn't much more faith in my 'sleuthing' than you have. We'll leave him to work out Ridder's defense. For the present let's agree on an armistice. Mutual silence. If the time arrives when I feel I must speak, I'll come to you first. Is that fair?"

"Quite."

From the very beginning, Barry had suspected Mrs. Kelly. "She sued for divorce recently, and withdrew the case," Peter Winslow had told him. "Do you think that might indicate that she killed her husband?" Barry did, and one discovery after another confirmed the idea. "But," as Barry had reminded his city editor, "Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem. She went to a dance."

"Ever hear of faking an alibi?" Harwood had asked, advising a "check up."

That sounded promising until, as the first move in his investigation, Barry dug up The Herald Tribune of "the morning after the body was found." Mrs. Kelly had told him that paper contained a full record of her social activities, and it did. "At the time of the murder, Mrs. Kelly, who sued for divorce recently, and withdrew the case, was awarding prizes at a fancy dress ball of the Crosstown Chowder and Outing club in Harlem Gardens. This was at midnight, and the other judges were . . ."

"Kelly wasn't killed at midnight," Barry realized. "He wasn't killed until two hours after midnight. If Mrs. Kelly got through with her prizes—"

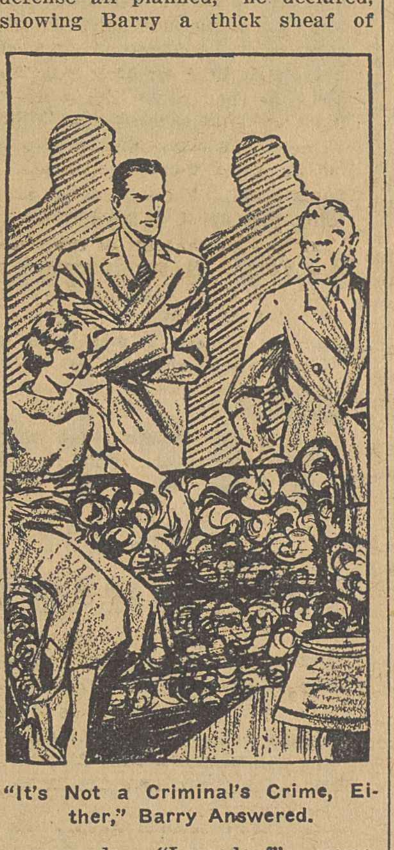
Monday morning Barry dropped in on Peter Winslow. Obviously, he was doing a great deal. "Got the defense all planned," he declared, showing Barry a thick sheaf of memoranda. "Loose-leaf" memoranda it was, in the most literal sense—scrawled on waste paper and the backs of envelopes. Order may be Nature's first law, but it wasn't this lawyer's.



"It's Not a Criminal's Crime, Either," Barry Answered.

"No, I'm not neat," Peter smiled, intercepting Barry's glance. "Except personally, and that is Julie's achievement. Julie's Mrs. Winslow, of course, and she buys all my clothes. Lays 'em out for me, too—even the boutonniere. I often ask her if she wants me to look like a gigolo. Don't worry about this stuff, though,"—indicating the sheaf of memoranda. "Miss Clark'll have that straight by night."

Miss Clark was his secretary.

"Women keep you in order," he went on smiling; "that's about the only thing I have against 'em."

"There's nothing to this case," he continued. "It'll come to trial in a few weeks now, and be over in a few hours. Want to hear what I'm going to ask that Filipino?"

Listening, Barry felt again that his own activities had been merely foolish. A dozen questions disposed of all the evidence the butler had given so far, and made it apparent that what he actually knew of young Ridder's visit was actually nothing. "You heard a quarrel? A violent quarrel? And you were alarmed? That's why you came upstairs? Rogers left then? And the lights were still burning in the front room. If you were alarmed, why didn't you knock at the door to make sure your master was all right? Not so very much alarmed, were you? In fact, you weren't alarmed at all until you saw what had happened." This was the beginning of an inquiry that twisted about, doubled on itself, and was likely to leave any jury on earth uncertain to convict anyone of a capital offense. "Particularly anyone with a wife and child," Peter said.

"Peggy was in here Friday," he added. "She looks as though she'd been dragged through a knot hole. I wanted her to come to us for the week-end, but we're in town most of the time I'm going to talk to the Hambidges about having her out there."

"That would be great," Barry kindled. "They'd be company for each other. It wouldn't do Pat a bit of harm to learn how the other half lives."

"Right!" Peter exclaimed heartily. "I'll call Pat today."

In spite of himself, as he was leaving, Barry mentioned his Harlem theory.

Peter listened intently.

"Well," he said, "you are a Hawkshaw."

"You'd be surprised if I landed Mrs. Kelly, wouldn't you?"

"No," Peter replied, smiling again, "but I'd be terribly surprised if you didn't begin suspecting some one else ten minutes afterward."

CHAPTER VIII

THE more Barry thought of it, the more certain he became that the Judge's story, and the revelations in Harlem, removed the only reason for questioning Harwood's hypothesis. When the divorce action was filed, Kelly had promised not to see Betty Barclay again. That promise had induced the withdrawal of the petition. And then Betty Barclay had phoned, while Kelly was out, and just as Mrs. Kelly was going. In Harwood's own words, Mrs. Kelly "went wild." Failing to get legal counsel, she taxied to Harlem, and there she got "madder and madder." Just after midnight, she drove home, and found Kelly alone—drunk, and with the accumulated wrath engendered by two trying interviews. There were words, and a handy decanter.

The design began being almost too nearly perfect.

He found Peggy doing some mending in her dingy room. She had lost flesh, and seemed to be always staring at nothing. "It's Jacky," she confided in Barry. "I'm worried about him."

The youngster looked pale and ill.

"Look here, Peg; will you have lunch with me tomorrow at the Astor? I want you to meet somebody."

"Miss Hambidge?"

"Yes."

"She'd turn up her nose at me like an elephant reaching for peanuts."

"I don't think so. Anyway, I want you to know each other."

The appointment was made, at last—one o'clock—and Barry called Pat.

"Well, the trail's hot, all right."

"Tell me about it."

"I don't dare over the wire. You know; operators. Come in and lunch with me?"

"When?"

"Tomorrow at one."

Pat was eagerly anxious to hear his news, and there was no other way. But, if Pat's nose remained static when she learned she was to encounter Peggy, her mouth straightened. "Why? What have I in common with this girl?"

"Well," Barry answered, flatly, "you're keeping her husband in prison."

Pat flushed.

"You owe her something for that, don't you think? What're you being so high hat about? This girl's Mrs. John Clarke Ridder, Jr., you know."

"I'm not being high hat. Only, naturally, just now, I don't feel much like meeting strangers. Especially strangers with whom I have no community of interest."

Lunching together, however, it soon became evident that there was a "community of interest." Pat warmed to this painted chorus girl, fearful for her husband exactly as Pat was fearful for her father. Both heard Barry's account of his discoveries with regard to Mrs. Kelly.

"It seems pretty conclusive," Pat said.

"I never thought of that dame—I mean, woman," Peg added. "Would that get Jack off quick?"

Barry explained his understanding that, if there were definite proof of another person's having committed a crime, anyone in custody was released immediately. "The district attorney moves for a dismissal of the indictment, I believe," he told them.

"Gee!" Peggy said, with the tears in her eyes.

Pat was no fool, and she found herself respecting and liking this "night club hoofer." She was Mrs. Ridder, after all. "Whoever the girl might have been, it was the tears beginning to dissolve the beads that stirred Pat. She had never seen anyone cry that way before—cry with her lips twisted into a smile.

"Why not? When you really love anybody, you don't care what they do, or have done, or what they are. It's what they are to you that counts. You're not thinking what you're going to get, but what you're going to give. That is, the right kind of girl is."

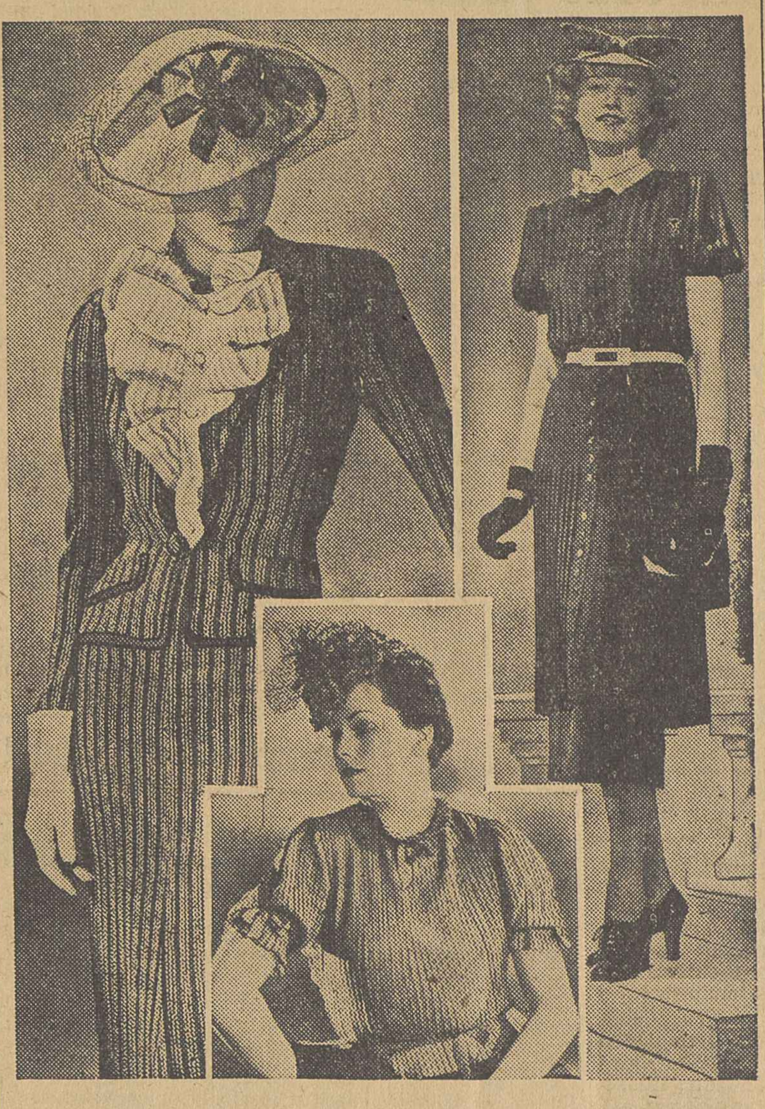
Pleat, Tailor and Tuck Smart Silks

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



EVERY day in every way women who recognize the importance of selecting materials for the fashioning of their costumes that can be "put to the test and not found wanting," are turning to handsome dependable silks that are really and truly pure silk for the solution of their fabric problems.

The fact that a lavish amount of pleating, tucking, shirring and meticulous tailoring is involved in the styling of this season's smartest apparel is proving an added incentive to insist on silk of the better sort that may be relied upon to yield successfully to these varied and sometimes intricate manipulations.

Three outstandingly important fashion trends are presented in the illustration, each of which demonstrates the chic and charm of silk weaves in the current mode. For the perfectly stunning jacket suit the designer handles black and white printed silk crepe as tailor-perfect as if it were wool. The braid-bound edges of the jacket interpret a highly significant styling detail. As to the white organdy frill, it is a "last word" in accessory chic.

The other standing figure reveals Miss 1936 wearing a navy blue silk sheer with a pleated tunic, for you must know that the pleated tunic is a top-notch fashion for spring and summer. Men's wear buttons go marching down the front of the tunic pictured. Short puffed sleeves follow the latest dictate of the mode. Note that these are designed to give shoulder emphasis as all the newest fashions would have it. A tiny boutonniere and a yellow chamois belt stress the new vogue.

As to this matter of tunics, from all indications they are about to stampede the fashion picture. If in doubt, choose a tunic frock is timely advice, for it is to be tunics by day and tunics by night according to reports from style centers. Some tunics are straight and narrow while other tunics flare about the knees like a bell or a lampshade. Many evening frocks adopt pleated skirts with tunic tops.

Another big fashion feature is the blouse that is all-over pleated like the one shown in the picture. This blouse is of bright green pleated silk chiffon. It is worn with a black silk taffeta suit. Note the pleated frill about the throat. This is a favorite new neckline silhouette. And again please to observe that the sleeves are short and puffed in the latest manner. The smartest flower turbans are topheavy in front. The one topping milady's prettily coiffed head is made of purple silk violets. Purple, green and black is the color scheme of this costume which goes to show how striking the new color alliances are this season.

The new and fashionable bolero costumes bring blouses into the very foreground of the fashion scene. With black bolero two-piece dresses or suits the outstanding color idea is to wear as bright a blouse as the new silk prints can afford, or if not a print, then let your blouse be of a high-color pleated silk sheer. Anyway, go the limit in matter of daring color for your blouse.

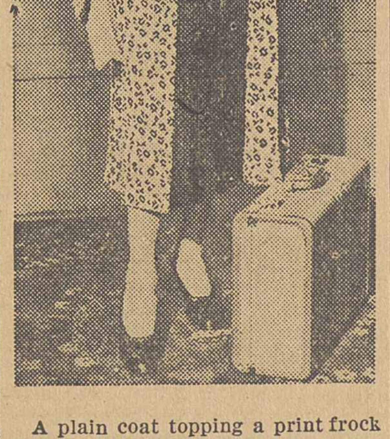
PRINT COATS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



A plain coat topping a print frock is not news but a print coat topping a plain frock is latest news from Fashion town. The model pictured typifies the new mode. In this instance the redingote is of black and white print linen over a black linen dress. The short sleeves proclaim a popular vogue for the summer. Bright silk print coats with monotone silk dresses, also jackets of gay floral silks that contrast plain skirts will be made a big feature during the coming months.

NEW COTTON LOOKS LIKE SILK OR WOOL

Cotton that looks like silk, cotton that looks like wool, cotton as sheer as the gauziest chiffons, cotton velvets, cotton tweeds and cotton laces—all these will march in the fabric parade.

Cord laces will be the tops in spring and summer swank, shown in tailored sports clothes for resort wear now and all-around use later.

Peasant weaves also are slated for high success in natural neutral tones, both in cotton and linen, with bright accessories.

Embroidery, which has been creeping back into the style picture, achieves rampant recognition in the new cotton fabrics. Embroidered surfaces are all over the place, both in soft, homespun type of cotton fabrics for sports wear, and in the organdies and mousselines for evening.

Built-Up Heels Are Tops in New Modes for Daytime

Caprice is the keynote of the new spring styles. While some Paris authorities portend a vogue for Spanish senoritas, Chinese deities and animated modern paintings, most American women are preparing to step forth in sober suits and saucy accessories.

Mannish felts and flower-trimmed trifles flaunt breath-taking colors in the new millinery modes. Tailored waistcoats and the frilliest of feminine blouses have a slightly rakish look. There are 20 gay new glove shades and a dozen stocking tints, while scarfs are more frivolous than ever in color and design.

Book Buttons

Book buttons lend a "highbrow" air to several new mid-season frocks. They are tiny, closed volumes of black enamel whose leaves are edged with gold.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

LEST WE FORGET

Our town, Montevallo, is a bird sanctuary, made so by an act of our city council. We, its proud citizens, thereby, enrolled upon the birds' honor roll.

Recognizing our birds as friends, we have sworn allegiance to them by offering them our protection from their enemies and a safe environment where they can raise their young.

This is the season for young birds. How tenderly and devoted the parent birds are, caring for their needs—the mother bird keeping them warm, the father bird bringing them food — Soon their feathers will grow and they will be leaving their nests. There are always enemies to "get" them.

Citizens, young and old, are you law-abiding? Are you friend or foe of our birds, and why?

Recent tragedies among our feathered friends prompted the writing of this undisguised plea from one of the many many bird lovers of Montevallo.—Mrs. Edwin Allen.

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Montgomery, Ala.—By the addition of a few simple words in the 1935 revenue act the state is collecting approximately $500 a month in lubricating oil taxes from certain corporations which formerly resisted payment, claiming they were not included in the provisions of the old act.

Clarification of the law was effected by a former country weekly newspaper publisher, A. B. Tucker, once publisher of the now defunct Thomasville Echo.

Alabama's proposed experiment with cotton fabric in road building will soon be launched, H. H. Houck chief engineer of the state highway department stated last week upon returning from Washington.

"I was advised by officials of the marketing division of the U. S. Department of Agriculture that bids are now being received for the purchase of cotton to be used in the experiment," Houck said.

About 600 bales of the fabric known as osnaburg will be used on the 105 miles of road in this state. The material is a gift to the state by the federal government, he explained.

The semi-annual meeting of the Alabama National Guard Association composed of commissioned officers will be held in Mobile, June 13 and 14, according to announcement by Adj. Gen. John C. Coleman.

The officers will discuss plans for the annual field training encampments that are soon to begin.

Quick work on the part of Deputy State Fire Marshall Thomas J. Hall brought about the arrest last week of Dr. Leo Meller, prominent Atlanta dentist, charged with arson in connection with the burning of a Montgomery dwelling owned by the dentist.

Declaring he was "broke and needed money," Dr. Meller admitted that he sought to collect $3,000 insurance. He is held in the Montgomery County jail.

Cut the gasoline tax and allow the motorists to have more money with which to keep brakes in proper condition is the remedy proposed by M. C. Hines, of Birmingham, for reducing the umber ber of automobile accidents.

Invoke hard labor sentences upon drunken drivers is the remedy proposed by Walter K. McAdory, of the highway patrol.

One capitol corridor comment was to the effect that a cut in the cost of gasoline might lead to increased drunkenness, and greater road hazards on the theory that lowered cost of motor fuel would permit increased purchases of alcoholic beverages.

Children Belong In Their Homes

There is no substitute for a mother. It is a wise and proper investment in future citizens for the state to make possible the preservation of the natural home for children who have lost the support of a father rather than to allow those homes to be broken up by poverty and the children placed in foster homes and institutions.

The preservation of family life is the foundation of all child care. The White House Conference on Child Health and Protection in 1930 set forth as a primary aim:

"For every child a home and that love and security which a home provides; and for that child who must receive foster care, the nearest substitute for his own home."

As Alabama has gone into a program giving aid to children in their own homes, questions from interested lay citizens — for and against—have arisen. Since this is a tax supported program, it is just and right that the questions of all interested citizens should be answered by those who administer such funds.

To assist county staffs in interpreting this program the following answers to questions asked by interested persons have been made:

1. What is Aid to Dependent Children?

Aid to dependent children is a cooperative project of federal, state and county governments for care of needy dependent children in their own or relatives' homes, as enumerated by law.

2. What is the legal background of aid to dependent children?

Act No. 496, General Acts of Alabama, 1935, provides for the administration of aid to dependent children through the state and county department of public welfare.

Title IV of the federal social security act provides for the matching of state and county funds by the federal government for the administration of aid to dependent children. A subsequent act of congress, January, 1936, makes appropriation for the administration of the social security act and specifically makes provisions for matching state and county funds for aid to dependent children by making available one-third of the total amount expended.

Section 5, Act 142, General Acts of Alabama, 1936, makes a state appropriation of $250,000 to be used "for the purpose of public assistance including general home relief, outdoor and indoor care of persons in need of assistance and old age pensions", etc. A ruling of the state board of public welfare requires county matching of this fund on an equal basis.

3. How is the aid administered?

Aid to individual children in their own or relatives' home is administered through the trained personnel of county department of public welfare under the supervision of the state department of public welfare.

4. Can all dependent children be cared for through this system of assistance?

No. The Alabama aid to dependent children act restricts those who may receive benefit to a child who is (1) under the age of 16, (2) in need, (3) has resided in the state for one year immediately preceding the application for such aid, or (4) was born within the state within one year immediately preceding the application if his mother has resided in the state one year immediately preceding the birth of child, (5) has been deprived of parental support by reason of thed eath, continued absence from home, or physical or mental incapacity of a parent, and who is living with his father, mother, grandmother, grandfather, brother, sister, stepfather, stepmother, stepsister, uncle or aunt. The state department of public welfare has established a rule of procedure to the effect that a mother, who is the recipient of such aid must be a fit and proper person to bring up children.

5. Are funds made available by the state and counties adequate?

No. Statistical reports show that 17,204 children in Alabama were receiving aid during the month of February. During February a total of $67,977.13 of state, federal and county aid to dependent children funds were spent. This made an average of $3.95 assistance granted per child for the month of February. February represents the peak month for aid to dependent children since for the first time federal funds were made available. During the month of March no state, therefore no federal funds were available. Twelve thousand four hundred nine children received aid in their own homes during the month of March, at a cost of $24,161.00 all of which was made available by the counties. This made an average of $1.95 assistance granted per child for the month of March. It is obvious that children even in February, the peak month, did not receive an amount sufficient to maintain standards compatible with decency and health. It is estimated from monthly reports coming from each countydepartment that aside from the 12,000 children now being assisted some 8,000 more needy dependent children are eligible for aid but are not being assisted due to inadequacy of funds.

6. What is the nature of the aid allowed in Alabama?

Federal funds cannot be used for matching purposes for aid above $18.00 for the first child and $12.00 for each succeeding child.

The state statute provides that aid sufficient to maintain standards compatible with decency and health may be given.

If it were possible to maintain a fairly adequate siale of assistance, it is believed that taking in consideration the present cost of living in Alabama, $15.00 per month for the first child and $10.00 per month for each succeeding child would makea efficacious program.

7. Is there any better or cheaper way of caring for needy dependent children than by aid to dependent children?

No. For the charge of her family of dependent children, the mother is the best and cheapest care—that the state can employ; the best because she gives the nurture and discipline that only personal affection can suuply; the cheapest because she does not engage in the work for profit. On the average it costs the community about $25.00 per month to keep a child in an institution and about $11.00 to $17.00 to keep a child at home with his mother.

8. How is the monthly grant per family determined?

By making up a family budget, such items as rent, fuel, food and clothing are added together to determine the minimum amount needed each month to keep a family in health and working efficiency; the aid given should then be equal to the difference between the resources within the family and the budgetary need. Actually it is a well known fact that assistance is at this time being given on the basis of prevention of starvation. Good "standards of decency and health" cannot be maintained under the present system.

9. How long is a needy mother entitled to receive aid for her dependent children?

Until her youngest child reaches the age of 16. In most instances, however, if aid is adequate and if supervision has been wise, the family will have reached a self- supporting basis before the youngest child reaches 16. Then the grant is cancelled.

It is evident from these answers (which the county directors have really given through their case summaries and monthly reports) that Alabama is falling far below an ideal aid to dependent children program. Hungry children are being fed meagerly but the malnourished, the diseased, the neglected, the delinquent child will be on the increase if the program has to limp along so inadequately. Aid to dependent children is an organism rather than a mere piece of governmental machinery. It deals with human beings and where there are life and growth, there are problems.

The strength of Alabama's program lies in an excellent legislative enactment; in the fact the trained social case-work service in the counties resumes this aid from the category of a "dole;" in the equal sharing of financial responsibility by state and counties thereby setting up a partnership with the governor, the legislature and the state department of public welfare on the one hand, the county departments of public welfare and the county governing bodies on the other hand, and the balancing of state leadership by local administration. Surely citizens interest and support will demand that such a program be adequately financed. The reward will be to see families of helpless children, left penniless and forlorn, brought back to a sense of security and happiness; to see public money spent wisely for a great public good.

Even Texas Dogs Go High-Hat

MAYLENE ENTERTAINERS

"The Maylene Entertainers" had their regular meeting at the Maylene school building on Tuesday, May 26 at 7:30 p.m. After a program of music and social games, the group discussed the play, "Deacon Dubbs," which they are planning to give soon. The proceeds for the performance will go to equip a tennis court for the community.

Miss Hodo, the Community Worker, from Montevallo, was present at the meeting.

The total of all trucks and commercial cars licensed to operate at the outset of the year was 3,535,661, a gain of 7.9 per cent over 1934. More than 40 per cent of the total were Ford units.

Miss Mary Hilda Peters is visiting friends in Madison.

GUM-DIPPED TIRES
WIN INDIANAPOLIS 500 MILE RACE

Saturday, Louis Myer won the Indianapolis 500-mile race, at an average speed of 109 miles an hour, breaking all track records, without tire trouble of any kind.

No tires except Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires could have resisted the terrific heat generated at such high sustained speeds on the hot brick track, lap after lap, hour after hour. You can have no greater proof of blowout protection.

Not one of the thirty-three drivers would risk his life on any other tire, for each driver knows that heat is the chief cause of tire failure and blowouts. Firestone cords are soaked in liquid rubber, which saturates and coats every cotton fiber, preventing friction and heat and adding great strength. This is the Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping, that gives you greatest blowout protection and safety.

Profit by the experience of race drivers. Equip your car today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires — it costs so little to protect lives worth so much.

GIRL SCOUTS

DO YOU KNOW?

Answers to last week's "Do You Know" questions:

Dandelion was named in France, "dents-de-leon," (teeth of lion).

It is so called because of its notched leaves that resemble the lion's teeth.

It forms leaf rosettes in the fall and keeps them for an early start in spring.

NEW QUESTIONS

(Watch for answers next week)

What is in a raindrop besides water?

How a raindrop is formed?

What a snowflake is, and how many sides it has?

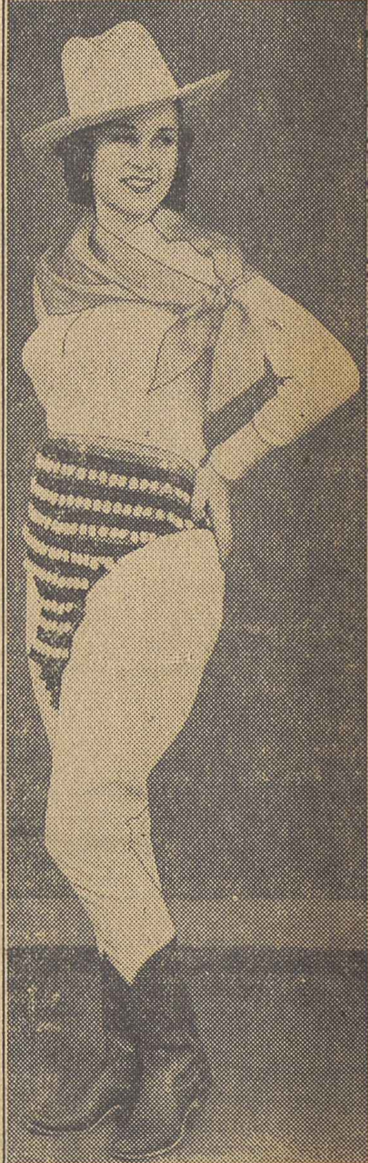
Whether water is plant, animal, or mineral?

The Scouts who met at 2:30 and 11 'clck had a picnic nn Wednesday, May 20 as their last meeting for the year. The girls hiked to the Alabama College Camp. Some of the girls passed their fire building test and some passed the cooking test, all of which was most interesting. After the girls gathered wood a fire was made for cooking supper, which tasted mighty good to the hungry picnicers. After supper a campfire was built and everybody sat around and sang lots of songs and talked and had a good time in general. Before leaving all waste material was burned and the fire well extinguished, something all good picnicers should do. After taps was sung everybody went home happy over a most delightful last meeting.

The Girl Scout Council met at nine o'clock on Wednesday morning with Mrs. Vaughan, scout commissioner, presiding. Reports of the Dixie Regional Conference were given and final plans made for the few scout activities of the summer. Very little scouting is done in the summer, mainly because of lack of leaders for this period.

Troop one went on on overnight hike Monday staying at the GGirl Scout cabin which is on the Alabama College campus in the woods to the left of the president's home. The girls arrived at the cabin at four o'clock. Each girl was assigned duties and soon everybody was very busy making beds, chopping and gathering wood, digging the incinerator, or some other task. Supper was served in an outdoor dining room improvised by two of the girls. As a surprise Mrs. Wills who came up for supper, brought an angelfood cake which tasted better than ever in the outdoor dining room. At campfire the girls practiced four songs which they later used in serenading the Harman's. After a game was played, Apple Brown Betty was taken from a bean hole which had been secretly prepared by one of the leaders and two girls. Taps was very beautifully played on the bugle by Frances Lee at 9:30. Everyone arose at six after a good night of sleep and began to prepare for breakfast. Pancakes and bacon were served around the fire. The girls broke camp at 8:30. Those attending were Kathleen Coyle, Frances Baer, Myra Frost, Sarah Ellen Stephens, Jeane, Anne and Sylvia Appleton, and Ollis Mills. The leaders present were Frances Lee, golden eaglet scout, and Dorothy Waites, field worker.

Ranger Trophy



This Apache war dance loin cloth, displayed by Rangerette Mabel Rooks, will be part of the historical collection in the Texas Rangers' Headquarters at the Texas Centennial Exposition, $25,000,000 World's Fair opening in Dallas June 6. The cloth was taken from an Apache war party by Rangers in 1860.

Grimm Full o' Hope but 1936 Pennant Chase Plenty Tough

CHARLEY GRIMM—"What's that? No, I'm not thinking about becoming a pitcher just because I've got this big yellow finger mitt on and because you've seen me warming up for ten minutes. I'm merely breaking it in for Larry French, who's got a lot of other things on his mind now besides new gloves, and asked me to do it for him. It's all in the day's work for a manager. Even when you're with the league champions, you've got to help out wherever you can, and—What's that?

"You think from what you've seen that I'd be a lot more help if I did go in there and pitch? Well, that's where you're wrong. We've got a pretty fair staff just the same and getting Curt Davis will help us plenty. Maybe he'll start slow, but you can bet he'll win plenty of games for us. And don't let anyone kid you about Lon Warneke. He's got all his stuff and you can take my word, there's never been a thing wrong with his arm. Also you can believe some more of the same about Bill Lee.

Warneke

"Sure, I know Galan and Hack are not hitting as good as they did this time last year. But they're both fellows who're really good hitters and you can't keep them down. They're likely to snap out of it any day now and keep on going. Besides, we're getting some pretty fair power in there anyhow, aren't we? Sure, we are. Look at Billy Herman. He's slapped seventeen doubles so far.

That Kid Cavaretta Is Okey at First Base

"How about first base? Well, what about it yourself? That young Cavaretta is coming along okay. He's fielding pretty and he's picked up there at the plate. So—

"Yeah, maybe I could go out there because I honestly am feeling swell. But I tried it twice this spring and each time that ligament slipped in my back. So, isn't it better for me to be ready if necessary, give a kid who's going so well his due and—Don't believe a word of it. The fellow who started that swelled head yarn was dreaming.

"The rest of the race? It's going to be closer than it's been for years with those second-division boys giving the rest of us plenty to worry about. Pittsburgh's got all the power in the world.

"Brooklyn's no soft touch either. If they had one fence buster they'd be blamed hard to beat. Almost all of the guys in the race think they've got such a good chance that they just hate to give strength to get strength in some other spot and—Okay, go on over and interview Terry."

Terry Needs a Pitcher but Where's the Trade?

Bill Terry—"How do I know how long my leg's going to let me stay in there? It swells up big and is so sore at night that it's pretty tough sleeping, and what's worse there doesn't seem to be anything anybody can do for it. But I'll stick in there just as long as I can. What's that—

"Bartell? Don't believe everything you read. He's had a charleyhorse in his leg and that's naturally slowed him some, but he's coming along all right. Sure we need him. Who wouldn't need a fellow like him?

"Trade? Certainly I'd make one. I'm not saying we haven't looked bad a few times in the last couple of weeks, but we've got a pretty fair ball club. Give us another pitcher to go along with what we have and —

"Why don't I get one then? Say, why don't you go on over there and interview Grimm. What? Okay, you can stay then, but don't ask any more questions like that. Haven't you ever met any other managers in this league?

"What? You're right, it's a tough race. Maybe it won't be decided until three or four clubs are at the wire, which would suit us swell the way we're keeping close up now. Maybe the breaks will decide it. Anyhow, there's no soft spots."

PREAKNESS Pickings: Bold Venture joined an illustrious company of ponies including Sir Barton, Gallant Fox, Burgoo King and Omaha that have won both the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness. Twenty Grand and Cavalcade, Derby winners, were second when they tried their luck at the Preakness.

Only two fillies have reached the winners' circle. They were Rhine Maiden in 1915 and Nellie Morse in 1924. . . . Tom Healey has been the most successful of the modern trainers in the $25,000 classic. He saddled four winners, Vigil, Pillory, Display and Doctor Freeland. The combination of Owner G. L. Lorillard and Trainer R. W. Walden was tops among the ancients. They had all five winners from 1878 to 1882. Walden also was the winning trainer in 1875 and was both owner and trainer of Refund, who romped home in front in 1888. . . .

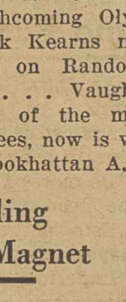
Just to show that things were on the up and up in those days a horse named Welcher finished second in a field of two in 1884.

Not in the Box Score:

There is an unwritten baseball law that there shall be no "throwing" at night. The lights and shadows make it so difficult for a batter to dodge that even the hardest-hearted pitchers prefer to aim at the outside corners rather than be charged with manslaughter. . . . Baltcazar Sanchile, recognized in Europe as the world's bantamweight champion, says he started boxing because he didn't want to go to work. . . . The Meusels, Irish and Bob, are playing semi-pro baseball in Los Angeles. . . . Pa Stribling now peddles automobiles in Hattiesburg, Miss. . . . Elmer Layden, the Notre Dame football mentor, is flooding the mails with circulars advertising his forthcoming Olympic tour. . . . Jack Kearns now operates a tavern on Randolph street in Chicago. . . . Vaughan Williams, long one of the most capable soccer referees, now is vice president of the Brookhattan A. C.

Bill Tilden Fading as Box Office Magnet

A sports idol seems to be fading at last. Although the Lott-Stoefen-Vines unit continues to do very well at the box office, Pro Tennis Promoter Bill O'Brien is losing money on his Bill Tilden troupe. . . . Tickets for the Louis-Schmeling affair cost four cents each. That is, Mike Jacobs pays $40 a thousand for the cardboards and the printing on them. This, incidentally, is a high-class job, since fight ducats ordinarily are prepared for $6 a thousand. . . . The Evans brothers, who run the Loch Sheldrake resort where Jim Braddock trained to win his world championship, continue to bet that the luck of their spot will hold good when the title is finally defended.



Tilden

Mike Jacobs, the sports impresario who probably knows more about Broadway than any living man, continues an old-fashioned guy under his modish haberdashery. He wears long underwear the year around. . . . There are big-time players who will bet you that the average annual salary of the Athletics is less than $2,000 a year although the average among other clubs is double that amount. . . . The Children's Aid Society Sandlot league, which provided recreation for 3,998 baseball playing youngsters last year, is continuing the good work this summer with the able assistance of Col. Jacob Ruppert. . . . Willie Herkert, secretary of the German-American Football association, once starred with the Brooklyn Wanderers and was a member of the G. A. F. team which toured Germany in 1930.

Racetrack touts are gents who keep up with the times. In states where there are laws against the hopping of horses they start work on a prospect by flashing a badge and hinting that they are narcotic agents. The rest of the sales talk is to the effect that they have spotted several gee-gees which are hop-heads and are letting them run so as to gather conclusive evidence against the owners. Thereupon three out of five prospects fall in with the idea of getting down a sizable bet on his sure thing. . . . If you have been wondering where wrestlers come from take a look at Oklahoma. Mat performers from that state won 18 out of the 23 amateur and collegiate titles, including six Olympic team spots.

The Giants might like to know that several western opponents hint they quit when the going gets tough. The athletes say that when a Dean or a Warneke is rifling the ball across, the Polo Grounds performers seem all too anxious to get away from the plate as quickly as possible, so they (Joe Moore is excluded by the scandalmongers) hit feebly at bad balls instead of waiting out the speed hurlers. . . . Bookmakers are happy to discover that even the parimutuel machines have a bit of larceny in them and that a totalizator once welched in England. This was a movable device that was carted from track to track and one day it left before the races were over.

VIGILANTES WAR ON RURAL CRIME

Loss From Farm Thefts Is Greater Than From Bank Robberies and Kidnaping in Illinois; Organize Vigilante Corps

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WHO is Public Enemy No. 1? The kidnaper? The gang killer? The bank robber? The racketeer?

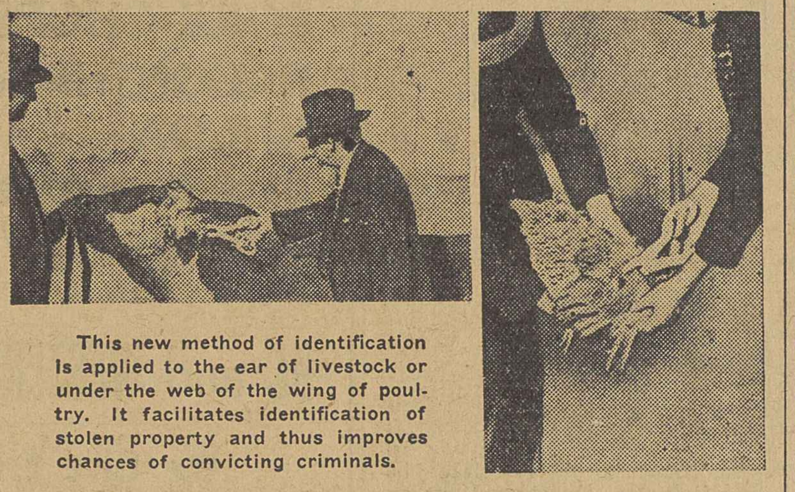
Perhaps. At least it is these desperadoes whose spectacular exploits make the big headlines. Their ruthless and merciless work, often conducted right out in the open, is not infrequently touched up with a bit of showmanship which makes them the type of characters which fire the public imagination.

The urgency for exercising every method within human means for apprehending these criminals is not to be minimized. But the very publicity, ascending sometimes to outright ballyhoo in the enthusiasms of the more vigorous press, which attends their comings and goings, unfortunately overshadows another type of public enemy, who works quietly and in most cases inconspicuously, but whose evil deeds are often of more serious consequence than those of his more spectacular brother in crime.

The citizen who lives in rural areas or on the farms often entertains this Rural Public Enemy No. 1 in his own back yard without knowing it. For this is the common chicken thief. He and the others of his kind who steal horses, cattle, and farm produce and machinery are, collectively, far more important to the farmer than all of the bank robbers in creation.

Importance Is Unrealized.

Chicken stealing is usually regarded as a low type of crime, perpetrated only by the small fry, the hungry hobo or the wayward, minstrel-joke darkey. Often when the thief is caught he is sent on his way with a kick in the pants or is simply given a good scare. It is not unusual to find the farmer he has attempted to burglarize protecting him from prosecution which might net him six months on a state penal farm, a sentence that might be regarded as "a little stiff" for just stealing a chicken or two.



This new method of identification is applied to the ear of livestock or under the web of the wing of poultry. It facilitates identification of stolen property and thus improves chances of convicting criminals.

Stiff sentence? The monetary loss to farmers last year in one state alone Illinois—from chicken stealing and kindred rural crimes was more than the loss of the entire nation from bank robberies and kidnapings, according to Ross C. Saunders, rural crime prevention inspector for the state agriculture department. From the 231,000 farms of the state, says Saunders, there were stolen 1,500,000 chickens, 20,000 head of cattle and uncounted tools and implements.

Other states have been subjected to enormous losses from what seems on the surface to be petty thievery. A survey conducted in Indiana by a farm magazine revealed that in a single year there were 580,185 head of poultry stolen, 2,322 hogs, 3,212 head of other livestock, 7,123 gallons of gasoline, 27,122 bushels of grain. There were 819 thefts of tools and implements, 138 thefts of clothing, 997 thefts of goods and 2,253 miscellaneous thefts from farms.

In Illinois chicken thefts, for ten years during which some sort of check has been maintained, have averaged about a million head of chickens annually and 12,000 head of livestock. The situation, which reached a climax when a young man of Will county was brutally murdered while trying to protect his employer against loss at the hands of thieves, called for action.

Mass Meeting Starts It.

Action that was taken in this state has proved so successful that now Illinois' methods are serving as a model for the combat against rural crime in other states. Inspector Saunders, working under Walter L. McLaughlin, state director of agriculture, and in close co-operation with press and radio, has served as the focal head for the campaign. Already it is bearing fruit, for while the decrease in crime throughout the nation generally last year was 13 per cent, the decrease in Illinois was 40 per cent. Especially in the last six months has the fight against rural crime proved to be a victorious one for justice.

It began in Joliet, Will county, with a mass meeting in which more than 1,000 farmers gathered following the murder of youthful John Blivernicht, who went to investigate a suspicious car in the neighborhood of his employer's farm and was shot in cold blood. Eugene Shilcut, the negro who killed him, escaped, but was found later in Tennessee, shot to death by a bullet from a .22.

Because Will county was the first openly to declare war on rural crime, the results of its meeting and organization were watched with interest by the entire Middle West. The farmers of the county themselves were in a fever heat of indignation against the three or four complaints of theft which had been made to authorities every night.

From evidence uncovered at this meeting and at meetings in other parts of the state it became apparent that rural thievery was not the work of individuals, but of gangs. Often these gangs were led by seasoned criminals who had been driven from the cities by the efficient campaign against crime there. These leaders hired men to make systematic small thefts; the combined total of all of them was enough to stamp the new racket as important.

Cattle Rustling Returns.

Even cattle rustling became big business to the gangs, although it was not, to be sure, the cattle rustling of the old West. In these days of smooth, concrete highways and fast-moving trucks it is possible to steal a few head of cattle, load them onto a truck and move them across a state in a single night. Often the gangs worked in relays, one truck spiriting away the stolen animals and another waiting for the load to be transferred to it at the state line. Sometimes the gang's hideout was 300 or 400 miles away from the area where most of their thievery was perpetrated.

Farmers, slow to awaken to the seriousness of the disappearance of their livestock and chickens a few head at a time, were often entirely unaware that their neighbors were experiencing similar losses. Small losses were seldom reported; farmers in some cases undoubtedly thought themselves fully capable of coping with a common chicken thief. Where it was actually discovered that the thefts were the work of gangs or of the more desperate type of criminal, farm families hesitated to report thefts for fear the burglars would return and set their houses or farm buildings on fire.

The answer seems now to be that in union there is strength. Thirty days after the Will county farmers met and organized, Sheriff Breen was able to report that thievery had stopped.

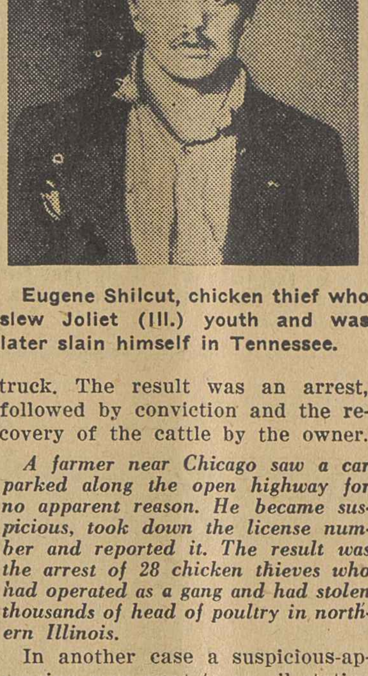
How did these farmers effect this efficient clean-up so swiftly?

Eyes Opened, Ears Peeled

Definite instructions are given all farmers in the area. Farmers and their families are trained to be on the lookout for suspicious automobiles and suspicious-looking strangers and situations. When a theft is reported, the farmers immediately report any actions or persons of a suspicious nature that they may have observed at or near the time of the theft. More often than not the information obtained leads to a solution of the crime.

How this works may be shown by a few examples:

Recently a man was convicted of cattle-stealing in Iowa. He had been transporting the cattle through Illinois to his farm near South Bend, Ind. Two women saw his truck at an oil station and the furtive manner of its occupants aroused suspicion. The women copied the name and address from the side of the truck. The result was an arrest, followed by conviction and the recovery of the cattle by the owner.



Eugene Shilcut, chicken thief who slew Joliet (Ill.) youth and was later slain himself in Tennessee.

A farmer near Chicago saw a car parked along the open highway for no apparent reason. He became suspicious, took down the license number and reported it. The result was the arrest of 28 chicken thieves who had operated as a gang and had stolen thousands of head of poultry in northern Illinois.

In another case a suspicious-appearing man went to an oil station to buy gasoline at two o'clock on a cold winter morning. His actions and general conversation didn't quite ring true. They were reported and Sheriff Clarence Roth of Champaign county caught several cattle and hog thieves as a result.

Other Methods Help.

Cases just like these can be rattled off by the hundreds. Co-operation by all the farmers, a really simple thing to accomplish in areas where losses have been heavy, is about all that is needed. It has been shown that the gangs pull up stakes when the farmers unite against them.

There are other methods which can be of great help. A large number of hen houses are now being equipped with burglar alarms which have proved effective. But even more important is the institution in each state of uniform registration of poultry and livestock. If it were required that some kind of identification mark be put on the web of the wing of poultry and on the ear or some part of the body of animals that would be a protection.

It is all too frequent an occurence that suspected criminals, when their cases come to trial, are of necessity acquitted because the complaining farmer has no way of positively identifying his poultry or his live stock. This "branding" can make such identification possible.

A method has been developed in Illinois which seems to fill the bill and which will probably be adopted soon by the farmers of other states. The mark is quickly applied with a simple tool and the application is far more humane than the old-time branding with a hot iron and is in effect somewhat similar to tattooing.

Branding, of course, would also remove the packing companies which buy the farmers' product from embarrassing positions in which they sometimes find themselves. They occasionally and quite innocently buy stolen poultry or livestock from thieves without knowing it, and thus help foster rural crime. The law makes it mandatory for the buyers of stolen goods to reimburse the losers upon proof that the property was stolen.

Cheaper Feed for More Profit

Home-Grown Grains Can Increase Farmer's Margin.

More than one farmer is making the most of the improved prices for dairy products by adopting economical feeding methods. Savings made through more economical feeding are only one of the many ways in which farmers who are members of dairy herd improvement associations are finding that they can increase their returns.

Substitution of home-grown grains for more expensive protein feeds together with replacement of part of the corn by oats are two ways by which dairymen are finding it possible to cut feed costs without lowering their herd production averages. One farmer increased his monthly net income from 17 cows by $10.88 with a less expensive ration. Oats replaced a part of the corn in the ration, thus reducing the cost of feed approximately 24 cents a hundred pounds. His herd also produced 34 more pounds of butterfat a month on the cheaper feed.

Another increased his net income 11.55 a month through the same kind of a ration change.

A third dairyman used a ration composed of corn, oats and distiller's grain instead of corn and a high protein supplement previously used and was able to cut feed costs by nine cents a hundred pounds, although the protein content was the same. The cheaper ration reduced the feed cost of butterfat by five cents a pound and the feed cost of milk by 14 cents a hundred pounds.

Control of Erosion Important to Farmer

Controlling erosion, the thief of fertile topsoil, is a prominent feature of the new soil-improvement program. The soil-building and conserving crops advocated under the new program serve to check erosion in several ways.

While these crops are growing, their roots form a thick mat which holds the soil particles in place. They also check the run-off of rain water by impeding its flow down hill and by increasing the capacity of the land to absorb water in large quantities.

Then after they have been plowed under, the building and conserving crops add organic matter to the soil that makes it soft and spongy. Rain soaks into such soil and is held for long periods.

Soil well filled with organic matter also has a great tendency to remain in place than gritty sand or clay soils. When the soil absorbs large quantities of water it prevents floods during heavy rains and keeps the land from drying out so completely when rainfall is scarce.

On an 8 per cent slope a field on which nothing but corn is grown will lose 25 per cent of its rainfall by immediate run-off and an average of 67 tons of soil per acre through erosion each year.

But if the field is in a good soil-building crop, it will lose less than 5 per cent of its rainfall and only a few hundred pounds of soil per acre.

When corn, wheat, and clover are grown in rotation, the average run-off of rain water is less than half the amount from a field kept continually in corn, and the soil losses are only one-seventh as much.

Where Codling Moth Lives

Punky wood and split branches are favored hibernating places for the codling moth. All dead branches and stubs should be removed in pruning, and the ends of broken branches cut off smoothly so they will heal over. Limbs removed in the regular pruning should be cut off close to the point of origin. Stubs heal very slowly or not at all, and usually develop into excellent places for codling moths to hibernate. Pruning cuts more than two inches in diameter should be protected by wood-preserving paint to facilitate healing and prevent rotting.—Missouri Farmer.

Black-Draught Good Laxative
Black-Draught has been kept on hand for all the family in the home of Mr. W. A. Lemons, of Independence, Va., since twenty years ago. Mr. Lemons writes that he takes it as a laxative in cases of "headache, dull, tired feeling, biliousness."
"And I take it if I feel uncomfortable after a heavy meal," he adds. "I especially use it for sick headache. It certainly is good."
When a man says "Black-Draught is good," it is probably because he remembers the prompt, refreshing relief it brought in constipation troubles. It is a simple, herb laxative; natural in composition and action.

BEELAND STATEMENT "FULL OF ERRORS" SAYS SUPT. KELLER

CHALLENGES STATEMENT OF BUTLER COUNTY MAN ON SCHOOL FUNDS

Montgomery, Ala., June 8.—In a statement issued Saturday Dr. J. A. Kellar, State Superintendent of Education, charged that the statement concerning the schools of Butler County issued last week by Jeff Beeland, Chairman of the Consumers Anti-Sales Tax Association, was "full of errors" and carried "erroneous figures." Beeland's statement appeared as an advertisement in several of the state papers. Among other things Beeland asserted that 24 per cent of the Butler County school funds had been spent for purposes other than teachers' salaries and bus transportation. Beeland asked the question whether similar conditions prevail in other counties of the state.

In his answer, Dr. Kellar explained:

"An advertisement over the name of Jeff Beeland, Chairman of the Consumers Anti-Sales Tax Association, which is filled with errors has appeared recently in several of the daily newspapers of the state. This advertisement carries erroneous figures concerning the expenditures of the Butler County school system for the current year. It is stated that 24 per cent of all school money of Butler County was used for executive expense, home demonstration agent's salary, child welfare department and libraries. As a matter of fact, only $4,848, or 4 per cent, of the school money of Butler County has been expended for these purposes to date.

"It is further stated in this advertisement that the schools of Butler County could have operated full terms on the moneys available this year. Actually the total expenditures of the Butler County Board of Education including the apportionment of the City Board of Education of Greenville, will be approximately $137,412 for the year 1935-1936 on the basis of operating their elementary schools six months and one week, and high schools eight months and one week. The actual revenue receipts of Butler County this year will be $133,232. Thus is readily seen that the Butler County schools actually operated longer terms than they had funds to operate on. This was made up by fees and donations.

"The cash balance of the Butler County Board of Education is also referred to, but it is not explained that this cash balance is a sinking fund set aside for school building purposes and belongs to district 1, and is not properly applicable to the whole county.

"It is further stated that teachers salaries have been raised in Butler County. Prior to this year, Butler County has been paying less than the state minimum salary schedlue allows. The County Board of Education merely brought the salaries of the Butler County teachers in line with those of other teachers in the state by placing them on the state salary schedule. . . . "

Leadership School June 17

The third leadership school for home demonstration club work will be held Wednesday, June 17, at Columbiana. The demonstration will be on Food Preservation.

All leaders and presidents of clubs are urgently requested to attend. A special effort is being made to have every club in the county represented.—Mary Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent.

An Appreciation Of Dr. and Mrs. Brooks

Editor Montevallo Times:

I feel that in expressing my own regret at the departure of Dr. and Mrs. Lee M. Brooks from Alabama College at the close of the 1935-36 school session, I am also expessing the sentiments of their numerous friends in Montevallo.

During the past year, as instructor of our Contemporary Problems Course on the campus, Dr. Brooks has helped to establish firmly in the minds of his students certain definite values as a basis for studying vital present-day needs. With patience, sincerity and a deep human interest he devoted both his time and his energy to making clear various hazy conceptions and biased views with regard to the state of our political, social, and economic affairs. His unity of form, and clarity of purpose, notwithstanding his quick wit and sparkling sense of humor will long be remembered by students and faculty, as well as townspeople in Montevallo.—Sincerely, Ruth Nathews.

Exchange Students At Alabama College

In the graduating class at Alabama College this session was Miss Annette Ebrard, exchange student from France, who formerly attended Oxford University and the University of Paris. Miss Suzanne Laclavere, of Cannes, France, also attended Alabama College as an exchange student.

Miss Minique Baillet of Nimes, France and Miss Carmen Sierra Abadiano, of Mexico City, will attend the college as exchange students during the 1936-37 session, when they will lead the conversations in their native tongues at special dining room tables and at club functions conducted in these languages.

The French Government has given the college the three volume edition of Saint-Beuve, Profils et Jugements Litteraires, which is to be awarded to the student submitting the best original essay in French on Saint-Beuve. It was granted the college as an incentive to scholarships in French.

Shorter Terms For Schools Planned

A COMPARISON OF ALABAMA SCHOOLS WITH THOSE OF OTHER STATES

While two of the larger city school systems of the state, Bessemer and Selma, are planning shortened school sessions next year because of lack of funds, none of the 331 school systems in other states reporting to the National Education Association in Washington during April and May have shortened their terms.

One hundred twenty-one of these were small cities reporting May 20; only 15 plan school sessions for 1936-37 shorter than before the depression. All of these had more than nine months before 1932, and plan a full nine-month session for next year.

This is in contrast to the eight-month term planned by Bessemer and Selma, and an average of five and three fourths months expected by a majority of the Alabama county schools.

During the year just finished only one of the 11 larger city systems of Alabama paid an average monthly salary higher than that paid in 1929. Gadsden paid about one dallar per month more, while the other ten paid their teachers less per month than was received before the depression. The cities included in this study are Anniston, Selma, Bessemer, Dothan, Florence, Gadsden, Huntsville, Talladega, Tuscaloosa and Decatur. Mobile and Montgomery are in the county school system.

In contrast, only 22 per cent of the cities reporting to Washington in May failed to restore teachers' salaries to figures paid before the depression. Only 14 per cent of those reporting in April show the teachers receiving less than they did in 1929 while 86 per cent have restored salaries to pre-depression levels.

Six cities reporting had terms in 1935-36 shorter than before the depression and plan to restore them next year. Only two, Greensboro and High Point, N. C., had terms of less than nine months last year. These cities had nine months before the depression, eight in 1935-36, and plan to return to nine months next year.

Two systems in the group of 121 smaller cities report longer terms for 1936-37 than they had before 1932. Four others having nine months or more last year are planning longer terms for 1936-37.

Fifteen of the cities reported are still expecting terms for 1936-37 shorter than before the depression. However, all of them had ten months or slightly less before 1932 and are planning nine months or more next year.

NATIVE OF MONTEVALLO DIED IN COLORADO

Funeral services were held for Mr. Abb C. Fancher in Birmingham Friday last, who died in Pueblo, Colorado, after a brief illness. Mr. Fancher was born and reared in this community, and had many friends and a number of relatives here who will mourn his passing. He had made his home in the west for the past several years, having formerly resided in Birmingham. He was 56 years of age and is survived by his wife and two daughters.

John Carr Having A Streak of Luck

At the close of school he was awarded five dollars cash prize for the best grade in Alabama history. With this five dollars he set himself up to a new pair of shoes.

Last Saturday his name was called for the fifty dollars grand prize at the Trade Day event—and he was right there to claim his award.

In the hope of keeping up his winning streak, John says he thinks he will go up to the picture show on Wednesday night and grab off the jack pot.

"When it rains, it pours," he says—but the sad part of it is that it don't seem to rain any more.

We congratulate John upon his luck—and hope that it will have rained and poured by the time you have read these lines.

Alumnae Association Passes Resolutions

At a meeting of the Alabama College Alumnae Association following Commencement exercises, a resolution was unanimously adopted and transmitted to the Governor and members of the State legislature pertaining to the financial condition of education and the need of additional funds to meet salaries for the current year.

The resolution in full, is as follows:

Whereas, in the opinion of the Alabama College Alumnae in called session, the failure on the part of the State of Alabama to pay the appropriations to the institutions of higher learning is seriously jeopardizing the cause of education in the state, be it resolved that the governor and the legislators of the State of Alabama be requested to take immediate steps to see that all appropriations be paid in full;

Be it resolved, further, that the Governor and Legislature be requested to amend the law so that funds will be paid to the institutions of higher learning from the Alabama Special Educational Trust Fund.

Legion Meeting Is Called For June 18

Attention of American Legion members is called to the meeting of Hendrick-Hudson Post to be held at the Legion Hut in Montevallo Thursday night, June 18, at 7:30 o'clock.

A special and important item of business at this meeting will be the election of officers of the post for the next year; also election of delegates to the state Legion Convention, which meets at Huntsville July 19 to 21.

All post members are especially urged to come to this meeting, and an invitation is extended all veterans to attend.

NOTICE, VETERANS

After receipt of the Service bonds veterans are reminded that they must not sign these bonds except in the presence of certifying officer at post office.

Mr. Kennerly To Improve Property

BUSINESS HOUSES MAY BE BUILT SOON NEAR NEW POSTOFFICE SITE

Mr. W. J. Kennerly has bought the property occupied by the Reynolds old residence on the corner of Vine and Main streets, across Vine Street from the new postoffice site.

The lot is a large space in the corner of the block. The Reynolds residence is being moved to the north side of the lot and will be remodeled, improved and made into an apartment house, it is announced by Mr. Kennerly. Mrs. Reynolds will continue to live in a part of the house in accordance with the terms of her sale to Mr. Kennerly.

Removal of the residence to the side of the lot will leave the corner vacant, and it is the plan of Mr. Kennerly to develop this corner as a business location, for which it will be one of the most desirable places in Montevallo.

No definite plans for the business building have been made thus far, but there will doubtless be a number of concerns seeking this attractive location. Mr. Kennerly will develop it to suit the tenant whom he trades with.

King Cotton To Have Part In Road Building

Montgomery, Ala., June 9.—The choice of work program labor to lay the first stretch of cotton binder for paving in Alabama as a part of the "three-way" program is a source of gratification to the Works Progress Administration and a tribute to the demonstrated efficiency of the work program labor, Ray Crow, state WPA administrator said here today.

The paving will be laid under the joint supervision of the State Highway Department and the United States Bureau of Public Roads, the Bureau of Public Roads having allocated $3,000,000 to test the use of cotton in paving material.

The "three-way" project chosen for the test is a 12-mile stretch between the Tuscaloosa County line and Reform, a heavily traveled road and sonsidered typical in soil texture of most Alabama roads.

Nearly all of the labor employed on road paving projects, both on the "three-way" and the Federal aid routes was drawn from the work program reservoir. The three-way projects are financed by the state, counties and Works Progress Administration, each paying one third of the cost.

Approximately 450 miles of three-way paving is being laid in the State, Administrator Crow said.

"The Works Progress Administration," he said, "is delighted to have a part in this forward looking experiment, which, if it proves successful, may mean so much to the farmers and the cotton industry in the south."

Mr. W. C. Graves, with the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, and daughter, Francis, of Birmingham, were visitors in town Friday.

Establishment Of Hospitals To Care For Sick and Destitute Is Contemplated

Montgomery, Ala., June 9.—Establishment of several hospitals in the state for the care and treatment of sick, destitute persons is contemplated by the State Department of Public Welfare.

The plan which has the hearty approval of Gov. Bibb Graves and many socially minded members of the legislature, is the logical conclusion of the Welfare Department's successful efforts to close and abandon county alms-houses.

"Poor houses' in 27 counties already have been closed, reducing the state alms-house population from 3,000 to less than 1,100 in slightly more than a year. Former inmates of those institutions have been placed in relatives' and foster homes, with many receiving old age gensions and thus left happily to their own devices.

"Approximately 15 per cent of the alms-house inmates are bedridden or otherwise physically defective to the extent that hospitilization is necessary," Dr. A. H. Collins, welfare commissioner, said.

"However, an appreciable number of these sick men and women can be placed in private homes in congenial environment and at considerable less expense than was possible in the alms-houses," Dr. Collins said.

Comparing the per capita cost in alms-houses with the cost in relatives' or foster homes, Dr. Collins said the Department's survey showed alms-house care averaged $14.50 per capita a month against $9.96 in private homes.

"It is the policy of the Welfare Department, wherever possible, to place residents of alms-houses," Dr. Collins said. "Our survey shows 63 per cent of alms-house residents are eligible for old age pensions. For the month of November, 1935, the alms-houses cost the counties $20,700. By deducting 63 per cent of that amount, or $13,041, that sum is matched by the state, with the Federal government matching both state and county funds, bringing the total to $52,164."

Thus, the counties' estimated annual cash outlay of $156,000 for the care of aged persons is increased by State and Federal matching to approximately $628,000, or more than quadrupled, Dr. Collins pointed out.

"County governing bodies are eagerly taking advantage of this opportunity to increase their local funds for the care of indigents, thus broadening their social welfare activities," he added. "By the end of the current year we hope to cloes at least 60 county alms-houses."

Because the Federal government through the Social Security program, has made no provision for hospitals such as those now contemplated, the cost of establishing and maintaining these institutions must be borne by the state and the several counties participating, Collins explained.

The total cost of the hospitals would be only a small percentage of the amount accruing to the counties by shutting down the alms-houses, it was explained.

A bill providing for the establishment of the hospitals under the joint supervision of the Welfare and State Health Department, will be presented at the next session of the Legislature, Dr. Collins said.

Strand To Begin Sunday Pictures On Next Sunday

Shows will begin at 2:00 and 3:40 in the afternoon. The theatre will be closed from about 5:45 until the night program, which begins at 8:45. Only one program will be shown at night.

There will be three shows each Sunday and admission prices will be the same as on other days.

For the opening Sunday show on next Sunday, the Strand will present Robert Taylor and Loretta Young in "Private Number." In this new picture you will see the screen's perfect sweethearts in the year's greatest romantic thrill.

Summer School Starts Thursday

MANY ACTIVITIES PLANNED OVER PERIOD OF SEVERAL WEEKS

Summer School at Alabama College will begin June 11 following the close of the annual Young People's Assembly of the Methodist Church which was in session on the campus until June 9.

Interest in the summer work at Alabama College is increased by the special feature in Progressive Education, the Demonstration School being continued on high and elementary school levels. This work will continue until the close of the first term, July 22. The second term will be held July 23-August 26.

Alabama Writers' Conclave, June 16-19; Progressive Education Regional Conference, July 1-3; Life Career Conference, July 8-10; The School of Instruction for Vocational Home Economics Teachers July 27-August 15; Camp for Girls, July 27-August 22 are the other assemblies on the campus. A faculty of more than sixty members will be supplemented by special lecturers on Progressive Education at intervals during the summer. The regular schedule of classes includes courses in art, biology, chemistry and physics, education, English, history, home economics, mathematics, modern languages, music, physical education, psychology, sociology and speech.

The Demonstration Schools will be directed by Dr. Alice V. Keliher, chairman of the Commission in Human Relations of the Progressive Education Association, who has for the past two years participated in this work at Alabama College.

The summer school is under the direction of Dean T. H. Napier, assisted by Dr. M. L. Orr, director of the training school.

LAYMEN'S SERVICE SUNDAY AT THE METHODIST CHURCH

A special laymen's service will be held at the Montevallo Methodist Church next Sunday at the morning worship hour.

The pastor will preach at the evening service.

An invitation is extended to everyone to attend.

MEN'S BIBLE CLASS

Mr. W. J. Kennerly of the Alabama College faculty, and superintendent of the Presbyterian Church School, spoke to the Men's Bible Class at the Strand Theatre last Sunday morning.

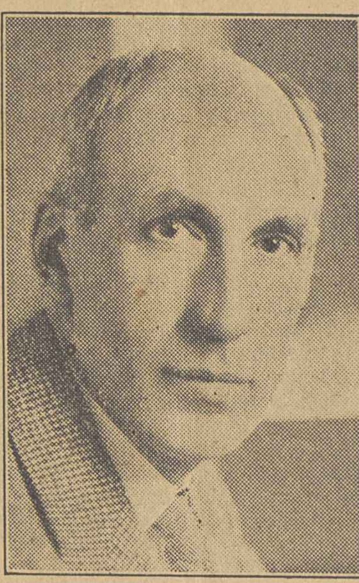
Ohio Educator Will Deliver Lectures



DR. H. GORDON HULLFISH

Dr. H. Gordon Hullfish, professor of education at Ohio State University and educational director of Dalton High School, of New York City, will be at Alabama College during the first term of summer school for a series of lectures. For the past few years he has had charge of the reorganizing and redirecting of the program of Dalton High School. He will hold seminars on redirecting the program of the secondary school and the integration of the secondary school program with the life needs of the adolescent. The first term of summer school at Alabama College begins June 11.

J. A. Griffin Dies Native of Shelby

J. A. Griffin, Sr., passed away at his home in Maylene Thursday, June 4th, at the age of 76 years.

Mr. Griffin had lived in this community all of his life. He was liked by all who knew him. If he had an enemy anywhere it was unknown. He was a hard worker and a wonderful provider.

It seems hard to give up our loved ones, but God giveth and God taketh. So as the years roll by, let us so live that we may meet our loved ones. May God's richest blessings be with the bereaved family.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mattie Griffin, one son, J. A. Griffin, Jr., three daughters, Miss Iona Griffin and Mrs. S. M. Walker, of Maylene, and Mrs. P. M. Russell, of Birmingham.

Funeral services were held from the home Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. He was laid to rest at Cedar Grove Cemetery. Rogan was in charge.

Striped Bass Are Running In Coosa

Wetumpka, Ala., June 9.—The striped bass are now running in the Coosa River and sunrise will find Elmore County anglers perched on top the rocks above Wetumpka most any morning now.

These husky fellows arrived about the middle of May and immediately the fishermen in this neck of the woods began to haul out their heavy tackle.

Bob Grier, of Wetumpka, was one of the first to conquer the big "rocks" and brought home two in one day, one weighing 23 pounds and the other 21 pounds. He has caught 16 of these fellows since 1931.

Demp Thrash, whose past experiences with rock bass led him to start manufacturing durable fishing poles, reported the second big catch of the season—a 19-pounder.

The striped bass is a salt water fish and belongs to the rock bass family. Every year about this time they invade the Coosa and generally leave in their wake a young mountain of twisted and broken tackle.

This bass is one of the toughest scrappers in the business and more often than not the fisherman comes off second best. Frequently they make away with his hook, line, rod and reel.

The best rock bass fishing is experienced when the Alabama Power Company closes Lock 18, permitting the water to fall. It is then that the fresh water fishermen of Elmore get out their salt water tackle.

GORGAS STEAM PLANT PUT INTO OPERATION LAST SUNDAY

Because of the severe drouth throughout Alabama the No. 2 or new Gorgas steam plant of the Alabama Power Company, on the Warrior River in Walker County, was placed in operation Sunday.

It is estimated that 1,000 tons of coal per day will be required for operations at the plant which will continue for several months.

Herbert S. Salmon, president of Alabama Coals, Inc., upon hearing of this gave out the following statement:

"Upon my return to Birmingham I heard good news for Alabama Coal miners. The Gorgas steam plant of the Alabama Power Company will resume operations Sunday requiring more than 1,000 tons of coal per day. It probably will be kept in operation for several months.

"When we realize that the use of Alabama coal for all industrial uses has shrunk to less than 2,000,000 tons per year we realize that 1,000 tons per day is an important increase of more than 20 per cent in the consumption of this kind of Alabama coal. The coal mine and railroad employees engaged in producing and transporting the coal, the merchants and other business concerns of Alabama, especially those located in Jasper and other towns in that section, may well rejoice at this good news.

"While these steam power plants operate, the coal miners, railroad employees, merchants and business people generally will enjoy greatly improved conditions. When the TVA completes its electric generating equipment at Wheeler Dam, Pickwick, Guntersville and other cites, the electric energy supplied from the Gorgas steam plants will be produced by water power with resulting unemployment to Alabama coal miners."

If the drouth continues the Alabama Power Company may bring into operation the No. 1 plant at Gorgas which would more than double the tonnage required.

The operation of these plants not only increases employment but through increased payrolls and additional taxes exerts a stimulating effect on business throughout the entire state as well as in the Warrior coal fields.

B. F. CARR NOW OPERATING BLACKSMITH SHOP

Mr. B. F. Carr is now operating a blacksmith shop in Montevallo, having recently taken charge of the old Kroell shop at the rear of Towery Motor Company.

In addition to general blacksmith work Mr. Carr will specialize in building truck bodies for which his shop is well equipped.

The shop equipment includes the various small machines and appliances usually found in a blacksmith shop, and also a large power-driven drill press and band saw.

Mr. Carr solicits the patronage of the people of this vicinity, with his assurance that he will do good work and render prompt and satisfactory service.

POULTRY SPECIALIST

Mr. John Ivey, poultry specialist, from Auburn, will be with us again for another most interesting and instructive poultry meeting on Tuesday, June 16th, at 9:00 o'clock at the City Hall, Wilsonville, Alabama.

This will be well worth your time and we are looking forward to seeing you.—A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent; Marye Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent.

Dr. Peters To Be At Summer Session

Dr. D. W. Peters, director of instruction at the Virginia Department of Education, is director of curriculum studies at the Alabama College summer school which opens June 11. Dr. Peters received his Bachelor of Science degree at Roanoke College and his Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy degrees at Columbia University. He has been associated with the school systems at Richmond, Cape Charles and Northhampton, and has been at his present position since 1932.

The first term of summer school will continue until July 22, the second term beginning the following day and running until August 26. Three courses will be offered in curriclum making. The curriculum laboratory will be conducted in cooperation with the Progressive Education program and the development of large units of work in the Demonstration School will be included in the laboratory work. The College is cooperating with the State Department of Education in its elementary and high school curriculum revision program.

The Progressive Education Demonstration Schools on elementary and high school levels will coincide with the first term of summer school.

Sudden Death of Speaker Byrns—Rome Hails Badoglio While London Cheers Haile Selassie—Rural Houswives of World Convene.

J. W. Byrns

DEATH, sudden and unexpected, came to Joseph Wellington Byrns, speaker of the house of representatives, and put an end to a notable career. The veteran Tennessee congressman suffered a heart attack, followed by a cerebral hemorrhage, and passed away within a few hours in his apartment in the Mayflower hotel, Washington. For 27 years Mr. Byrns had represented the "Hermitage district" of Tennessee in the house, and he was elected speaker when the Seventy-fourth congress convened in January, 1935. He was a master of parliamentary strategy and so fair-minded a presiding officer that all, even his political opponents, praised and admired him. Before becoming speaker he served long years on the appropriations committee, as member and chairman, and he also was leader of the Democratic majority and chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee.

Grief for Mr. Byrns' death was general and sincere in Washington officialdom. "I am shocked beyond all imagination," said Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, the minority leader. "It is a terrible thing. It is an almost irreparable loss."

Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, the majority leader, after expressing his own sense of loss, added: "His work during the session has been very difficult and trying. He was a great speaker."

President Roosevelt in a statement from the White House expressed well the high esteem in which Mr. Byrns was held. Said he: "Fearless, incorruptible, unselfish, with a high sense of justice, wise in counsel, broad of vision, calm in adversity, and modest in victory, he served his state and the nation with fidelity, honor, and great usefulness. I personally mourn the passing of a steadfast friend of many years."

Impressive funeral services were held in the chamber of the house, the President, members of the cabinet and numerous diplomats being present in addition to all members of congress. The body was then taken to Nashville, Tenn., for burial, and Mr. Roosevelt accompanied the special congressional committee there.

The house elected William B. Bankhead of Alabama speaker for the remainder of the session.

The death of Speaker Byrns followed closely that of another well-known congressman, A. Platt Andrew of Massachusetts, a Republican. He died of influenza at his home in Gloucester at the age of sixty-three. Mr. Andrew, who taught economics at Harvard more than thirty years ago, was director of the mint for a few months under President Taft and then was assistant secretary of the treasury. He was elected to congress in 1921, and supported much of President Roosevelt's early legislation.

Viceroy Badoglio

MARSHAL PIETRO BADOGLIO, conqueror of Ethiopia and now viceroy of that part of the reconstituted "Roman empire," returned to the Eternal City in triumph and was vociferously welcomed as a hero. Sixty thousand Romans welcomed him as he stepped from his train, and Premier Mussolini modestly waited in the background until they had shouted their greetings to the veteran warrior. Then Il Duce came forward and kissed the viceroy on both cheeks and the higher ranking Fascist military leaders paid homage. With the premier and the picked troops forming the escort of honor were the entire cabinet. Several days later a great military review was held.

The other side of the picture was seen in London, where Haile Selassie, the deposed emperor of Ethiopia, arrived in tears and sadness, though he was given an ovation by the cheering thousands that had seldom been accorded to visitors to England. Many of the Londoners carried Ethiopian flags or scarlet banners reading "Welcome to the Emperor." With the white sympathizers were many African chiefs in native robes, Somalis, negroes, Hindus, Chinese, and colored people from all parts of the world.

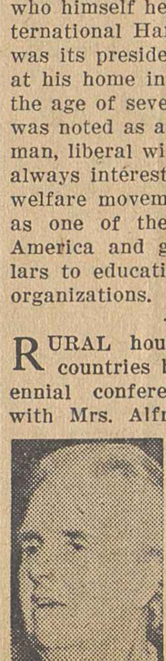
There was an outburst of wild cheering when Selassie, bareheaded and wearing a long cape, stepped from his private sleeping car and was greeted by many notables, including O. C. Harvey, private secretary of Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary. Harvey was the lone representative of the British government.

Selassie received three addresses welcoming "his imperial majesty, Haile Selassie" from representatives of the Ethiopian association, the Friends of Ethiopia, and the Pan-African federation, wishing "Ethiopia's speedy return to independence with the rightful emperor leading his people toward light and peace."

The former emperor smiled sadly "God grant it may be so," he whispered.

MISS CLARA DUTTON NOYES, sixty-six, director of the American Red Cross nursing service, died in Washington a few minutes after she was stricken while driving to work in her car. Miss Noyes was assistant director of the American Red Cross nursing service during the World war. She also had been superintendent of nurses at the Bellevue and allied hospitals in New York.

Cyrus Hall McCormick, whose father developed the farm reaper and who himself helped organize the International Harvester company and was its president for 33 years, died at his home in Lake Forest, Ill., at the age of seventy-seven years. He was noted as a progressive business man, liberal with his employees and always interested actively in public welfare movements. He was rated as one of the wealthiest men in America and gave millions of dollars to educational and charitable organizations.



Mrs. Alfred Watt

RURAL housewives from many countries began their third triennial conference in Washington with Mrs. Alfred Watt of Canada presiding. Their first meeting was held in 1930 in Vienna, and the second in Stockholm three years later. Secretaries Hull and Wallace and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, extended greetings to the visitors, but beyond that there were no set speeches and little formality. Instead, the farm wives held "exchange of experience" sessions, viewed elaborate exhibits of rural needlework and crafts of organized countrywomen of the participating nations, and attended "open houses" held by all branches of the federal government in which countrywomen are particularly interested.

Australian countrywomen maintain seaside homes for convalescents. Canada's Federated Women's institute promotes clubs for rural youth and combats maternal and infant mortality.

By conducting evening classes for young girls Danish countrywomen have helped to check their migration to town to seek factory work.

The East Africa Women's league visits native women in prisons and hospitals and provides information to prospective white settlers.

JUST as the "popular front" in France was taking over the government the country was distracted by strikes that spread rapidly to almost all industrial centers and involved all manner of trades. The workers demanded higher wages, a 40-hour week and a closed shop, and they went out by the hundred thousand though they knew they were causing great embarrassment to their own leaders. In many cases the strikers took possession of the closed plants.

In Spain the syndicalists tied up various industries by strikes that involved about 250,000 workers and that were marked by several murders and other outrages. Augusto Barcia, minister of state, said the government planned to outlaw the syndicalists if they persisted in disobeying orders from the ministries of labor and the interior.

THE Department of Agriculture recommended to the senate that the administration of the Taylor grazing act, affecting 80,000,000 acres of range land, be transferred to its control from the Department of the Interior. Secretary Ickes retorted with the accusation that the Agricultural department had hindered his program to rehabilitate western grazing lands. He said Secretary Wallace's department has insisted upon having so many CCC camps for the forestry service that the Interior department could not get enough CCC help to administer efficiently the Taylor act.

IN A report just made public the business advisory council proposes a simplified basis for industrial self-regulation through the medium of voluntary joint agreements on unfair trade practices enforceable by the federal trade commission. The report was prepared by the council's committee on unfair trade practices of which Lincoln Filene of Boston is chairman.

Outstanding among the committee's proposals were suggestions that each branch of an industry, such as wholesale, retail, and manufacturing, police the activities of each other through confidential reports to the federal trade commission and that no attempt be made to include trade practice and labor provisions in the same agreement.

J. H. THOMAS, until recently British colonial secretary, was found responsible by a special government tribunal for the leak in budget secrets which enabled some of his friends to profit largely through insurance against tax raises. Final disposition of the case was left to the house of commons. Thomas, once an engine wiper and later a powerful figure in organized labor and politics, termed the tribune's verdict "cruel." He said: "My own conscience is clear. I repeat what I previously stated upon oath: that I made no disclosures of budget secrets to anybody."

Pope Pius XI

CATHOLICS the world over celebrated the seventy-ninth birthday of Pope Pius XI, and the pontiff himself marked the day by attending a solemn mass in St. Peter's in the presence of 40,000 pilgrims who went to Rome especially for the occasion. These were mainly members of the Catholic Action organization which Pius XI founded and to them he spoke for nearly an hour. He denounced Communism, as he has done on other occasions, and declared the Catholic press was one of the best forces in combating the Communists.

It was evident to all observers the pope's age is beginning to tell on him and that he found the long ceremony very much of a strain.

That the pope's health is causing some concern also in Vatican circles was shown by the fact that the plans that were originally made for the pope to bless the crowd gathered in St. Peter's square from the outer balcony of the Basilica were abandoned at the last minute.

It was also significant that a small bed shielded by red velvet curtains had been placed immediately behind the papal throne with two priests in constant attendance against the possibility that the pontiff might not have strength to reach the end of the function.

THE senate by a vote of 62 to 14 passed the deficiency bill carrying $2,375,000,000, of which sum $1,425,000,000 is handed to the President to spend as he pleases for "relief and work relief." As passed by the house, the measure turned the entire amount of relief money over to WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins.

By the senate amendment, the bill authorizes the President to order a restudy of reports on the $200,000,000 Florida ship canal and allocate another $10,000,000 to carry on work upon it during the coming fiscal year.

NEW YORK state's law providing minimum wages for women and minors was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme court on the ground that it conflicts with the fourteenth amendment by violating freedom of contract. The decision, written by Justice Butler, was concurred in by Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Roberts. Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo dissented.

THE so-called industrial mobilization plan of the War department, providing for a military dictatorship over labor, capital and industry, as well as censorship of the press in wartime, was severely condemned in a report to the senate by the munitions committee.

The committee objected particularly to the proposed conscription of labor as being dangerous to democracy.

NINE of the richest unions in the American Federation of Labor, having more than a million members, probably will be suspended soon by the federation's executive council, and at the next convention they will be expelled if the council can command the necessary two-thirds majority. Thus will come to a crisis the internecine contest between the craft unionists led by President William Green and the industrial unionists, who follow John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers.

Lewis' group of unions includes 400,000 miners, Sidney Hillman's Amalgamated Clothing Workers, David Dublinsky's International Ladies' Garment union, the oil workers, typographers, flat glass workers, hat, cap, and millinery workers, and textile workers.

160,000 Horses
A New Democracy
Thin Men Live Longer
Must We Have War?

Arthur Brisbane

The well advertised Queen Mary, looking very big moving up to her New York dock, represented in reality the quintessence of compressed power. On the way over she developed one hundred and sixty thousand horse power.

That number of horses hitched in pairs, one ahead of the other, would make a "team" more than two hundred and fifty miles long. Still more remarkable power compression is that of the flying engine, which compresses the power of a 1,000-pound horse into less than three pounds of metal.

The government offered for sale six hundred millions of 2¾ per cent bonds, four hundred millions of 1⅜ per cent notes. The whole issue is oversubscribed.

It is a comfort for those that have money and want no risk to invest even at low interest rates, free of income tax payments.

Such an investment is much simpler than running the risk of a business enterprise with pay rolls and jobs attached.

To tax heavily the man who uses his money and brains to give work to others, and free from taxation those that buy bonds and take their ease, is a brand-new kind of democracy.

Men of middle age and older may learn from Civil war veterans in the Memorial day parade, some ninety and some ninety-three; one, who led New York city's G. A. R. procession, past ninety-six years of age.

All the old soldiers are very thin men, averaging in weight less than 140 pounds. Had they been fat they would be in the grave, not in any parade.

General Pershing cut a big birthday cake with a general's sword, Mrs. Roosevelt looking on, and on Memorial day he warned America against another war.

To believe that this country can be dragged into a war without a repetition of our big war folly is not complimentary to those in charge. No foreign nation would force war on the United States, and thus put United States resources, and any fighting qualities that Americans may possess, on the side of that foreign nation's enemies.

The unfortunate Congressman Zioncheck, from the Northwest, is locked up in Washington, his sanity to be investigated, after he visited the White House with a present of empty beer bottles for the President.

The unfortunate congressman's antics are not important in themselves, but you wonder what qualities were seen in him by voters that sent him to congress.

The United States Supreme court declared unconstitutional a New York state law that would permit New York to fix a minimum wage for women and children.

Chief Justice Hughes, who did not agree with the majority opinion, wrote: "I find nothing in the federal Constitution which denies to the state the power to protect women from being exploited by overreaching employers."

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., who ought to know about American industry, says enormous building operations are needed in the United States to replace out-of-date equipment, and that the door is wide open for "plenty of jobs and then more jobs."

American cotton growers fighting the boll weevil will sympathize with Argentine growers, attacked by vast swarms of devouring locusts far worse than any weevil. The Argentine ministry of agriculture announces 10,000 tons of cotton devoured, 60,000 acres invaded.

Farmers fight the locusts by erecting walls of sheet iron or digging ditches, into which the locusts swarm, to be sprayed with gasoline and burned. Tons of the pests are thus destroyed.

Mayors of Arab cities in Palestine warn the British that they must stop Jewish immigration and the sale of land to Jews in Palestine. The British answer to the warning will probably not be satisfactory to the Arabs. It is reported also that the central committee for Palestine of the "Communist party" is distributing literature urging British soldiers in Palestine to mutiny.

President Lewis of Lafayette college thinks wars would end if monarchs who voted for it were put in front line trenches. That might prevent some wars, not all.

Silver Policy

Washington.—A great many persons were mystified a few weeks ago by the treasury announcement that it had entered into an agreement to buy Chinese silver. On the surface, it appeared to be an action by the American government that was wholly a part of its domestic silver policy—a policy that thus far has resulted in no economic benefits at all has cost American taxpayers rather dearly. Beneath the surface, however, the Chinese silver purchase agreement is one of the most significant moves yet made in our foreign policies. I believe it has potential consequences as great or greater than any foreign relations pronouncement to come from the Washington government since World war controversies were liquidated.

To understand the importance of the silver purchase agreement with China, one must examine international relationships over a wide scope. They involve, first and most important of all, the steady inroad made by the Japanese into the Chinese political and economic structure. They embrace, as well, relations of Soviet Russia with China and Japan, and the whole Far Eastern situation for that matter, and the continued efforts of the British to obtain for their nationals additional or restored spheres of influence in China.

Lastly, these international relationships involve, indeed, directly affect, the open door policy respecting Chinese trade. The United States has consistently maintained that China must be open to world trade and in this attitude our nation has had support of the British and some other white nations. On the other hand, the Japanese, while adhering to the open door policy on the surface, have consistently attempted to undermine it directly or by use of the military.

Before the World war it used to be said in China that the international competition there took the form of diplomacy operated through banks and railways. Now, we see the additions of currencies and tariffs to the methods used by the diplomats. The United States is using the currency method—a method attempted by the British without success two years ago—and through this influence, this nation is seeking to expand its trade with China. The Japanese are employing the tariffs to protect their own interests in China and to keep the British and the Americans on the outside.

So, for the first time since 1898, the battle among the nations for the rich lure of China trade is on an economic basis of competition and, it must be said, Japan is in the lead. The Japanese are ahead in this economic warfare chiefly because of their proximity to the territory which is so rich in potential trade.

* * *

Japan Will Oppose

A year or more ago, the British sent Sir Frederick Leith-Ross of the British treasury to Shanghai to aid the Chinese ministry of finance in the establishment of a currency system. It was not announced, of course, but the real purpose of Sir Frederick's visit was to stabilize Chinese money and link it to the British pound sterling. Diplomats watched the maneuver with great interest because it was expected that Japan's control in the North China provinces would be loosened through British currency influence. But it failed to work that way. The North China provinces simply were separated further from China proper and the Japanese tightened their grip.

Now, the Americans have tried something of the same scheme. They worked it out on the basis of silver purchase from China, but they prescribed that as the American treasury buys Chinese silver, the dollars paid therefor will be deposited in a branch of the Bank of China which will be established in New York. It will result in easy transfers of money where American exporters ship to China.

No one can tell what the consequences will be. In the first instance, Japan can be expected to exert every power her nationals have to thwart the effect of the program. In the next instance, the British are not going to be enthusiastic about the arrangements because the competition between British and American traders has been increasingly sharper since the World war.

* * *

Wily Japanese

There is still the further circumstance of Japan's smuggling into China. Having had control of the Chinese tariffs, the wily Japanese proceeded to enforce tariff duties rigidly against everyone except themselves. Stories coming out of North China through diplomatic channels as well as from commercial interests tell of vast smuggling operations by the Japanese. In other words, the Japanese have proceeded to find scores of landing places on Chinese soil where they neglected to place customs houses. The net result is, of course, that the Chinese are being supplied with Japanese goods without the payment of a tariff, whereas all other imports from foreign shores must carry the tariff load.

It seems, then, that while we cannot know at this time whether the Japanese will attempt further military movements in North China, it certainly can be said unequivocally that the open door for China foreign trade is at stake in this conflict. Most authorities on foreign affairs with whom I have talked tell me that there is little hope to prevent Japanese political supremacy in China. They cannot move northward because in that direction they butt their heads against the Soviet Russian frontier. The Soviet is armed to the teeth on the border of Manchukuo, but to the south and in the area known as North China, no present method appears for curtailing Japanese power.

Thus, history appears to be repeating itself. The battle for concession that took place in 1898 seems about to be revived and undoubtedly the climax to this conflict has been hastened by the American agreement to acquire Chinese silver.

* * *

Japs Invade Philippines

While we are looking over Japanese activities in the Far East, we ought not to forget that only a year ago, our congress, under a political lash and the pressure of selfish interests, voted the Filipinos their independence. Of course, the Philippine islands are still under our protection and will be so for several years, but it is most interesting to know that already the Japanese have set about the colonization of portions of the Philippine islands.

Through the last 20 years, American officials stationed in Manila have kept a watchful eye open to detect any signs of Japanese encroachments. It was not military movements by the Japanese that were feared. It was their well-known capacity for creeping under the edge of the tent and suddenly developing into an economic power.

Official reports now are reaching Washington which indicate amazingly rapid encroachment by the Japanese upon affairs of the islands. One official document shows that Japanese colonists have virtually swallowed up one large Philippine valley. By devious ways, legal and illegal, Japanese farmers have filtered through and have obtained all of the land that is tillable in the Dava valley.

Philippine laws, sponsored by Americans before independence was voted, have been designed to check Japanese colonization and the battle against this has gone on unremittingly since the days of the World war when the Tokyo government first exhibited definite ability to expand its spheres of influence through colonization methods.

Now, it is shown that these colonies have developed into great numerical and economic strength. They seem to have unlimited credit from somewhere for their operations and in the Dava valley, for example, they actually control the price of hemp which is the main agricultural product of that section.

The Japanese are operating in another fashion in the Philippines. It is a well established fact that when legislation is being considered by the Philippine legislative body, it is confronted with a powerful lobby if it is inimical to Japanese interests. Existence of this lobby is known and recognized and many of the Japanese representatives are fearful of consequences to their political careers if they go contrary to the lobby's position.

Such penetration as this into the Philippine economic structure may not be as serious from a world standpoint as the Japanese penetration of North China. Yet, it seems to me that the American government cannot ignore the activity. It may be that Japan has no thought of eventual military and political supremacy over the Filipinos but the surface indications at this time are those that have always preceded political and military subjugation of territories and possessions.

It will be recalled, as well, that just such a condition or circumstance as we now see was among the fears expressed by those representatives and senators in our congress who opposed Philippine independence. The opponents of the independence bill in congress dared not openly assert that Japan would be a menace to the island independence. To have done so would have meant international complications

The upshot was that Pat took Peg and the youngster to Southampton the next morning. "Peter suggested it," she told Barry. "And, of course, you're right—I do owe them something."

It wasn't the debt that did it, Barry realized. It was Jacky. Peg wanted Patricia to see him, and the house was so near. There really wasn't any good excuse for not going. So, for the first time in her life, Pat sniffed fried fish in an entrance hall, and tripped on worn stair carpets, and found herself stifling in a back room without air or sunshine. She'd known people lived like that, of course, but, somehow, she'd never thought much about it. She found herself thinking now. "If I had to spend one night in this place— That's what's the matter with the boy."

It was arranged that Evans was to drive them out, and come back for Barry on Thursday.

When Barry left Pat at her hotel, she said, "You seem to be everybody's friend, Mr. Gilbert. It's a little hard to understand, considering—"

"Considering that I'm an adventurer and an imposter?"

"Yes."

"Yes," Barry repeated, "but that's how you learn what friendship means."

That night, Barry went to the Cocoanut Bar.

"I mustn't overlook anything," he reflected.

There wasn't much to overlook in the Cocoanut Bar. Not in the way of clothing, at all events. The lobby was full of men, more or less surreptitiously glancing at framed photographs of girls whose costumes might almost have been packed in a vanity case. Inside was a square dancing floor with tables about it, like the seats about a prize ring. Above, there was a balcony with more tables, except at one spot, occupied by offices.

There were three shows a night, the amateur Hawkshaw discovered from his menu—at seven, eleven, and one.

It wasn't hard to get acquainted with any of the girls. One had only to look prosperous, and incline his head an inch or two in the direction of a vacant chair. "We're not supposed to do this," Violet Fane informed Barry, "but Luis's got a swell stand-in."

Barry had his expense account and his ingratiating grin, and used both to the limit. It wasn't long before the blonde was telling the story of her life. "I bin with Luis ever since I was a kid," she bragged. "He's a swell guy. You oughta know him. I'll give you a tumble after the next show."

Luis was most affable. A sentimentalist, but a business man, with a keen eye to spenders, and a withering contempt for tightwads.

A flashy young fellow, Morano was, who wore sporty clothes, and much jewelry. Slim and dapper, his shining ebon hair was slicked back from his forehead. He had a long, thin nose, and straight, thin lips, and a slight but rather curious impediment in his speech. His voice could be very soft at times.

"Tender hearted, Luis is," Miss Fane declared later. "I've seen him cry when somebody sang about mother or the kid or sumpin'. That loved-her-and-lost-her stuff, specially. He was married onct."

"Didn't it take?"

"Sure, it took. That's why he cries. The Jane died, or sumpin'. Know what Luis did—when he got the coin, I mean? Bought the house they used to live in, and went on livin' there—alone, with a couple of servants."

"Gee!"

"Ain't that romantic? I'll say so! He's still got the servants, too. They all moved to a farm, somewhere in Jersey, a couple'a years ago. Would you believe it—he drives out every morning, after the last show. Nuts about horses, Luis is. Not to bet on. Just likes 'em."

"Learned about horses in Fauquier county," Luis said, returning at that instant. "I lived there 'til I was nineteen, and that's all they know. Go on, Vi; you'll be late."

"I never was late for a show yet," she retorted. "Nor out of one. Not in all the years I've worked for you."

"That's straight," Morano admitted, as she was leaving. "Never bin out of a show in her life. She's a swell girl, Vi."

There wasn't much to be got at the Cocoanut Bar; not that Violet and Morano weren't willing to talk. Morano's romance had left him a gentle melancholy—or, perhaps, he was only worried about business. But, if he had anything to conceal, it certainly seemed to have no relation to Kelly. On that subject everything was open and above board.

"Just a gorilla," Morano said of the Big Boss, the next night, when Barry returned to the Cocoanut Bar.

"Sure!" her employer agreed. "He wouldn't do nothing worse than steal pennies from a dead baby. Pal of Vi's though," Luis added, winking at Barry.

"Yeh," Violet declared, dryly; "until that Barclay dame came along."

"He was in here that evening, wasn't he?" Barry asked.

"Yeh. Just a few hours before they croaked him."

"He had a girl pinched, or something?"

"Yeh," Morano repeated. "Nice kid, too. Took her around to the station in them things."

"I don't blame the Jane's husband for getting sore," Morano continued, "though bumping a guy off for that's going a little too far."

"Kelly was soused," Miss Fane said.

"Yeh. Plenty. And he thought the kid was pickin' his pocket. Nothin' to it."

"Wasting my time," Barry told Harwood, the next morning, in the city editor's busy office at The Globe. "My time, and nearly a hundred dollars of the paper's money. Winslow had it straight. The Fane girl was strutting her stuff from one o'clock until long after the murder."

"Well, it's good to be sure."

"Yes, and I'm mighty sure now. Every step I've taken since our last meeting leads right up to Mrs. Kelly."

Harwood looked at him quizzically.

"Step No. 1?" he asked.

"My advertisement offering a reward for the number of the cab that killed that artist's wife."

"You don't mean that you got it?"

Triumphantly, Barry opened his note book.

"There it is," he said. "O26017. The figures under it are the number of the driver who gave me the information."

Ernie copied both numbers.

"Swell work," he commented. "Anything else?"

"Lots. This fellow had a passenger who got out at Twenty-third street around midnight. When the woman was killed—two hours later—the driver bumped into him again in Sixteenth street, very much rattled, and looking as though he'd committed a murder."

"Any description?"

"Rather a vague one. That doesn't matter. I'm sure, in my own mind, that this passenger was the caller Kelly expected, and that he wasn't the murderer. I'm equally sure that he knew murder had been committed."

"Lets call it a mere supposition. In that case, Kelly was killed around two o'clock. At two o'clock, Mrs. Kelly wasn't in Harlem."

"How do you know that?"

Barry's answer was a full report of his adventures of Saturday. "Without Step No. 1, Step No. 2 means nothing. In other words, if Kelly'd been killed at midnight—which is the theory every one's worked on—Mrs. Kelly's alibi would have been holeproof."

Harwood joined his finger-tips in an almost prayerful gesture. "I wish we could find the guy who looked 'as though he'd committed a murder.'"

Barry made no reply.

"That's always the trouble," the city editor went on. "What kind of a skate is this Luis Morano? Tough?"

"On the contrary. Cries over a mammy song."

"There's a heap of 'em do," Harwood philosophized.

"That so?" Harwood inquired. "Where is this Cocoanut Bar?"

Barry told him, and promptly returned to Mrs. Kelly. "How the deuce are we going to prove what she did after she got home?"

"That's up to you," Ernie said. "I'm off on a new tack now." His eyes twinkled. "One that would go a long way toward establishing your theory of coincidence. Gosh, I'd give my new uppers to break this story within the next week or two."

Thursday evening, Barry spent in his room, mostly thinking. He had telephoned Pat twice since their luncheon together, and found her enthusiastic over her guests. "There's nothing wrong with the boy," she declared; "nothing that a few weeks out here won't cure. He's on the beach now, with his mother."

Judge Hambidge had taken to the little fellow at once. Almost like having a grandchild. It kept his mind off his worries. And no one could see Peggy, being brave, but always staring at nothing, always thinking of what might happen, without pity that warmed into affection. "She's really an awfully good sort," Pat said, from Southampton. "I like her a lot. When are you coming out?"

"Tomorrow, I hope."

"Well, we'll expect you for dinner."

That breach was healed, all right. Pat had called him "the scum of the earth." In the same hour, he remembered again, he had told her he loved her. As to that, she still maintained silence. "That's the kindest thing she could do," Barry thought. "A Judge's daughter, and I—"

Barry had learned not to think of the future. "Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum," as his own father had put it. Just for now, it was pleasant to be somebody who knew Pat—and he wanted to take that awful look out of the other girl's eyes. "That oughtn't to be hard now," Barry thought. "If I could get that Filipino to talk. He knows when Mrs. Kelly came home, and he's probably got a darned good idea what she did afterward. If we could get to that Oriental—"

At which point, Evans came, and he had been drinking.

"Sorry, sir," he apologized, taking the nearest chair. Evans had none of Willetts' compunctions. "Sorry, sir, but I've been having dinner with Kelly's chauffeur."

"Liquid nourishment?"

"Yes, sir," Evans admitted, sheepishly. "But that was the only chance I had with that Irishman."

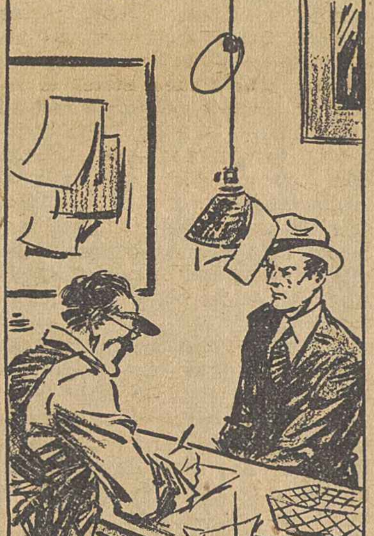
"Well?"

"Well, I drove Miss Hambidge, and Mrs. Rogers, and the boy to Southampton, like you said. And I started back today. It was nearly eight when I made the garage, and I was good and hungry.

"There's a decent cafe a few yards away. Nolan—that's Kelly's chauffeur—was sitting at a table, with a load he ought to've gone twice for."

Evans smiled.

"Ed had a grouch on women in general. And he was chowed plenty. I hadn't been with him long when he opened up on Mrs. Kelly. There's something queer between her and this Filipino, he says."



Ernie Copied Both Numbers.

"Charlie?"

"That isn't his name, but let it go at that. And, when Ed said 'queer,' he didn't mean anything wrong. Just some kind of an understanding. Mrs. Kelly's been giving the Chink coin and jewelry, regular. Charlie showed him some of it, Ed says.

"Well, the night of the murder Noland drives Kelly to the Cocoanut Bar. And home—at nine o'clock. When he gets out at his house, Kelly says, 'Put the car in the garage. Mrs. Kelly's gone up to Harlem, and I won't need you 'til tomorrow morning."

"Ed obeys orders. He goes back to Kelly's, and sits in the kitchen. This Chink is in the butler's pantry getting a tray ready. And, while the two of 'em are down there, the damnedest row starts upstairs—"

"Rogers and Kelly."

"No. This was around nine o'clock. Mrs. Kelly. She was laying Mike out so you could have heard it a block. Well, this goes on for ten or fifteen minutes, and then the bell from the parlor rings. Charlie starts upstairs with the tray. He gets up two steps, when Kelly appears at the head of the flight. "Come up here, you lousy spy. Come up here while I tell you where you get off!'

"Charley sets down the tray, and goes. Nolan follows into the pantry, and has a stiff drink. Then he sits down again, and listens to Kelly laying out the Chink."

"Could he hear anything? Words, I mean?"

"No. Just Kelly's voice. Mrs. Kelly was out of it. She'd gone to her room, Nolan thinks. But Kelly made noise enough for two. And, after another ten minutes or so, Charlie comes back.

"'I'm fired,' Charlie says—in the Chink lingo. 'I got to get out. That blankety-blank told me to go quick, or he'd kill me.'

"'Are you going?' Nolan asks.

"'Sure,' the Chink says. 'I got to get my money first. He chased me out of the room when I asked for it, but I'm going back,' the Chink says.

"Nolan then took the cook to a movie, and when they got back, everything's quiet. It's after midnight, because these two walked home. Kelly's upstairs, talking to somebody, and the Chink's in his room, packing and muttering to himself something frightful. So Nolan says good night to the cook, who goes into her room, and then Nolan slips into the pantry, and takes another shot of that hootch."

"What hootch?"

"The rye whiskey I was telling you about."

Barry sprang from his chair.

"The rye whiskey?"

"Sure. And it was in a cut-glass decanter."

"Are you certain?"

"Nolan is. And he's just as certain that it was still in the pantry when the guy upstairs left."

"Why?"

"Because he heard the front door close ten seconds before he went out the back way."

Evans shook his head, drunkenly.

"Mrs. Kelly wasn't home," he said. "She went to her sister's after the high-jinks in Harlem, and Nolan got her there the next morning, before they called the police. There were only three people in that house after the guy went who was visiting Kelly—Kelly himself, cook, and a mighty mad Chinaman."

"Filipino."

"Whatever he was, he was mad, and the decanter that killed Kelly was downstairs with him until just about the time Kelly was killed."

"Thanks," Barry nodded. "I think we've got something."

"Oh, I forgot to give you this. It came—to Southampton—just as I was leaving," said Evans.

"This" was a cablegram. Alone, in the smoke-filled room, Barry opened it. Nine words. "Father and I sailing for home Sunday. Love. Mother."

For an instant, he stood, frozen, the wire in his hand.

Directly before him, an evening newspaper lay open on the table.

"'Out-going passenger and mail ships,'" he read. "'Sailing tomorrow—Steamship Oranje Nassau. For Port-au-Prince, La Guayra, Curacoa, Maracaibo, Carupano, and Pampatar.' I'm on my way to one of 'em tomorrow!"

CHAPTER IX

BARRY'S panic was short-lived. Between him and the sailing list had come a vision of Peggy, with beaded lashes screening eyes forever staring at nothing.

"I can't do it," he said to himself. "I can't run away and leave that girl in the lurch. Nor Pat either. I've tackled this job, and I've got to go through with it.

"Anyway, it begins to look as though the end were in sight. If Ridder sails Sunday—"

He went back to the shipping news.

"If Ridder sails Sunday, that's the Bremen and she's due here the following Saturday. That gives us eight days. I'd better see Winslow."

He called Peter next morning, but the attorney was out in the country. "Left last night," his secretary reported, "and won't be back until Monday."

Barry had a dinner engagement at Southampton. "We'll start things humming on Monday," Barry told himself. "I've got my house to put in order, too. Ridder's house, that is."

Evans telephoned around ten, and before noon they were on their way to Southampton. "My last weekend with Pat," he was thinking. "Where'll I be next Saturday? Out of luck, and out of a job. In jail, maybe, and in the newspapers. That's my finish with—everybody."

There was a new atmosphere at the Hambidge's. Pat had been right in telling Jacky that he'd "cheer my father up a lot." "They're building a railway on the beach," she laughed, when the boy—sunburned, and active—joined them before dinner.

"You must go to bed now," Pat bade him, "if we're to take our ride in the morning. We have a canter every day before breakfast," she added to Barry, ringing for a maid to take charge of the youngster. "I discovered the dearest little pony in the village, and the man brings it over at nine o'clock, with another horse for me. Jacky's getting to be a regular Buffalo Bill."

The strained expression of a week ago was beginning to disappear from the face of Judge Hambidge. But the greatest difference was in the boy's mother. Naturally imitative, as Barry had remarked, she had been quick to observe and emulate Pat's moderation with make-up. Her speech, too, had lost all but an occasional inadvertent reference to "guys" and "dames." She had stopped staring into space. "What's the news about Jack?" she asked, quite calmly.

STAR DUST

By VIRGINIA VALE

THAT new series of comedies that Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti are making promises to be very funny. Lyda was teamed with Patsy to replace Thelma Todd, you know. And the little Polish girl can be very, very amusing.

There's one drawback to the current picture, so far as the girls are concerned, and that's the presence of a lion in the cast. (Good old Keystone comedy stuff!) Not that the girls are afraid of him, despite Charles Bickford's experience with a lion some months ago. But lions—well, as a former comedy star explained, "You have to get so close to them. And practically all lions have halitosis!"

Don't be surprised if it rains and rains in your town when "One Rainy Afternoon" is shown in your town. That's the first picture made by Mary Pickford and Jesse Lasky, you remember. Mr. Lasky bet that it would rain when the picture was first shown in Hollywood. It did. So he traveled East for the first showing in New York, and again he bet that it would rain that day. And after days and days of bright sunshine, New York had four Grade A thunderstorms that day!

This week's bad news is that Freddie Bartholomew will probably be the hero when "Kim" is finally screened. If you've read the famous Kipling story you'll recall that Kim was a red haired, freckle faced youngster, a scrappy young brat—the last role in the world for the talented English kid!

If you like horror pictures you'll be crazy about "Dracula's Daughter," with Gloria Holden looking very beautiful in the title role, and Marguerite Churchill looking equally beautiful as the lovely victim. It begins to look as if the children who go to this one will some day be taking their own grandchildren to see "Dracula's Great-great-granddaughter."

Marion Nixon has just had her tonsils out, which seems funny, because she's been in Hollywood for years and years. Usually having your tonsils out is one of the first things you do when you settle down in Hollywood. Your appendix is likely to be the next thing that leaves. And sinus trouble sometimes haunts you.

Joan Crawford seems to be taking her music pretty seriously. They do say that she's given up coffee, for the good of her voice. And she and Franchot Tone have been giving musicales and making quite a name for themselves in musical affairs on the Coast. Singing in the movies has experienced a steady progression from the days of the pioneer crooners to the opera prima donnas. Now a good voice is an asset like good looks and histrionic ability.

Those pictures made in Technicolor are causing not a little trouble for companies indulging in them. They're worth it, of course—but just listen to this!

Pioneer Pictures was ready to shoot the works on "Dancing Pirate." No effort was spared. Little things like special make-up, specially supervised, were just details. But—for two solid weeks they tried to get a group of full-color portraits of Steffi Duna, the feminine star, and couldn't, because she had a cold and a red nose, and color photography is so realistic that the nose couldn't be camouflaged with make-up because that would show.

Laboratory to Study Soy Bean

Seek New Varieties for Many Industrial Uses.

A co-operative industrial research laboratory has been set up at the University of Illinois to study the soy bean crop. Dr. E. O. May has been named director. Breeding work is under the direction of W. J. Morse of the bureau of plant industry.

Three immediate objectives of the new laboratory are: Improvement of present industrial uses for soy beans; more facts on the effects of different processes on the quality and quantity of soy bean products; and facilities for testing different varieties as to adaptability for industrial use. On experimental plots nearby, plant breeders hope to grow new varieties even better suited to industrial demands.

Soy bean acreage rose from 2,000,000 acres in 1924 to nearly 5,000,000 last year. Production of the beans themselves increased from 5,000,000 bushels to 40,000,000 bushels. Reasons for this increase—in addition to the demand for beans for food, feed and industrial uses—are immunity of soys to chinch bugs and other pests, good prices compared with other grain crops, drought resistance and high seed yield.

Soy beans are used in making industrial and food products such as paint, enamel, varnish, glue, printing ink, rubber substitutes, linoleum, insecticides, plastics, glycerin, flour, soy sauce, breakfast food, candies, roasted beans with a nut-like flavor, live stock feeds, and so on. Lecithin is a valuable product of soy bean oil used in the manufacture of candies, chocolate, margarine, medicines, in textile dyeing and as an emulsifier.

A question the new laboratory will study is why the same soy varieties growing under varying soil and climatic conditions show a range of 12 to 26 per cent in oil and 28 to 54 per cent in protein. For paints, varieties having an oil high in "iodine number" are desirable. For food purposes an oil low in "iodine number" is better.

This laboratory is being established under the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones act of June 29, 1935, which provides for establishing by the Department of Agriculture of a limited number of specialized laboratories in the major agricultural regions.

Use Safety Pens for Handling Young Bulls

"Never slaughter a high grade young bull just because he has an ugly disposition. The indiscriminate slaughtering of young bulls is a great hindrance to herd improvement in this state," says John A. Arey, extension dairyman at North Carolina State college.

When a bull has been found to have the ability to transmit good type and high milk producing capacity to his daughters, Arey added, he is a proven asset to the herd. The life of these bulls, which take the guesswork out of breeding, should be prolonged as long as they are active.

A dairy bull can be handled safely, and his period of usefulness extended, by keeping him in a safety bull pen. Such a pen can be built by any dairyman at low cost from materials usually found around a farm, he added.

A wider use of safety bull pens would not only make possible more rapid progress in herd improvement," Arey declared, "but at the same time would protect the caretakers from ugly bulls. No matter how tame a bull may appear to be, there is no way of telling when he may suddenly turn on his handlers."

Horse's Stomach Capacity

The average capacity of a horse's stomach is from 15 to 18 litres or three to four gallons, according to an authority in the Montreal Herald. These figures were obtained from a very large number of observations and give the extreme size of stomach when distended. However, the organ is under the best physical condition for digestion when it is about two-thirds full. That is, when it contains from two to two and one-half gallons of material. The above information does not necessarily mean that this quantity of material should be taken by a horse at any single meal, for the stomach is not usually completely emptied from one feeding to the next.

Buffalo Grass Success

One of the government experiment stations in Kansas finds that buffalo grass is drouth-resistant and erosion-resistant. The re-establishment of this grass on abandoned wheat lands is encouraged. Propagation is said to be comparatively easy. By transplanting pieces of sod to well plowed land the grass gets a foothold and spreads rapidly. Pioneers never tire of singing the praise of buffalo grass. It makes excellent pasture and its good qualities, such as drouth and erosion resistance, are well known. Buffalo grass has an amazing capacity for "coming back." After the summer drouth the buffalo grass plots were the first to green up when rain fell.

Time Limit Will Be Extended Graciously

Bill Brawnley, the strong man of the village, met one of his fellow-villagers in the local inn the other evening. During their conversation Bill called the other man a liar. The villager naturally resented this remark.

"Look here, Brawnley," he said, "I'll give you just five minutes to take that back."

Bill smiled.

"Is that so," he replied, extending his chest impressively and advanced to where his fellow-creature stood. "And suppose I don't take it back inside of five minutes?"

"Then," said the villager after a slight pause, "I'll extend the time a bit."—London Answers.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

The Montevallo Times

PUBLISHED ON THURSDAY

Subscription - - - - $1.00

W. M. WYATT, Publisher

DR. BROOKS EXPRESSES HIS APPRECIATION

Dr. Lee M. Brooks, member of Alabama College faculty for the past year, has returned to his permanent post at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. Dr. Brooks was loaned to Alabama College for a year to occupy the place of Dr. Steelman in the Sociology Department. Dr. Steelman is on leave of absence while engaged in a mission for a department of the federal government.

Upon his return to North Carolina a few days ago Dr. Brooks wrote a letter to Mr. Ike Nathews in which he expressed a very complimentary feeling for Montevallo. He said:

"We think Montevallo and its people are just fine. Never shall we forget the happy year with students, faculty and town folks."

SUNDAY PICTURE SHOW

The Times is glad to hear the announcement of the Strand Theatre that Sunday picture programs will be shown in the future, beginning next Sunday.

In planning his Sunday programs, Mr. Eddie Watson, manager of the Strand, will arrange it so no interference or conflict will be made with any of the regular church services of the town. That is the proper way to do it.

We believe Sunday pictures in Montevallo will meet the hearty approval of the majority of the folks, as has been the case in other towns where such programs have been instituted by the theaters.

It will be easier (and quite as wholesome) to take the children to a picture show Sunday afternoon than to cart them over the country to the swimming hole.

THREE NEW CONGRESSMEN

Alabama will send three new men to Congress this year. Pete Jarman takes the place of the veteran Buck Oliver, from the Sixth District. Mr. Oliver retired on account of failing health.

Each of these three are young men of much promise. We hope they develop into places of power and influence comparable to the great statesmen who have so ably represented our state in the past.

You face your opportunity now, boys. We are counting on you.

LUTHER PATRICK WINNER

Huddleston has been a winner in many contests over a period of twenty years. This is the first time he has ever resorted to the method of beating his opponent over the head with ketchup bottles. Evidently George made a bad choice of weapons.

Luther Patrick is a type of man Alabama has not sent to Congress before. He is the plain old country boy kind—one who will be the country boy in Washington just as much as he was when he came down from the hillside farm at Vinemont to go to high school in Cullman in 1913.

It will be interesting to observe him as he gets in the thick of the fray known as Congress.

We hope he fits and sticks and gets the answer for those of his constituents who stayed with him in his campaign. We are glad he stuck to his original declaration that he would make no promises.

Now Luther, maybe you will not be so busy doing what you have to do so you will have time to do what you want to do.

Baptist Church

The pastor will preach at both morning and evening services on Sunday. Sunday school meets at 9:45 a.m. Baptist Training Union at 7:00 p.m. Worship services at 11 a.m. and 7:45 p.m.

The Missionary Society will meet at the church at 4:00 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

Miss Mary Watson left Sunday for summer school at the University of Alabama.

Mr. Walter Shaw made a business trip to Columbiana Tuesday.

ALDRICH NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Street and Mr. John Jones visited in Blocton on Wednesday. Mrs. Jones returned home with them.

Miss Jessie Street, Miss Doris Houston, Mr. Dois Wheeler and Mr. John Payne enjoyed a picnic supper on the river at Boothton.

Mrs. Percy Baker and little daughter, Carolyn, of Plantersville, visited relatives and friends here on Tuesday and Wednesday.

State Capitol News

Montgomery, Ala., June 9.—Alabama's 15 toll bridges may become free within a few weeks.

Final plans seeking to free the bridges are being worked out by officials of the State Highway Department and representatives of the owners of bridge bonds totaling $3,800,000. Accomplishment of the plan through refinancing at a lower rate of interest and transferring the bridges to the Highway Department was expedited last week by an act of Congress, extending the time the state may legally charge tolls, thus strengthening the State's credit in clearing the way for refunding the debt.

Declaring that the movement to free the bridges was definitely on its way to completion, Lawrence Lee, the Governor's legal adviser this week filed a "friendly" suit in Montgomery Circuit Court on behalf of the State Bridge Corporation against the highway department and certain bondholders to clarify the legal questions involved in the refunding plan.

He said the lower court's decision would be appealed to the Supreme Court for a final ruling before the new bonds are issued.

Thus, patrons of the bridges will be relieved of tolls averaging $325,000 a year.

W. W. Brooks, the Governor's financial adviser, said the state is ready to pay interest charges of $226,000 accruing June 1 as a preliminary step in the refunding program. He explained that toll receipts totaling $400,000 are now in the Treasury for this purpose.

Under an act of the 1935 legislature the bridges will be transferred from the Bridge Corporation to the State Highway Department at a "rental" of $300,000 a year to be paid out of gasoline taxes. The bondholders, in turn, have tentatively agreed to accept the new bonds to be retired in 16 and one-half years at 4 per cent instead of the 6 per cent rate paid on the original issue.

The state highway department had to go into court last week to evict a man from beneath a bridge in Lauderdale County.

The defendant is T. L. Ginn, of Florence, who operates an amusement establishment under the bridge spanning Shoals Creek, near Florence.

Several years ago Ginn obtained a permit from the Highway Department to build a small pier under the bridge for the purpose of mooring his motor launch. The pier mushroomed into a store, replete with a stock of food, slot machines and other amusement and pleasure devices. Bath houses and showers were also erected.

However, Highway Department officials contend that "Ginn's Pier" constitutes a serious traffic and fire hazard.

In unique recognition of the loyalty and faithfulness of its employees, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Thursday was host to more than 4,000 employees and their families at a "family party."

More than half of the railroad men employed on the Montgomery-Flomaton Division, as well as others of the A. and F. Division from Georgiana to Graceville, heard an informal talk by James B. Hill, of Louisville, Ky., president of the road. D. E. Beatty, superintendent of the Montgomery-New Orleans Division, presided.

Another "party" will be held in Mobile Friday night, June 12, it was announced.

Summer's Public Enemy No. 1—poison ivy—may effectively be treated with household remedies says Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer.

"Skin specialists favor a thorough scrubbing of the affected area with a stiff brush and the use of common yellow laundry soap," Dr. Baker said. "This scrubbing should be followed by a careful washing with alcohol. Such treatment gets rid of the poison and the excess alkali in the soap neutralizes the acid in it."

The singers are especially invited to bring their song books and spend the day with us. A very helpful and interesting program is being arranged by Mrs. Charlie Jones and Miss Lois Alexander. Mr. J. A. Killingsworth will direct the singing.

DOUBLE BIRTHDAY PARTY

A party of very much interest was that of Mrs. W. C. Underwood, Miss Addie Mae Underwood, Mr. Braddie Underwood, which was given in their home Saturday night, June 6, 1936. Very interesting games were played on the lawn for the young folks. The dining room was decorated beautifully with the birthday cake, centering the table with 66 candles. After the games and music, which was given by Mr. Robinson, Mr. Tate and Mr. Garland Brantley of Calera, refreshments of cake and tea were served to 36 couples, after which 98 young people were served. Prizes were given for the oldest person and the youngest. Mr. Underwood was the oldest and little Miss Ann Bell, of Wilton the youngest. Games were played on until a late hour, after which the candles were lit by the twins, Miss Addie Mae Underwood and Mr. Braddie Underwood, and were blown out by their mother and Mrs. Velma Cunningham. The birthday presents were opened by Mrs. Fay Underwood, which showed that Mrs. Underwood received an abundance of beautiful things.

The party was enjoyed by everyone present, which was 145. We wish for Mrs. Underwood, Addie Mae and Braddie, many, many more happy birthdays.

It is being conducted by Mr. Jesse Carter and Henry Lemley.

When the 1936 Ford V-8 was first introduced, Henry Ford said: "There are two things we did not skimp in the building of this car—cost and conscience." Everything possible was done to find what was right and incorporate it into the car. For that reason, the Ford V-8 is the safest car that could be built.

A new model which is destined for popularity is the Ford V-8 club cabriolet, called the Victoria. With a deeper top than the deluxe cabriolet, it houses a second three passenger seat, snugly fitted into the forward rear deck. In effect, it is an enlarged rumble seat protected by the top. In addition, there is ample luggage space in the rear.

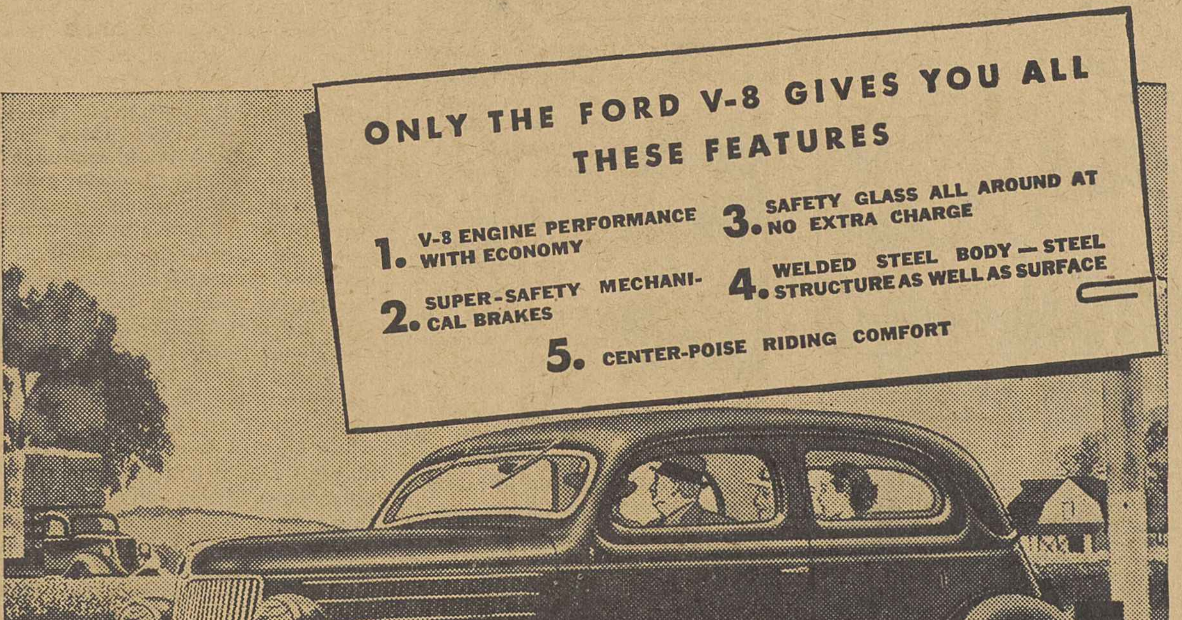
FORD V·8 ECONOMY MEANS HIGH "Dollar Mileage"

(MORE MILES PER DOLLAR)



ONLY THE FORD V-8 GIVES YOU ALL THESE FEATURES

1. V-8 ENGINE PERFORMANCE WITH ECONOMY
2. SUPER-SAFETY MECHANICAL BRAKES
3. SAFETY GLASS ALL AROUND AT NO EXTRA CHARGE
4. WELDED STEEL BODY — STEEL STRUCTURE AS WELL AS SURFACE
5. CENTER-POISE RIDING COMFORT

NO MATTER how you classify your expenditures for car up-keep — it's your total expenditure that counts. How much "dollar mileage" is your car giving you?

Dollars do go farther in the Ford V-8. Modern improved carburetion gives you unusual gasoline mileage with brilliant V-8 performance. Most owners of today's Ford change oil only every 2000 miles and add none between changes.

And after the first few thousand miles you begin to understand what Ford V-8 "dollar mileage" really means.

It gives you more miles per dollar because it gives you all-round economy — low first cost, low up-keep cost, low depreciation and long life — as well as low gasoline and oil consumption. All these are big items if you aim to buy the most economical car.

Flag Race Future Shows Few Shifts in Second Guesses

SECOND guessing the season.

DETROIT—The Tigers have been socked hard by injuries. They have lost at least four games which probably could have been won with Hank Greenburg in the lineup. There has been some acrimony between Mickey Cochrane and the baseball writers. But most opponents continue to believe the team will win its third straight pennant.

CHICAGO—Opponents do not esteem the Cubs as highly now as before the start of the season. Although they admit the Philly deal improved the National league titleholders, they whisper that the arms of Lon Warneke and Curt Davis have not been improved by age. The team to date has not shown championship class. But, at least, they should continue better than the White Sox.

YANKEES—One of the most interesting teams of the year. In rival dugouts players say this is the club the Tigers must beat. Also that Joe Di Maggio is by far the best rookie of the year.

BOSTON—Maybe Grove and Ferrell can carry the Red Sox pitching burden all the way to the wire. American league athletes do not think so, and neither do they believe that the club has enough consistent power to make up for occasional sloppy defensive days. Luck and Tony Cuccinello have kept the Bees up so far. Still they seem destined for last place, though.

GIANTS—Another team which might do well to prepare for dire visitations from fate. Players believe that Terry is overworking his pitchers and that only a new starting hurler or a topnotch relief man will save him in August.

ST. LOUIS—The probable National league winners even though they could use another pitcher and better reserves. The American league entry is by no means as bad as the standings indicate. Hornsby believes that one good pitcher might even now lift the Browns to fifth place.

Dodgers Are Hard Luck Club of Major Leagues

Casey Stengel

DODGERS—Definitely lacking in punching power but still the hardest luck club in the majors. With an average amount of breaks might at least be even with the .500 mark instead of far below it. Since the breaks even up fairly well throughout the course of a season, the fans are advised to stick with Casey Stengel a while longer. He has more than enough pitching talent and should be able to make at least one decent deal before June 15.

PITTSBURGH—Needed pitchers before Waite Hoyt went to the hospital and now needs them worse than ever. The Pirates have power and a more aggressive spirit than usual.

CLEVELAND—The Indians seem to have too much moxie for their own good. Because of their careless use of words and spikes, rivals always are aiming at them. Home folks also have weakened on them, but the team continues to haunt the dreams of Joe McCarthy and M. Cochrane.

WASHINGTON—Well managed by Bucky Harris and always dangerous. One pitcher might put them in the first division but there is little chance of getting him.

CINCINNATI—Young and ambitious and may eventually stick in fifth place. In spite of their showing so far few players take the Reds seriously, though.

PHILADELPHIA—The Phillies did well by themselves in the Cubs deal. Although somewhat damaged, Klein possibly is as good an outfielder as Ethan Allen. Kowalik can take his starting turn as well as Davis and may become a valuable sales item within a season or two. Besides—but why speak of gold? Or, indeed, why mention that other baseball auction house which probably still is doing business in the Quaker City for all anybody knows?

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

Alex Kampouris is beset by the same trouble that afflicts Frenchy Bordagaray. The Reds' second sacker is a good little ballplayer but he doesen't remember well and runs against orders on the bases.

LINES from an overcrowded notebook. (Which merely is another way of saying that the Not in the Box Score Dept. is working overtime this week.):

Gents who should know say that the U. S. will be knocked off in the Olympics this year. Not enough money to pay for those who do want to go . . . Joe Medwick uses the largest glove of any major league infielder. It's almost a mate for the first baseman's mitt Hank Greenberg had to discard . . . After losing $1,600 betting on Jimmy McLarin, Jimmy Kelly spent two more C's on a dinner celebrating Tony Canzoneri's victory . . . Three of Princeton's best backs may be ineligible for football next fall. Study trouble.

Some of the nation's leading amateur tennis players are reported to have been "sold at a slave market" during the Houston (Texas) invitation event this spring. The story is that they were put on the block and auctioned off to spectators in a gambling pool . . . The late Laverne Fator was the best judge of pace among modern riders. He is ranked with Tod Sloan and Isaac Murphy among the all-time great jockeys in the art of rating a horse along . . . Gene Moore of the Bees is a guess hitter. He stands up there and takes the same cut no matter what is thrown. That means smart pitchers soon will fill his life with sorrow . . . Keep an eye on Peter (no kin) Bradley, the Princeton soph half-miler. There's more than a chance that he'll become another Bill Bonthron.

Stribling Was Toughest Foe for Max Schmeling

Max Schmeling

Max Schmeling says that Young Stribling gave him his toughest fight. Which means that he has something to look forward to on June 18. . . . Arlie Latham, who won fame as a St. Louis Browns third baseman and as a Giant coach under McGraw, played his first game of ball at his home in Lynn, Mass. It was a game of bean bag with the daughter of Lydia Pinkham . . . Fred De Groof, who still rates as one of the best after 25 years of soccer refereeing, was a Belgian schoolboy Internationalist.

The best infield (playing field) in the majors is in Cleveland, ballplayers say. They rate the improved Cincinnati park as the best in the National league . . . Although he is president of one of the country's largest construction companies, Johnny Miller still finds time to be first V. P. of the Metropolitan Soccer league and to render valuable assistance to the Welfare Island loop . . . His friends say that Johnny Gorman, Princeton frosh football coach, turned down a 12,000-a-year offer to be head gridiron man at North Carolina . . . Other Tigers gossip that Bill Lynch, 200-pound sophomore fullback, is a cinch to be a star at Nassau next fall.

In spite of Irish opinion to the contrary, Mickey Cochrane is Scotch . . . Eddie Mayo, newest of the Giants, bought $5 worth of ice cream sodas with the first money he ever received for playing baseball . . . The looks speak louder than words department may be interested in knowing that Umpire Bill Stewart declares that Bill Terry never has hurled a cuss word at him since he has been calling them in the National league . . . Joanna Vischer, daughter of the polo magazine editor, was a winner at the Cedarhurst Hunts meets the other day, betting only on horses that caught her five-year-old eye in the paddock . . . The bookies miss George White, the showman, who was such a big help to them last year.

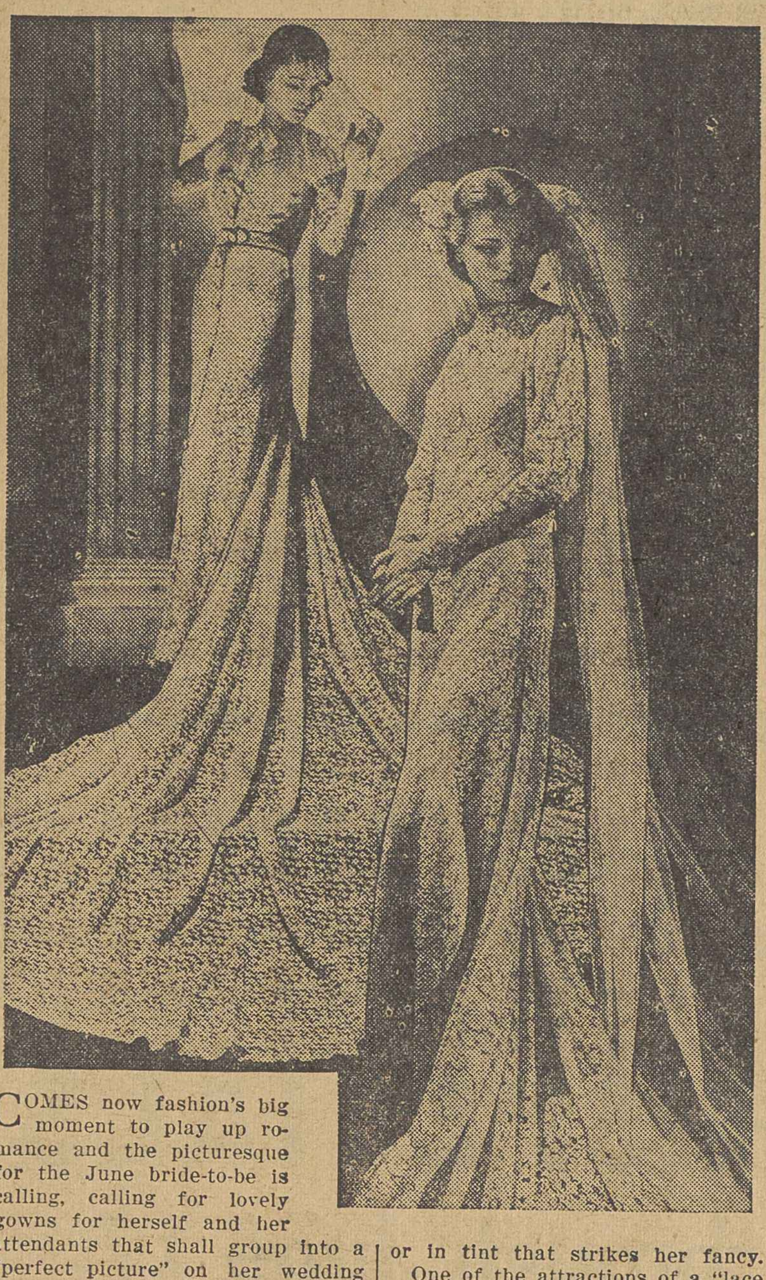
Dizz Smiles at Davis but Has Other Catcher

Dizzy Dean may smile at Virgil Davis, but Brusie Ogrodowski still catches him . . . Mrs. Fred Frankhouse wears "lucky" dresses to ball games, but the luck doesn't always hold out—the Dodgers being what they are . . . Unless Pirate Pitcher Swift gets into the habit of throwing over the first base occasionally runners will steal him right out of the majors . . . According to Morty Mahoney, the pari-mutuel expert, 25 per cent of the horse-players in Florida each winter come from New England.

Young Al Vanderbilt, who started out in the turf business by betting ten coconuts at a time on his Sagamore Farms gee-gees, now shoves in C notes . . . Coley Madden, who is back in the Belmont clubhouse after a four-year absence, is noted as one of the best figurers of percentages among the horse players and layers. He learned his mathematics at Harvard . . . Manuel Rodriguez, famous inside right in the days when the Gibraltar A. C. was knocking off all comers, now is secretary of the Brooklyn (soccer) Hispanos . . . In those far-off days when Dan Brouthers was the Babe Ruth of baseball they used to put up small flags to mark the spot where each home run left the park.

Lovely Lace Makes Lovely Brides

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



COMES now fashion's big moment to play up romance and the picturesque for the June bride-to-be is calling, calling for lovely gowns for herself and her attendants that shall group into a "perfect picture" on her wedding day.

What bride is not a "vision of loveliness"? Her gown is so carefully selected and fitted, her veil is made just so—to tune perfectly to her individuality, to drape correctly, at the same time beguilingly, over the head and down while the train must hang in just the right proportion and line with the dress.

Many a spring bride this 1936 found the expression of her dream of a vision of loveliness in a lace gown and veil. With its importance in the current fashion picture generally it but follows in the natural sequence of events that lace should become first choice with brides.

Not only does the lace gown in itself enhance feminine charm to the utmost but lace for the bride brings up the splendor and richness of former periods, when lace played so important a part in the costumes of historical and royal brides. The fact of the lure of lace for brides was dramatically brought out in a "Bride-of-Two-Centuries" showing recently held in New York, in which fifteen period bridal costumes copied from those worn by prominent ladies in the last two hundred years was the feature.

Which brings us to a very important subject—that of the fashion approval of color for the bride instead of the traditional all-white. A modern bride may wear lovely blush pink or ice blue or any tone or in tint that strikes her fancy.

One of the attractions of a "lace wedding" is that lace offers every opportunity to work out fascinating color schemes, for this existing flair for lace is not exclusive with the bride but the theme is carried out for bridesmaids as well. One of the newest gestures is that of lace dresses, with cunning lace capes for each bridesmaid.

Brides, too, are looking into the future in the selection of the wedding gown, having in mind a dress that may be worn later to social events. This feature is admirably interpreted in the very chic and lovely gown in the illustration. Since the full long train is detachable at the waist, the dress alone becomes perfect for the cocktail or dinner hour. The sweep of the train, and the smooth silhouette of the gown cut on true princess lines are the more lovely because of the lace of fine alencon of which this bridal gown is designed. The dress with its narrow waist and tailored neckline, buttons all the way down the front. Tulle is used for the veil which falls in a beguiling drape over the face and hangs quite long at the back.

HER SMART COAT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Mannish tailoring in suits and coats for grown-up ladies of fashion has its echo in boyish tailoring for the younger miss from toddlers to teen-agers. The cunning little girl here pictured in the double-breasted flannel coat is ready for an outing in the park, in a coat her little brother would envy. Broad lapels and wide notched collar are becoming. Fitted slightly at the waist for chic the coat is roomy and comfortable. Six smart bone buttons, masculine and substantial, trim the high double-breasted closing. This little model is the very sort that little girls are teasing their mothers to buy for them.

PASTEL TONES IN SUMMER TAILLEURS

Summer tailleurs are more fanciful than ever and synthetic fibers either are mixed with wool or replace wool entirely. Thiebaut-Brion has made a specialty of novel fabrics for this type of tailleur. His collection includes several rayon crepes with a woolen appearance and some rayon serges, either plain or chined. Some of his woolen fabrics show the same chine effect produced with twisted rayon yarns that fleck the surface.

There are new mossy crepes with a woolly texture, also a number of pastel-colored fine woolens, spotted with brown or black rayon nubs or tufts. Some of these fabrics have a tweed-like appearance and are seen in very delicate pastel tones, including sweet pea colors.

Lace Dresses Continue to Be Tops at Paris Show

Lace dresses continue to be tops in Paris. They're shown in amazing variety and startling numbers by all the leading designers. To emphasize the importance of this material in the feminine costume, a ball was held recently at the Hotel George V at which only lace dresses were worn. Dull albene laces were much in evidence, particularly in dark shades such as midnight blue, purplish blue, grenat, eggplant and a dark tone of tortoise shell brown.

Buying Violet

Before buying any of the pleasant violet shades that are so popular test them in the light of day. They look vastly different you'll find from the indoor color.

"After Rain"

A lovely blue called "After Rain" is used by Bruyere in his late collection. Other favorite colors of this designer are apple green, Nanking red and canary yellow.

THE QUEEN MARY MAKES ITS BOW

British Ship, With French Normandie, Proves That Days of Trans-Atlantic Super-Liner Have Come to Stay.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WITH the installation into service of the new British liner Queen Mary, following the arrival of the French Normandie last year, the age of the super-liner on the North Atlantic is definitely here.

No longer is the old-time description of "floating palace" adequate for these aquatic giants. They are far more than that, for they are indeed floating cities, and a passenger can board either for days without missing a single one of the conveniences or amusements which fill his daily life ashore.

Crossing the Atlantic in four and one-half days, these streamlined giants, each of more than 80,000 tons, will probably hold their own for some time to come against the transatlantic air liner, due to arrive in the near future. Not only has the crossing time been shortened to hardly more than the time required to cross the United States by rail a year ago, but so many are the interesting activities which await the voyager, the few days are made to slip by so quickly the traveler is often sorry they are over.

In describing a ship the size of the Queen Mary it is hard to decide just where to begin. Might begin just as you would if you were aboard her, waking in the morning after a night at sea. Probably you would want to start with a brisk "constitutional" to absorb some of that exhilarating salt air. Taking the promenade deck for a walk around ship, you would find yourself out for quite a hike—about a half mile, as a matter of fact, for the Queen Mary is 1,018 feet long, with a beam of 118 feet.

Makes 32 Knots.

The great liner, with her 12 decks, towers 234 feet from keel to masthead, 135 feet from keel to top of superstructure. Waving farewell from the deck at her bow to friends below, you would find yourself five or six stories above the dock.

Once out at sea the great ship is capable of traveling 32 knots an hour. A knot is 1.151 miles, which means that you would actually be going 37 miles an hour. There are many commercial concerns whose automobiles are governed not to exceed a speed of less than that.

There are more than four and one-half days of continual wonders to be seen in a tour of the ship from stem to stern. Directly behind the first stack are the sports decks, with even tennis courts for the guests' enjoyment. Forward of the stack are the officers' quarters, the bridge, wheel room and chart room and other spots where you mustn't come uninvited.

Next deck below is the "sun deck," with more officers' rooms, a grill, squash-racquets courts, a moving picture theater, the wireless rooms, and a few de luxe suites and staterooms. Below that is the promenade deck, where the stroller may browse in a real metropolitan shopping center. Also to be found on this deck are the writing lounge, the great ballroom and a children's playroom.

What Many Decks Contain.

Most of the tourist accommodations are found on the "main" deck, one deck below, reached by stairs or one of the 21 elevators aboard ship. There are more writing rooms, a tourist lounge and a library here. "A" deck has another tourist lounge and more staterooms and suites. Forward and directly below the bridge are hairdressers' establishments, another lounge and the rope stores and forecastle. The purser's office is on this deck, too.

Next deck below, or "B" deck, contains more hairdressers, another children's playroom, more staterooms and bedrooms. "C" deck houses the tourists' dining salon, the baker's shop, kitchens, a grill and the china pantry. Forward are the main restaurant and private dining rooms. "D" deck has room for more of the crew, the fruit ripening room, ice cream pantry, vegetable and salad room, butcher shop, grocery store and ship's hospital. Between the forward and second stack on this deck is the mammoth swimming pool; there is a tourist swimming pool on "F" deck, below. "E" deck has quarters for more of the crew and many third-class cabins.

Besides a swimming pool, "F" deck, pretty well down in the ship, contains the tourist baggage room, garages, mail room, linen stores and all the elevator wells. General baggage and mail are stored deep, deep down in "G" deck, but you can go still farther down, if the crew will let you, to the deck that holds all the machinery, the boiler rooms, turbo-generator rooms, fan rooms, propeller shafts, aft and forward engine rooms and general cargo.

And there is even some of the Queen Mary below that—the double bottom, which is always between any cargo and Davy Jones' locker.

The 2,075 passengers who can ride aboard the ship at one time are cared for with a luxury that certainly would have sounded fantastic in the days when the first predecessor of the Queen Mary, the Britannic, went into passenger service with her 1,154 tons and 207 feet of length, propelled by wooden paddle wheels.

Widely Air Conditioned.

Three rooms where the greatest crowds will gather are air-conditioned; these are the main restaurant ("the largest room afloat"); the main lounge, which is frequently converted into a theater, and the tourist restaurant. The Queen Mary is said to have made greater use of air conditioning than any other vessel on the seas. Fresh air is mechanically forced into every stateroom and cabin, and passengers are able to regulate the supply to their individual quarters as they will.

Electricity cooks all the meals aboard the ship except for the steaks which are broiled on the charcoal grill. It also furnishes the power for cleaning up after meals, for a gigantic machine, referred to by the crew as "Mechanical Molly," washes, rinses, polishes and sterilizes thousands of dishes in an hour and is gentle as a kitten with even the most fragile china. Electrical machines also slice bacon, make bread, make coffee, burnish silver, measure tea, mix dough, break ice, cut butter, polish ranges and ovens, press ducks, mold dough, grind coffee, clarify fat and cut foods.

Even dogs live lives of ease on the Queen Mary. They have a "hotel" on the sports deck. The pups are treated to individual sanitary kennels, raised from the floor. Each kennel has hot and cold running water, steam heat and air conditioning. The dogs even have their own promenade deck.

There are altogether 25 public rooms throughout the ship. Greatest of all, of course, is the main restaurant, which extends the entire 118-foot width of the Queen Mary. It is 160 feet long and covers 18,720 square feet. At one time 815 persons can be comfortably seated.

Floating Broadcasting Station.

Another large room is the main hall, which is 111 feet by 70 feet. Its shopping center, which advertises its wares in show windows along the promenade deck, includes a haberdashery and clothing shop, book shop and telephone booths for ship-to-shore conversations. The passengers need never be out of touch with friends or relatives ashore, as anyone who listened to the broadcasts from the Queen Mary on her maiden trip will realize.

Every facility for broadcasting to shore has been installed in the ship. Concerts or speeches can be broadcast from nearly every public room. The ship makes use of 32 wave-lengths, which permits American and British shore stations to pick up the broadcasts and relay them.

Probably no ship, with the possible exception of the French Line's Normandie, has offered so much entertainment to passengers. The main lounge may be turned into a legitimate or cinema theater capable of seating 400.

In the ballroom, use of color has been made which is so new that it is virtually unknown on land. Tones of the color lighting system are controlled automatically by a microphone in front of the orchestra stand. The tone-color is directly and automatically affected by the pitch of the musical notes; a high note produces a flash of brilliant lighting, while soft music automatically produces soft light. The effect of the scheme on the rare wood paneling is beautiful indeed. Included in the rare woods in this paneling are petula, zebrano, bubinga, makore, tiger oak, patapsko, pomla and blackbean.

Four Giant Propellers.

Center for entertainment of those traveling tourist class is the tourist lounge which is 80 by 70 feet. The dance floor in parquet is 33 by 28 feet, and the stage 20 by 8, with a proscenium 27 feet wide by 16 feet high. Changing color lighting, a flood-lighted silver curtain and decorative cartoons by Margot Gilbert are the principal features of this room's elaborate decorations.

Four gargantuan bronze propellers, each 20 feet from tip to tip, drive the Queen Mary through the heaviest seas. Weighing 35 tons each, they are the largest ever cast for any ship, yet so delicately are they balanced, they may be turned with a touch of the hand.

Some powerful machinery is required to propel a ship that weighs 80,773 tons. The Queen Mary's four sets of engines are more than 200 feet long and develop some 200,000 horsepower.

But one of the essentials to a truly great ocean liner is safety. The Queen Mary has 24 lifeboats, of which 20 are made to carry 145 passengers each. All lifeboats are of steel, operated by Diesel engines. Each carries complete wireless equipment. In addition, for the safety of passengers in emergency, each boat carries:

Two pounds of biscuits per passenger, a quart of water per passenger, one-pound tin of condensed milk per passenger, one tin red distress flares, one oil lamp to burn eight hours, one tin of oil for the lamp, one box of matches in soldered tin, one gallon tin of fish oil, one canvas bag and line for distributing oil on troubled waters, one canvas sea anchor, drag line and tripping line, two axes, one compass with lamp, one set of oars and two spares, one-and-a-half sets of rowlocks, one bucket, one bailer, one mooring rope or painter, and two bilge pumps.

Married People Are Healthier and Live Longer, Study Shows

Death Rate Is Highest Among Single Persons

NEW YORK.—If you want to live long and be healthy, get married.

Figures showing that the married state, whether blissful or not, is at least a healthy one are reported in the current issue of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company's Statistical Bulletin.

"Marriage, apparently, is conducive to long life and good health," the report states. "At any rate, married men and women live longer than do single persons, and married people register lower death rates from nearly all the important causes of death than do bachelors or spinsters.

Result of Study.

"We would expect these findings to emerge from any statistical study of mortality according to conjugal condition, for married persons constitute a selected group. 'The lame, the halt, and the blind' do not marry, as a rule. Nevertheless, the differences between the respective death rates of wedded and single persons are so large that this factor of selection can be only a partial explanation of them.

"It would seem that the relatively staid and regular course of married life is more conducive to health than are the comparatively free and easy ways of the unmarried.

Bachelors' Death Rate.

"Among males over fifteen years of age, the standardized death rate for bachelors is 1,218.2 per 100,000 as compared with 855.9 for married men.

"Among females the standardized death rate of spinsters is 1,039.1, as against 856.6 for the married of all ages."

Windshield Filter May Be "Crutch" for Color-Blind Drivers

SEATTLE.—A simple and "infallible" help for the color-blind automobile driver who gets into difficulties because he cannot distinguish between green and red traffic lights is suggested by Thomas Ross of the University of Washington here. In a report to the current issue of Science, Mr. Ross describes a contrivance that can be fitted to the windshield of the color-blind driver's car.

The device consists of small pieces of special glass which can filter out either red or green light. With the red filter placed above the green one, the driver will know that when he sees a light through the top piece of glass he is seeing a red light.

When he sees the light through the bottom piece in this arrangement it is a green light. The device is improved by placing a prism over each filter in such a way that the traffic signal will be visible through both filters at the same time.

Device Is Practical.

This idea has worked in actual trials, Mr. Ross reports. It could be adapted to persons suffering from other types of color-blindness.

A variation of the red and green filters is also suggested. One of the color filters, says Mr. Ross, might be perforated and parts of the other set in it like polka dots.

"Thus, if the red filter were perforated and the openings were filled with the green material, a red traffic light or other red object viewed through the resulting filter would appear bright with dark spots. A green object, on the other hand, would appear dark with bright spots."

Hairpin Goes Traveling; Reaches Appendix

FLINT, MICH.—A hairpin here has really carved out a career for itself.

It wandered so far that it probably will be mentioned in the pages of a medical journal one of these days.

Strange to the doctors is how the hairpin happened to end its travels in a woman's appendix.

"That is an amazing thing," said Dr. J. C. MacGregor, who removed the appendix after it had ruptured. He has never seen a report of such a large object getting into an appendix. It is not unusual to find tiny objects of foreign matter in amputated appendices. The woman recovered.

"Private Number" Is Initial Feature Of The Strand's Sunday Movie Programs

pounded in the Fox hit, "Private Nnmber," opening at the Strand Theatre Sunday, with Robert Taylor and Loretta Young starred together for the first time as a screen love-team.

Filled with youthful love- making, gay romancing, and vivid drama highlighted with hilarious comedy by the irrepressible Patsy Kelley "Private Number" is said to be the year's outstanding romantic hit.

Robert Taylor, only son of the wealthy Winfield family, returns home from college and mistakes Loretta Young, his mother's maid, for a house guest. He refuses to permit her to explain her situation and this first chance meeting is the keystone for a romance which culminates when the family go to Maine for the summer.

Miss Young has accompanied Mrs. Winfield, and the small confines of the summer resort result in Taylor and the girl being thrown together constantly. One moonlit night, while riding in Taylor's motorboat, they decide to get married.

The Winfields return to their home at the end of summer, and Taylor wants to tell his parents of the marriage. Loretta, however, persuades him that he should first finish his college education and Taylor goes off to school.

The household is presided over by the butler, Basil Rathbone, who rules as a virtual dictator. Rathbone is infatuated with Miss Young and is determined to make her accede to his wishes. He is furious when he discovers that she is going to have a baby and revengefully informs Mrs. Winfield of the situation.

Loretta refuses to admit her husband's name but the marriage is revealed by Patsy Kelly. The Winfields are astounded at this revelation and Rathbone easily persuades them that Miss Young is just a gold digger.

Taylor returns from College to find his wife gone. In desperation, she left the Winfield household and had her baby secretly. She feels certain that Taylor will eventually find her. But Rathbone is not yet finished in his attempt to wreck the two lives—he intercepts all messages to and from the house and each of the lovers mistakenly feel that the other has ceased to care.

The romantic climax of the film comes in a crowded courtroom where Taylor and Miss Young meet again—and the riddle of whether or not their love can continue to exist is answered.

What chance has love between a millionaire's son and a personal maid? ROBERT TAYLOR and LORETTA YOUNG supply the answer in the new Fox romantic hit "Private Number."

Firestone Tires Are Used In Establishing New Records At Speedway Races

Indianapolis, Ind., June 9.—When technicians and research engineers had completed their checkup today of the results of the Indianapolis motor car race of last Saturday, they found that more than one record had been broken.

Louis Meyer established a new track record at 109 miles per hour and was the first man to chalk up three victories in this international speedway event. The next four cars to finish also broke the track record, established the previous year of more than 106 miles per hour.

But what was of even greater importance to every motor car owner was the records of the performance of the cars. Tire safety and endurance and fuel economy were again demonstrated to be the outstanding benefits that will accrue to the average motorist from this supreme test of the stamina of automobile equipment.

No better demonstration of the reasons justifying the confidence which these expert judges of motor car equipment place in Firestone tires could be given than the results of this race. Tearing along over the burning, rough brick track at speeds, sometimes exceeding 120 miles an hour, Meyer anl the other nine drivers to finish within the prize money, gave these tires much greater punishment than they could ever receive in many thousand miles an hour, Meyer and the other them showing any sign of failure.

In fact, the same tires that took part in this grueling contest will be used again by many of the drivers in other races this year.

Engineers say this annual speed test has contributed much to the peace of mind of the motor car owner as regards his tires for ordinary driving. Information and improvements made possible by study of tire performance under such grueling punishment and burning speeds has brought about developments that give the greatest protection against blowout and complete safety under all driving conditions.

There was a time at Indianapolis when the tire performance was a great problem with the drivers. But for more than a decade, since Firestone developed Gum Dipping and Balloon tire, race drivers have dismissed tire trouble as a subject to worry about. For many years now, not one of the cars using Firestone tires at Indianapolis has lost a second of time on account of tire difficulty.

Loans To be Made To Farmers

COOPERATIVE ENTERPRISES TO BE IN EIGHTEEN COUNTIES

Auburn, June 15—Proposals for establishment of farmer cooperative enterprises in 18 Alabama counties have been received at the State rural rehabilitation offices of the Resettlement Administration, L. H. Bailey, State community cooperative adviser, said today.

Loans to community and cooperative associations and to farm families for participation in such associations is one of the means by which the federal government is helping farmers to gain new economic security and, according to Bailey, funds are available now for such loans.

Cooperatives suggested for these Alabama counties include meat curing plant, cane mill, feed grinder, sweet potato curing house, breeding animals, medical services, terracing, cotton gin, canning plant fruit and vegetable cooperative marketing association, dairy, peanut picker, hay baler, mowing machine, truck for group marketing, fertilizer mixing plant, livestock marketing association, tractor, and milk and cream route. Loans for other types of needed cooperatives are available, Bailey said.

"With a number of cooperatives now active in the State," Bailey said, "it is expected that many individual loans will be made to the farmers to enable them to participate in those existing cooperatives. In communities not already servel by such organizations, services or cooperatives may be organized."

Cooperatives increase individual farm incomes by making possible joint effort to improve commodity standards and assure better prices both in purchasing and marketing, Bailey explained in outlinging this phase of RA activities. Processing of agricultural products by cooperative effort can be developed under this program, he said.

"Loans will be made to cooperatives that submit sound plans on a basis of a real community need for the service," Bailey said. and "there must be sufficient assurance that such an enterprise will be able to operate on a self sustaining basis. Proper management also must be assured to protect the interests of all, and loans are made on terms suitable to the sound operation of such enterprises."

D. K. WEBSTER HERE SELLING PEACHES

Mr. D. K. Webster, of Columbiana, was in Montevallo Monday, selling peaches from his farm. Mr. Webster wishes the people of this community to know that he will keep a supply of peaches at Holcombe's Grocery Store in Montevallo, where they can be bought as desired. He will be in Montevallo two or three times a week, bringing a fresh supply.

On the Webster farm there are about 300 fine peach trees, and he will have fruit for sale for several weeks yet.

To Eliminate Fish Traps In Alabama

Pointing to a recent example of cooperative effort on the part of Jefferson county sportsmen in assisting game wardens in eliminating fish traps, the State Conservation Department has appealed to sportsmen in other sections of Alabama to aid the wardens in stamping out game and fish law violations.

Recently, says the Alabama Game and Fish News, a group of 35 sportsmen met two game wardens in north Jefferson County at 6 o'clock in the morning and spent the entire day assisting the wardens in removing five dams and in confiscating as many fish traps in the Little Warrior river and one creek flowing into it.

"How quickly game and fish law violations could be erased if the sportsmen in other parts of the state would join the wardens in enforcing the laws and seizing nets and such traps as those found in the Little Warrior," comments the Game and Fish News.

"The lakes above Montgomery have been beset for years with dymiters, seiners, trappers, and it would be an excellent spot for similar work on the part of sportsmen. The wardens in this district have confiscated an untold number of nets and seines, and the department has sponsored strict laws in an effort to stamp out these violations; but only with the combined efforts otfhe sportsmen of this region will they ever be entirely wiped out."

What istrue in the lake section and the Little Warrior river likewise is true in other sections of the state, said the News, adding that it was unfortunate that the builders of the traps on the Little Warrior could not be apprehended.

BLAIR LOW BIDDER ON THE MONTEVALLO POSTOFFICE

After opening of bids in Washington on June 10 for construction of the new postoffice at Montevallo, it was announced that Algernon Blair, contractor, of Montgomery, was low bidder at a figure a little over $51,000. The next bidder was Beers Contracting Co., of Atlanta, whose figure was a little over $52,000. A third bid by a New York firm was over $57,000.

Big Day At Dogwood July Fourth

A big Fraternal Day and Picnic is being advertised to be at the ball park at Dogwood on July Fourth.

The occasion is being sponsored by the Improved Order of Red Men, and other patriotic and fraternal organizations will cooperate in the program.

Among the attractions for the day there will be three ball games, patriotic speaking, foot races, sack races, and other contests for the children.

Perhaps the most unique and interesting feature of the program will be a sham battle between the Red Men and the pale faces.

There will be plenty of refreshments and eats for sale.

Everybody is especially urged to come and hear Sam Hall, of Birmingham, speak on "The New Americanism." There will also be other speakers on Americanism and organization.

A welcome is extended to everybody to come to Dogwood on the Fourth, and have a good time together.

Large Attendance At Summer School

THE FIRST TERM WILL CONTINUE THROUGH JULY 22nd

Registration for the first term of summer school at Alabama College began last Thursday with the largest attendance in several years indicated. The term will continue until July 22, the second term beginning the following day and closing August 26.

The Progressive Education Association Demonstration School, which will be continued here this summer on the elementary and high school levels, is a special attraction. The Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Association will be held on the campus July 1-3

The Progressive Education work will include college credit courses in progressive education, seminars in elementary and secondary education, five periods of observation of the work for those unable to attend the full term. The next meeting on the campus is the Alabama Writers' Conclave which is in session this week.

Courses have been announced in such subjects as art, biology, chemistry, physics, education, English, history, home economics, mathematics, modern languages, music, physical education, psychology, sociology and speech.

Fifty-seven faculty members and a group of special lecturers will offer the work in the summer school, which is under the direction of Dean T. H. Napier, with the assistance of Dr. M. L. Orr, director of the training schools.

Classes for the first term began Friday morning at 7:30 o'clock and will be held five days a week until the second term, when the six day per week is undertaken.

The College Camp for Girls is scheduled July 27-August 22; the Career Conference for high school seniors July 8-10; and the School of Instruction for Vocational Home Economics Teachers July 27 to August 15.

Vacation Bible School Closes Friday

The community Vacation Bible School will close Friday of this week. The commencement program will be given at the Baptist Church at 7:30 Friday evening. The entire community is invited to be present at that time. The program will consist largely of demonstrations by the children themselves of the work they have done in the school. The handwork they have done will be on display. There will be a surprise feature. An offering will be taken to pay the expenses of the school.

CIVIC CLUB ELECT OFFICERS AT WEDNESDAY MEETING

At the regular meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club Wednesday, officers for the ensuing six months were elected as follows:

Dr. A. W. Vaughan, president; Luther E. Shaw, vice president; Eugene May, secretary; Z. S. Cowart, treasurer.

The guest speaker at Wednesday's meeting was Dr. J. F. Huff, of the State Health Department, who talked about the public health program of Alabama.

Writers Conclave Here This Week

The fourteenth annual Writers' Conclave of Alabama began at Alabama College Tuesday and will continue through Friday. The opening session was followed by a reception Tuesday evening by President and Mrs. A. F. Harman at their home on the campus.

Mrs. Claudia Waddell Roberts, Mrs. Jessie Winston Turnipseed, Dr. John S. Frazer, Miss Maude Lindsay and Dr. George Lang appeared on the prose session Wednesday morning at which Miss Mary Butler, dean of the group, presided.

Miss Lila May Smith presided Wednesday afternoon at the poetry matinee. Mrs. Marie Bankhead Owen presided at the round table meeting Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock on The Literary South.

Wednesday evening a special music program was given with Miss Stella S. Harris presiding.

Thursday evening at the Drama Festival the Judson Players will present "A Hat for Hannah," and the Colbert Little Theatre of Sheffield will present "Anchorage." A number of Birmingham men will take part in the journalism program Friday morning at 9 o'clock in Calkins Hall. They include Ted VanDerveer, associate editor of the Birmingham Age-Herald; Petterson Marzoni, drama editor of the Birmingham News; Ralph Hurst, political writer for the Birmingham News; Henry H. Newman, sports editor of the Birmingham News; Francis LeMay, of the Associated Press; Artemus Calloway, short-story writer of the Birmingham Age-Herald.

Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Reynolds Hall the business session will be held, at which new officers will be named. The tree dedication will follow that evening and the annual banquet at which John C. Henley, Jr., of Birmingham, will be the main speaker.

"Captain Blood," Gentleman Pirate Of Fortune, In Big Production, Strand Sunday

Daring and debonair Peter Blood, immortalized by the novel of Rafael Sabatini, has been brought to life on the screen by Cosmopolitan production in "Captain Blood," a mammoth production which is to be shown at the Strand Theatre in Montevallo next Sunday, as a First National release.

The gentleman pirate of fortune is portrayed by Errol Flynn, a young Irishman comparatively new to films, but who won this role, considered one of the most important of the year, over a score of famous actors after a series of screen tests.

Tall, broad shouldered, handsome, with a dashing and magnetic personality, Flynn has lived something of the life of Peter Blood, not as a pirate, but as the soldier of fortune, for he has sought adventure all over the world.

The leading lady, portraying a beautiful noblewoman who falls in love with the bold pirate, is none other than Olivia de Haviland who leaped to fame over night by her work in the Max Reinhardt production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The current production has been filmed on a lavish scale, at a cost of many thousands of dollars. An entire year elapsed from the starting of the work on the screen play to the time the picture came out of the cutting room ready for the showing.

The entire city of Port Royal in the West Indies was reconstructed for the picture as also were seven warships and pirate galleons. The wardrobe and make-up was a gigantic task, clothes and styles of the seventeenth century to suit king and slave, having to be made.

The story opens during the period when the Duke of Monmouth was leading an abortive rebellion against King James II. Dr. Peter Blood runs afoul of the soldiery, and soon thereafter finds himself a slave in the West Indies and later the captain of a pirate ship

His calm effrontery wins the attention, then the hatred and finally the love of the beautiful young noblewoman. This vigorous young daredevil puts down mutinies and scuttles ships with desperate coolness, saving his warmth for the ardor of his love.

Lionel Atwell has the role of a plantation and slave owner who later becomes the governor of Jamaica; Basil Rathbone is the pirate Levasseur, who, unlike the gentlemanly Blood, is not only cruel but treacherous, and who is eventually slain in a duel by Blood for that treachery; Ross Alexander, Guy Kibbee, Robert Barrat, Frank McGlynn, Sr., and David Torrence are fellow slaves of Blood, who escape with him and form part of his pirate crew.

"THE NEW CURRICULUM AND TODAY'S CHILD" IS THEME

The program has been announced for the Regional Conference on Progressive Education at Alabama College July 1-3, the conference theme being "The New Curriculum and Today's Child."

The schedule of events will begin on the morning of July 1 with observation in the demonstration elementary and high schools to be conducted at Alabama College during the first term of the summer school, June 11-July 22. At the general meeting that afternoon E. S. Brinkley, assistant superintendent of Virginia Schools, will discuss the Virginia Curriculum Program; and C. B. Smith, director of instruction at the Alabama State Department of Education, will speak on The Proposed Alabama Curriculum Program.

That evening Dr. V. T. Thayer, chairman of the Progressive Education Commission on the Secondary School Curriculum, and Dr. Doak S. Campbell, of the Division of Surveys and Field Studies at George Peabody College, will speak. Study groups will be held July 2 preceding a general meeting that evening. The study groups will continue July 3 and at the final general meeting at 2 o'clock that afternoon they will be summarized.

The following educators are being asked to participate in the discussions:

Frazer Banks, of Birmingham; Danylu Belser, University of Alabama; Miss Irene S. Brauer, Willimantic Normal School, Conn.; Mrs. Norma Smith Bristow, State Department of Education; E. S. Brinkley, Norfolk, Va.; Miss Edna Collins, Wilmington, Del.; Miss Mary England, State Department of Education; Miss Mildred English, Georgia State College for Women; Miss Elizabeth Gilmartin, Toledo, Ohio; Douglas Haygood, University of Florida; L. P. Hollis, Greenville, S. C.; Paul Irvin, University of Alabama; Miss Virginia James, Sheffield; F. C. Jenkins, Mississippi State Department of Education; Miss Vera Keech, Elementary School Supervisor of Monroe County.

Miss Alice V. Keliher, director of the Demonstration Schools on the campus; L. M. Lester, Georgia State Department of Education; Paul Munro, Selma; H. C. Pannell, University of Alabama; Miss Virginia Pfaff, New Orleans; Arthur Raper, Agnes Scott College; Miss Mildred Romansky, of Hartford, Conn.; Miss Elizabeth Seeger, Dalton School, New York City; W. L. Spencer, State Department of Education; B. O. Smith, University of Florida; C. B. Smith, State Department of Education; Garland S. Smith, Superintendent of Education, Lamar County; Miss Grace Tietje, Sheffield; Miss Mary Allen Tippett, Greenville; W. D. Varnell, Norris, Tenn.; Mrs. Homer Walton, Elementary School Supervisor of Shelby County; Miss Helen Woodward, Minden, La.; and W. R. Wunsch, Black Mountain College, North Carolina.

Mrs. Emma J. Brown Died Monday Last

Mrs. Emma J. Brown, age 84, died Monday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Carl Houlditch, in Montevallo, where she had lived for some years.

Funeral services were held at the residence Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Rev. F. B. Pearson and Rev. C. R. Burns. Burial was at Union cemetery near Ashby Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Brown had been a resident of Montevallo several years. She was a native of South Carolina. For a long time she had been in declining health, and during the past year it was increasingly evident that she was coming to the end of her long life.

She is survived by five sons, W. L. Brown, J. A. Brown, Charlie Brown, of Montevallo; Ed M. Brown, of Randolph; and L. N. Brown, of Sylacauga; one daughter, Mrs. Carl Houlditch, of Montevallo.

Baptist Church

"The International Christ" will be the pastor's subject at the Sunday morning service. At the evening service, 7:45, the theme will be "Christian Preference." Sunday school is at 9:45 a. m. The Baptist Training Union meets at 7 p. m.

Sunday, June 28, is Education Day in the Sunday school throughout the Southern Baptist Convention. The entire offering for that day will go to the payment of $25,000 of Howard College bonds for which our State Convention is responsible. We must do our best on that day. See the paper next week for a full statement about the offering.

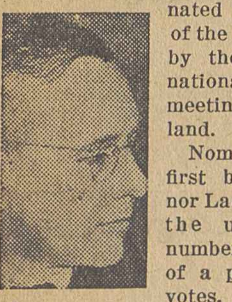
News Review of Current Events the World Over

Landon Is Republican Nominee—Britain May Alter Sanctions Policy—Mussolini Makes Sweeping Changes in Cabinet.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

IN ONE of the greatest demonstrations of popular acclaim in the history of American politics, Gov. Alfred M. Landon was nominated for President of the United States by the Republican national convention meeting in Cleveland.



Gov. Landon

Nominated on the first ballot, Governor Landon received the unprecedented number of 984 out of a possible 1,003 votes. The nomination was made unanimous. Although his name had not been placed in nomination, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho received 19 votes, including 18 from the Wisconsin delegation and one from West Virginia.

Col. Frank Knox of Chicago, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, was nominated for vice-president on the ticket, receiving the unanimous vote of the delegates.

Party unity and harmony were the watchword of the delegates. The action of the three other leading candidates for the Presidential nomination—Col. Frank Knox of Chicago, Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan and Senator Borah—in withdrawing in Landon's favor paved the way for a militant and united front in the coming campaign by the Republican party.

The convention adopted a platform of "Americanism," pledging a board farm relief program, repeal of reciprocal tariff bagaining, the elimination of monopolies and opposition to American entry into the League of Nations and the World court.

Condemning "waste and extravagance" of the Democratic administration, the platform declares for economy by reduced expenditures and for a balanced budget. Adequate relief for the unemployed and cooperation of the states is provided. The platform demands the repeal of the present social security program for a simplified "pay-as-you-go" old-age pension plan. Without proposing a constitutional amendment, it pledges support to states' minimum wage and working hour laws, abolition of sweatshops and child labor, improvement of working conditions and the right of labor to bargain. It calls for restoration and maintenance of the merit system in civil service, regulation of business by a tribunal whose actions would be subject to court review and federal supervision of interstate utilities.

The platform demands adequate national defense, right of free enterprise without competition by government, free speech, pledges care of the veterans and calls for efforts to collect the defaulted war debts.

Governor Landon in a telegram read to the convention by his campaign manager, John Hamilton, placed his own interpretation on certain planks in the platform. Under the title of labor he advocated a Constitutional amendment permitting the states to adopt legislation necessary to protect women and children in the matter of maximum hours, minimum wages and working conditions, provided it is not possible to do so under the Constitution as it now stands.

He likewise advocated a currency expressed in terms of gold and convertible into gold, adding: "I recognize, however, that this requisite must not be made until and unless it can be done without penalizing our domestic economy and without injury to our producers of agricultural products and other raw materials."

Concerning the merit system in civil service, he suggested that it should include every position in the administrative service below the rank of assistant secretaries of major departments and should cover the entire Post Office department.

IN A long expected cabinet shake-up in Italy, Premier Mussolini gave out three of his eight portfolios. There are 15 posts in the cabinet. Il Duce appointed his son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, as foreign minister. Ciano, only thirty-three, is the world's youngest foreign minister. He moved up from the cabinet post of propaganda. Mussolini also gave up the ministries of colonies and corporations, these posts going respectively to Ferrucia Lantini and Alesandro Lessona. Count Ciano's former ministry was taken by Diono Alfieri. Giuseppe Bastianini, ambassador to Poland, was made undersecretary for foreign affairs. He is only thirty-seven.

Mussolini

Elsewhere in the world governments were experiencing changes. In Nicaragua, Dr. Carlos Brenes Jarquin, completing the unexpired term of the deposed President, Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, announced his cabinet. The cabinet included Dr. Luis Manuel Debayle, minister of foreign relations; Dr. Geronimo Ramirez Brown, prime mnister; Jose Roman Gonzales, minister of public works; Benito Ramiriz, minister of finance; Dr. Lorenzo Guerrero, minister of education; Dr. Roberto Gonzalez, minister of health; Dr. Alejandro Sequeira Rivas, sanitary director.

LARGER loaves of bread at no increase in price to the consumer were being offered by leading baking company chains selling their product in large cities of the United States. One company increased the size of its 10 cent loaf by 25 per cent, and another by 15 per cent. The saving to consumers was made possible by the invalidation of the AAA processing tax, according to an official of a baking company. The tax was 30 cents a bushel on wheat, he said, and was reflected in an increase of from $1.28 to $1.40 a barrel for flour.

At the same time, the threat of a possible potato famine, due to drouth that is seriously curtailing crops in the Southeast, caused uneasiness among housewives. Prices rose precipitately, but eased off, because immediate demand from consumers declined. The seriousness of the situation was reflected in reports from the crop division of the Department of Agriculture that unless rains fell soon an acute shortage will boost the price of potatoes. The carryover this year was small, it was revealed, and Maine reported only 100 carloads of last year's holdover on hand.

DEATH came to John Hays Hammond, eighty-one, internationally-famed mining engineer, economist and writer, at his home at Gloucester, Mass. He had lived a life high in adventure and rich in experiences. He was a friend and confidant of Theodore Roosevelt, Mark Twain, H. Rider Haggard, Cecil Rhodes and many other figures celebrated in world history in the past half century.

John Hays Hammond

Mr. Hammond was born in San Francisco, where his parents settled after the Mexican war in which his father served as a major. It was the era of the spectacular California gold rush. He watched miners pan for gold dust as a boy. After graduation from Yale he set himself up as a mining engineer. Soon he visited the west coast of Mexico, believing it could be developed as a mining country.

He became known as an expert judge of mining property and was sent to South Africa by "Barney" Barnato, great speculator of the last century. Hammond experienced some romantic adventures including an acrimonious encounter with Paul Kruger, president of the Transvaal republic who sentenced him to be hanged and relented only on the intervention of the secretary of state.

AFTER settling a general strike in which 1,000,000 workers had paralyzed the industrial life of France, the new "popular front" government under Premier Leon Blum was faced with further difficulties in the form of a series of new strikes. Although the government had toiled day and night trying to adjust disputes and though most of the demands of strikers had been satisfied by employers, there was a smaller return to work than had been expected. It was reported that as fast as strikes in some industries were settled, others were affected.

The extent of the permanent ravages which will be left in the wake of this upheaval will only become apparent later on. Some observers predicted that private industry would be forced into bankruptcy so as to secure operation by the state. But whether Premier Blum and his "popular front" government were prepared for such extreme measures was not at all certain.

THE Supreme Court of Illinois upheld the constitutionality of the state's fair trade act in a decision affirming the opinion of the Cook County Circuit court. The court held that Carl W. McNeil, in the liquor business in Chicago, could not sell his product at less than the wholesale list price. Said the opinion:

"The fair trade act has for its major objective the preservation and protection of property interests of the producer and his distributors in the good will represented by brands, trade marks and trade names."

INDICATIVE of the rising tide of business recovery, the Western Electric company, a subsidiary of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, one of the largest employers of labor in the Middle West, resumed its common dividends. The action followed restoration of the company's operations to a profitable basis in 1935, with gains in both sales and employees. Practically the entire payment, amounting to $3,000,000, goes to American Telephone and Telegraph, which owns more than 90 per cent of Western Electric's stock.

At the company's Hawthorne works, near Chicago, 10,500 employees were on the payroll on June 1, an increase of 1,730 since January 1. This compares with a low of approximately 6,700 during 1933.

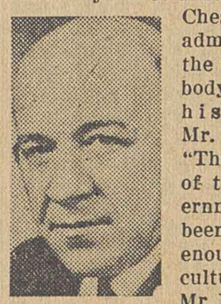
A VITAL alteration of Great Britain's foreign policy, particularly as it affects Anglo-Italian relations, was indicated by Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain in an address in which he implied broadly that England may soon move to end sanctions against Italy. Regarded by many experts as likely to become Britain's next prime minister, Chamberlain said:

"Collective security based on sanctions has failed."

This was taken to mean that England may reverse the policy which had supported the League of Nation's futile sanctions campaign to halt Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia.

In authoritative diplomatic circles in London it was reported that Mussolini had definitely served notice on Britain that Italy will leave the league unless the assembly meeting at Geneva on June 30 drops the anti-Italian sanctions program.

AGRICULTURE was given representation on the federal reserve board through the appointment by President Roosevelt of Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA to that body. In discussing his appointment, Mr. Davis said: "The fiscal policy of the federal government has never been tied in closely enough with agricultural problems." Mr. Davis has spent most of his life in agricultural activities. He was born on a farm in Iowa, was graduated from Grinnell college and later owned and operated a farm. For some years he was a newspaper publisher and then became editor of the Montana Farmer.



Doctor Tolley

Mr. Davis was succeeded as AAA administrator by Dr. Howard R. Tolley. Nationally known as a soil expert, Doctor Tolley helped Mr. Davis draft the soil conservation plan, enacted after the United States Supreme court decision invalidated the AAA. He has been carrying on this program during the absence of Mr. Davis in Europe.

Another important agricultural post was filled when the President nominated Emil Schram, grain elevator operator and farmer of Hillview, Ill., for the post of director of the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

THE New Deal was made the issue of a congressional campaign in Alabama with the result that Luther Patrick, an ardent supporter of the administration, defeated Congressman George Huddleston, an incumbent for 22 years. Patrick, a forty-two-year-old lawyer, won the Ninth district nomination by about 6,000 votes after a spirited campaign in which he charged Huddleston with disloyalty to the New Deal.

CALLED back to the British cabinet, which he left some months ago as a political scapegoat, Sir Samuel Hoare was made first lord of the admiralty, to succeed Viscount Monsell. Sir Samuel, who boldly faced a hostile house of commons last December to defend his part in the Anglo-French peace plan which would have given Mussolini only a part of Ethiopia, will face the task of solving problems arising out of British-Italian fleet difficulties in the Mediterranean. The biggest task facing Hoare, however, is restoration of the British navy to an undisputed position of supremacy on the seas. When the Washington and London naval treaties expire six months hence, observers believe that Britain may embark on a gigantic naval building program.

TEXAS celebrated the one-hundredth anniversary of its independence by opening a $25,000,000 centennial exposition in Dallas. Foremost among distinguished visitors attending the world's fair the first week was President Roosevelt. To obtain the centennial exposition Dallas made available more than $9,000,000 in cash and property. The exposition will be open until November 29. Numerous other celebrations marking the state's 100 years of freedom have been held in various cities and towns of Texas. The exposition presents educational, historic and recreational features.

Our Public Debt

Washington.—I have received a letter from a reader in my home state of Missouri, propounding a very timely inquiry concerning the public debt of the United States. It is timely for more than one reason. The United States government operates on a fiscal year running from July 1 to the next June 30 and we are, therefore, just about to close another fiscal year. A second reason why this inquiry is timely relates to the size of the present public debt, almost $32,000,000,000.

Our public debt has surged higher than normal during two periods of the last twenty years and the course of the debt, therefore, is one with which most mature persons are more or less familiar. But it remains as a [illegible] that, while most people are informed concerning the total of the national debt, they have not had opportunity to learn exactly what it means to the individual.

Treasury transactions, as a whole, are rather difficult to understand and since the sums in which government figures now run are so huge, the general attitude of individuals is to let the thing pass as a matter for expert attention. It ought not to be so. The public debt is a matter of direct concern to every one of us and that is a further reason why the inquiry mentioned above is important.

I have often wondered whether individuals, in considering whatever obligations they have in the form of a debt, take into account the fact that the public debt is actually a commitment against you and me and everyone else.

Persons who have not so thought of the public debt, probably will be shocked to learn that in addition to their obligations that have been contracted personally, there is something like $245 which, although an infinitesimal portion of the public debt, constitutes actually an individual obligation.

Therefore, when any person looks at that vague and shadowy term, "the public debt" in this light, they cannot help but realize that it has a very real and personal meaning to the individual. That enormous sum of nearly $32,000,000,000 must be paid off as any other debt and the government must collect it from everyone who lives in this country.

Again the public debt may seem a thing far removed but it is brought home directly to each of us through the taxes we pay and in more ways than most of us care to admit we are contributing that tax. So, when the government contracts a debt and arranges to pay it off, the only way collection is possible for the extraordinary amount is by increasing the share of government expenses which each of us bears, meaning of course, an increase in our tax.

* * *

Some History

In 1857, the public debt was only $28,700,000. In that year, each person's share was only $1.01. With the advent of the Civil war, the government needed funds and began borrowing additional amounts until in 1866 the debt reached what in those days was a high figure—$2,750,000,000. At that time, each person's share was $77.69.

Good administration and sound financial policies followed and the debt was reduced, paid off, until during the early 1900's, the debt was reduced until each person's share was something less than $17.

Continual retrenchment was carried on until the World war interrupted the program and fresh borrowings were necessary for prosecution of that great conflict. The borrowing of the war days carried our public debt to a new high point of $26,594,000,000 on August 19, 1919.

The debt, because it was a new peak, looked insurmountable and it was dangerously high but through the administrations of Presidents Harding and Coolidge, the job of paying off the debt was seriously attacked and this program eventually resulted in reduction of the debt to about $16,500,000,000 during the administration of President Hoover.

It was from this low point that the present debt burden has mounted and continues to climb. The depression reduced government income from taxes and left the treasury with a deficit in two years of the Hoover regime.

The result of those deficits was to increase the public debt because money had to be borrowed to pay current running expenses. The borrowing did not appear serious, however, either in the last two years of the Hoover administration or the first year of the administration of President Roosevelt because Mr. Roosevelt had pledged the country during his campaign to economize in every direction. It was his promise that he would curtail expenditures by one-fourth and therefore make the outgo and income of the government approximately the same.

Instead of that course, Mr. Roosevelt initiated the present program of expenditures in huge amounts. The first plan called for the use of vast sums for expenditure by the government in the belief that the paying out of public money would revive industry and that industry once on its feet, would again yield profit and that profit would in turn produce taxes for the government. Then came the public relief programs for which larger sums—to be exact, $3,500,000,000 in one year and $4,880,000,000 in another year—were appropriated and spent. Thus, we see in the last three years that the debt of the nation has grown from approximately $21,000,000,000 to approximately $32,000,000,000, and each person's share, as stated previously, is about $245.

Tell the Story

Now, the figures here set out tell much more of a story than just that an enormous and incomprehensible number of dollars have been spent, millions of them needlessly. They tell more of a story, indeed, than just the fact that within another year there will have been approximately $3,000,000,000 more expended and that the debt then will have been increased something like $13,000,000,000 since the Roosevelt campaign of spending began.

To understand the situation in which the United States government and, therefore, the people, find themselves, it might be better to picture what would happen to an individual in the same circumstance. Hundreds of thousands of individuals are in debt but nearly all of them seriously try to avoid getting in debt beyond their capacity to pay off their obligations. If sickness or poor crops or poor business or any one of many other afflictions overtake that individual, even though his personal debts might be liquidated under normal conditions, he is—well, he just sinks.

Our government differs from that individual only in the fact that its citizens regard the government's credit as virtually limitless. It can continue to borrow and people will accept government bonds in exchange for their money for quite a while. But let us attempt to visualize in our mind's eye what would happen should our government be called upon to meet some extraordinary conditions that would be comparable to the loss of a job by the individual who is in debt.

* * *

Too Optimistic

It seems to me that the Roosevelt administration has followed the latter course on the optimistic base, entirely too optimistic it appears and has plunged this country too deeply into debt.

I do not mean to imply that government securities are not good any longer. Far from it. I maintain that as long as our money is any good, our government's bonds are good. Yet, it must be apparent to every thinking person that we cannot continue to spend at the rate that marks the last three years.

I prefer, as against the present spending policies, the policies of President Andrew Jackson, who fought always against excessive costs of government; who demanded consistently that the expense of government be raised regularly for each year's payments and that there be a little extra put away for the proverbial rainy day when the government was called upon for emergency payments. The policies of Andrew Jackson were so effective that during his administration in 1837, the public debt was wiped out and there was actually cash in the treasury besides.

Supporters of the present spending policies will say, of course, that the public debt of those days was in no way comparable to that of 1936. That is true but neither were the resources of the United States in those days comparable to the resources and the wealth producing capacity of the present-day United States. Likewise, the population of the United States in Andrew Jackson's term in the White House was only a mere handful compared to the nearly 130,000,000 of 1936.

So, answering the inquiry as to what the public debt means to the individual citizen, the answer must be a relation of the fact that his family's share as we start a new fiscal year in the government approximates $1,000. It means, further, that through one form of tax or another, that individual is helping to pay the interest of more than $710,000,000 every year. It means, in addition, that his government is in a position for the first time in the lives of most persons now living where it would face extreme difficulty were it called upon to defend our country in war or meet a fresh emergency like that through which we have been passing. Lastly, since government debts in the United States are held to be honorable debts and not to be repudiated, none of us can avoid commands from that government in the future to dig deeper and deeper in the old pocket for the payment of taxes.

The kind of "justice" supposed to "terrify" crime in this country is very amusing justice: confined to the national government. Murderers, kidnapers and other racketeers are jailed, not for their crimes against society, but for failure to pay income tax. The felon is jailed for failure to divide his criminal earnings with his government.

Arthur Brisbane

A change in this program is due to Special Prosecutor Dewey, who, before Supreme Justice McCook, in New York city, has convicted a "top-notch racketeer," as Mr. Dewey calls him—Charles ("Lucky") Luciano. He and eight vice-ring associates are convicted on 62 counts, that may entail prison sentences of 1,240 years for "Lucky" and each associate.

In this world, many laugh and a few do things. Fulton said he would run a boat up the Hudson river by steam; crowds gathered to laugh.

When it was suggested early in this century that men would soon fly, successfully, millions laughed.

Had it been suggested that an army officer would cross the continent "flying blind" in a hooded cabin, seeing nothing, guided by a scientific "radio beam," the laughs would have been louder; but that is what Major Eaker, of the army air corps, has just done. If you should say now that giant ships will fly around this earth, up in the stratosphere, above clouds and storms, carrying thousands of passengers, dropping them at their various destinations in smaller ships, "around the world in 48 hours or less," there would be more laughter, but it would be foolish laughter. What men can imagine they can do, and more.

General Badoglio, who was sent by Mussolini to take over Ethiopia, and did so, celebrated his triumph in Rome, Mussolini and the Italian king, now emperor of Ethiopia, assisting.

The triumphant general, named viceroy of Ethiopia by Mussolini, who surprised the world with the swiftness of his conquest, led his troops, burned by the tropical sun, under the victory arch of Constantine to the tomb of the unknown soldier of the big war.

"Storms kill nine in Oklahoma and Kansas; tornadoes, floods and lightning cause havoc," so runs the headline, and so other headlines have been running for months past. Hail ruins crops; lightning bolts kill three; "twisters," those powerful, revolving windstorms, lift up and knock down little houses.

The sultan of Sulu is dead on the Island of Jolo, now only sultan in name.

Once, as spiritual and temporal head, he ruled all the Mohammedans of the Sulu archipelago.

The death of this former ruler, Jamalul Kiram, recalls an interesting incident following the Spanish war. Jamalul, good Mohammedan, did not think he should deal with this nation, on account of its religion. He was soothed by an official statement that the United States had no official religion whatever.

The Black Legion, latest secret murder organization, tells candidates: "You cannot join unless you are a native-born, white, Protestant gentile; willing to proceed against negroes, Catholics and Jews." To "proceed against" means to murder.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, a Protestant organization, says it is shameful for the Black Legion to use the word "Protestant," and blasphemous to use the name "God Almighty."

Sir Samuel Hoare had to leave the British cabinet because he opposed the foolishness of sending a great British fleet into the Mediterranean to protect Haile Selassie, not protecting him in the least.

Now, Sir Samuel Hoare is back in the British cabinet "the king pleased to appoint him." This means, probably, that the futile League of Nations' "sanctions" effort to coerce Mussolini will be dropped. Many things are easier than coercing Mussolini.

Why do Americans swallow eagerly anything in the way of foreign-made goods, especially if they come from the friendly British islands?

British merchants advertise proudly "Made in Great Britain." Every Englishman urges "Buy British." Americans seem proud if they can advertise "Made in England" or "Made in France."

Black-Draught's Reputation

The confidence people have in Black-Draught, built up from satisfactory use so many years, is shown in its being handed on from one generation to another. It must be good to have such a strong following.

"We have used Black-Draught for twenty years," writes Mr. Fred Richardson, of Hartshorne, Okla. "My mother has used it for fifty years. It is the best medicine I know anything about. I take it for sour stomach and constipation, or when I feel sluggish and bad. Black-Draught is splendid to regulate the bowels, cleansing them of waste matter, ridding them of constipation. I expect to use it twenty-five years more if I live and it gives satisfaction as it has always given."

"Free next week," Barry declared ringingly.

At the dinner table, in spite of herself, Peg caught some of the contagion of Barry's new confidence. Nolan's story sounded like the solution of everything, they agreed. "We've got to get Jack out before Saturday," Barry said. "His father'll be home then."

Both women looked up at him.

"What'll happen to you?" Peggy asked.

"The main question," Barry urged, "is what's going to happen to Peg. And Jack. And Jacky."

"We'll meet that when it comes," Peggy returned, steadily. "But now I'm worried about you."

She excused herself early, with the plain purpose of leaving Barry with Pat. But the Judge stayed on. His legally trained mind had been busy with the Nolan disclosures.

"If Mrs. Kelly slept at her sister's, why didn't she say so to you? It would've been her best alibi."

"Yes, but it would have involved admitting that she'd had a run-in with Kelly."

"That's true," Hambidge admitted. "But Nolan was drunk last night, you say. And some parts of his story simply don't hold water. I don't believe there was anything 'queer' between Mrs. Kelly and the Filipino. Kelly's finding that out wouldn't account for his calling the man a 'lousy spy,' would it?"

"No," Barry retorted. "But listen. If the Chink was a 'lousy spy,' he got paid for it, didn't he? Wouldn't that explain Mrs. Kelly's giving him 'coin and jewelry?' And everything else? The Chink's reporting Betty Barclay's message, and all the rest of it? I tell you, this story's as straight as a string. Betty Barclay went on the road with her show about the time Mrs. Kelly sued for divorce. I found that out some time ago. She got back the day of the murder, and phoned Kelly. Mrs. Kelly learned of that from the Chink, and lit into Mike. Then Mike lit into the Chink, and the Chink killed him. I think we can prove that."

The Judge shook his head.

"Anyway, it certainly establishes reasonable doubt of Jack's guilt."

"They can't convict Jack," the Judge insisted. "Peter says so, and I've never known Peter to be wrong when he made an assertion like that. But acquittal means waiting for the trial, and waiting for the trial means that Jack will still be in jail when his father returns."

Pat remained silent, but, the next morning, on the beach, she drew Barry away from the little group engaged in railroad construction.

"You were right in the beginning," Pat said. "There was only one thing to do. Father saw Kelly alive after Peg's husband left him, and we should have said so.

"I can't stand seeing Peggy," Pat continued. "Was that what you had in mind when you sent her here? Anyway, it's too terrible. She comes down to breakfast, looking—well, you know. You knew about trouble like that—all night long—alone—and I didn't. I do now, and we've got to 'come clean.'

"I don't think it matters," Barry replied. "I still think we can free Jack without that."

"How soon?"

"By next Wednesday."

Pat nodded.

"All right," she said. "We'll wait until Wednesday."

Barry had never seen her more charming.

As they walked down the beach, to rejoin the others, he asked, "Are you ever going to confess how you found out about me?"

Pat laughed.

"That was too easy. The night of Marian's visit, you told me you'd taken the name of Barry Gilbert. And it had a curiously familiar sound. After a moment, I remembered that I'd once seen an actor called Barry Gilbert in a war picture."

"And then?"

"Then you shut your hand in the door. The expression of mingled surprise and pain in your face—that was what had kept the picture and the actor in my mind. You were the man who'd come out of the drinking place, laughing and talking, and been shot. I was sure of that—just as sure as I was that you'd crushed your fingers deliberately to keep us from knowing that, unlike the Jack Ridder you were supposed to be, you couldn't play a violin any more than you could play Hamlet."

"I'm glad you found out," Barry said. "I'm glad I haven't been deceiving you, at all events."

They had reached the railroad builders.

"Pat!" Jack called. "Pat! We've finished—"

"Jacky! You mustn't call Miss Hambidge 'Pat.'"

"Everybody else does."

"I like it," Patricia came to the rescue. "We're Pat and Peg to each other now; why shouldn't I be Pat to Jacky?"

It was almost a miracle, Barry decided. Was this the same girl of whom, only a couple of months ago, her father had said, "Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."

The change wasn't all his doing, or Peg's. Something else had contributed to softening Pat, and making her sweeter and lovelier. It was ironic, Barry felt, and bitter—that she should be the loveliest when he was losing her. What of his plan to come back for her—"Some day, when I've made good?" A girl like that might marry an ex-vagabond; she certainly couldn't marry an ex-convict.

Barry drove back to town Sunday evening without having put anybody's house in order. He had dined with the Hambidges, and gone over there in the morning "to see Jacky start for his ride."

"Well, our trial's set for two weeks from today," said Winslow when Barry called at his office Monday morning.

"I'm still hoping there won't be any trial."

"Meaning that you think you've got Mrs. Kelly?"

That was the question Barry had dreaded. Winslow's frank amusement at his "sleuthing" nettled him, and made him feel foolish. Especially now that he was compelled to admit, "No; I'm afraid you were right about Mrs. Kelly. She slept at her sister's that night."

"Well, then," Peter asked, "who's the latest candidate?"

"Do you remember reading me your cross examination of the Filipino?"

"A few notes for it—yes."

"You found a lot of holes in the boy's story?"

"Yes."

But Peter was still amused.

"Well, I've got a few more," Barry said, "and a motive."

He sat down, and Peter opposite him. Barry repeated what Evans had told him of the dinner with Nolan.

"I'm Glad You Found Out," Barry Said.

"Well," Peter remarked at the end, "that settles the case against Rogers."

"You think so?"

"Obviously. If Nolan sticks to his story. We say Nolan's testimony establishes that the decanter was downstairs all the time Rogers was upstairs. But we've got to make the jury believe it."

"Or the district attorney."

Winslow shook his head.

"The district attorney wouldn't move for dismissal of an indictment on that evidence."

"But—"

"You're perfectly sure that the Filipino killed Kelly," Winslow went on. "I'm not. And the district attorney wouldn't be. The Filipino was angry. And the decanter was downstairs. That's all there really is to that story."

"That's what you've got to prove to the jury. My own guess is that the decanter had been carried into the dining room when the murderer entered the house."

"After Nolan went home?"

"Yes, and after the Filipino went to bed."

"And that man—"

"You're sure it was a man?"

"Very sure. And that man was some one who had better reason than we've found yet for hating or dreading Mike Kelly."

Barry rose.

Peter had picked a glove off his desk, and was turning it right side out.

"Have you ever thought of Luis Morano?" Barry asked.

Winslow let the glove fall.

"Why?"

"He seems to have had some reason for hating Kelly."

"You mean that row in the Cocoanut Bar?" Peter said. "Oddly enough, that's why I haven't thought of Morano. He was telephoning me from the Cocoanut Bar—about the row—at the time of the murder.

"Luis always came to me when he was in trouble. And he called me, at home, just after one that morning, to say that one of his girls was in jail, and would I take the case. I could hear that jazz of his."

Barry stooped for the glove.

"Well, that's that," he remarked. "Kelly was threatening Morano, you know, and—"

But Peter was smiling again.

"You can make a case against almost anyone," he said. "But a case that'll stand up—that's another thing."

Barry grinned sheepishly.

Winslow pressed a button.

"Stop worrying," he advised Barry. "We're going to free Rogers. If we have to get the guilty man to do it, we'll get him, but let's give the court a chance first."

"I guess we'll have to," Barry conceded.

Peter's secretary opened the door.

"What's Nolan's first name?" Peter asked Barry. "And where's his garage? Got it, Miss Clark? Got it, Miss Clark? Now, get Nolan in here this afternoon."

He looked up at Barry.

"Don't mind my joking," he said. "Something tells me you did a grand job when you turned up Mr. Nolan."

"Peter's wonderfully kind," Barry told Harwood that evening, "but he makes me feel as small as an author's name in a motion picture advertisement."

"I don't think Winslow means to make anyone feel small," Ernie answered. "He's too big for that. It's the small men who've got to make other people smaller, in self-defense. The trouble with Winslow is that he's generally right, and that's trying, no matter how kind anyone may be about it."

"Winslow's a great lawyer," he went on, "and a swell guy. He's had his own troubles, too. Ever meet his wife?"

"Once."

"He's nearly wrecked his career for her, you know. She ran away from home with some youngster in a military school. The kid turned crook, and the cops killed him. Then she married Winslow. The tabloids played the story up all over the place, and Mrs. Winslow crashed, and had to be taken to Europe. She went to pieces again two or three years ago, and Winslow closed the office, and went to live in the South of France. The money gave out, I guess. Anyway, they didn't stay long. Of course, that telephone message doesn't prove anything."

"You mean Morano's message to Winslow?"

"Yes. Luis might have sent that at one o'clock, and still've been in time for the murder."

"Is there any chance that Luis didn't send it?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"It occurs to me that Peter might be shielding some one."

"Whom? Morano?" Harwood shook his head. "Winslow isn't that kind of a lawyer. As a matter of fact, I know Morano phoned him."

"Who told you?"

"Violet Fane."

"Then you've been to the Cocoanut Bar?"

"Yes, I went Saturday, and met all your cronies. Miss Fane says Luis followed Peggy Rogers around to the police station, and then came back to the Bar, and called up his lawyer, and drove to Morristown."

"At one o'clock?"

"Yes."

"How about 'faking an alibi?'"

"You reminded me it could be done," Barry went on.

Ernie turned suddenly.

"Ever strike you as queer," he asked, "that nobody ever connected Kelly's murder with the Jefferson Street grab?"

Barry couldn't trust himself to reply.

"They were pulled off about the same time. As I remember it, Judge Hambidge's decision was handed down the day after the killing."

Barry remained silent.

"Kelly stood to make a million or two on that deal," Harwood continued. "Those Jefferson Street houses were pretty decent once. Then they went slummy. Through agents, Kelly bought 'em in, one by one, for little or nothing, and turned 'em over to a phoney corporation to sell to the city at a huge profit. Some of the original owners may have been a little bit sore, don't you think?"

The conversation was drifting into safer channels, and, relieved, Barry let it flow on.

"As a matter of fact," Harwood resumed, "some one was—very sore. He called me up, the day of the murder, and offered to squeal. He wouldn't give me his name, but he said he'd be here, at ten-thirty that night, to deliver the goods on Kelly."

"And then?"

"Then he didn't show up."

"Somebody got to him."

"Probably. And then somebody killed Kelly."

Barry asked, "Is that the clue you had in mind when you said, 'Tell Winslow I may have a tip for him some day?'"

Harwood nodded.

"Yes, but, as I remarked later, that guy who phoned might have been anybody. I didn't have a darn thing to go on except that he had a soft voice and a funny impediment in his speech."

"And then—"

"Then you told me about Morano, and I went to the Cocoanut Bar. The guy that phoned me was Morano, all right. But what does that mean? Not a thing, maybe. If Morano did hop in his car at one o'clock that night—"

He paused.

"I've got a dozen men on this trail. Now, I'm going to send somebody to Morristown. Not you. They know you. Your job is to lay low. Morano hasn't the faintest idea who I am. I told him I came from Grand Rapids. But—"

The city editor was pacing the floor.

"My God, how this picture begins fitting together," he cried. "Morano threatens to spill the beans. Some one tells Kelly. Kelly goes to the Cocoanut Bar. With two strong-arm men. Why? To silence a squealer. That was around eight o'clock, and, at ten-thirty, the squealer didn't squeal. Why? Because Kelly had something on him."

Barry was on his feet, too, now.

"Something in writing," he said.

"Sure! The paper he accused Peggy Rogers of trying to steal."

"Yes," Barry went on, "and get this: somebody did try. Violet Fane, probably. Peggy Rogers says Violet had just left the table when the row started. And that Luis was talking to Vi, outside the dressing rooms, just before that.

"—What did he say? He said, 'I'll send this dame to jail, and you to the hot spot.' And you can't send a man to the electric chair for picking pockets."

"No."

"But you might, if you knew of something else he'd done, and had the proof of it. There was a paper, and it had disappeared when the body was found. Who got it? Morano. And not in the Cocoanut Bar, because it was still in Kelly's pocket at midnight."

Harwood laid down his pipe.

"How do you know that?"

"Somebody told me."

"Jack Rogers?"

"No."

Harwood's eyes narrowed.

"Was it Judge Hambidge?"

Barry didn't answer.

"If Winslow's shielding anyone it's Judge Hambidge," Harwood said. "Judge Hambidge, or some one close to him. I've been thinking that ever since you put the idea in my head. The judge has always been a straight shooter. Why did he write that decision? Was that paper a threat to him, too?"

Barry said, "I don't know."

"I don't either. But I'm going to find out before Saturday."

"Can I help?"

Ernie looked at him.

"No," he replied, curtly. "For the present, I want you to keep out of this."

CHAPTER X

"NOT a word to anybody," Harwood had said. "Dig in 'til I phone you. One little leak, and we're finished."

Barry saw that. But why should Harwood fear the leak coming from him? Pat? Nonsense! Winslow, of course, who was Morano's lawyer. But Ernie had said, "Winslow isn't that kind of a lawyer." And he had said, also, "If Winslow's shielding anyone, it's Judge Hambidge. Judge Hambidge, or some one else close to him." Except Winslow, who was close to Judge Hambidge, but Pat?

Into Barry's mind trickled slowly small, insistent recollections—one after another. Recollections that, in the beginning, seemed to have nothing to do with the case. Pat was in town the night of the murder. Naturally—with her father; what of it? "He wouldn't let me stay with him," she had said, at dinner the next evening in Southampton. What of it?

But the trickle was becoming a flood now. The afternoon Hambidge had confessed seeing Kelly, why did Pat keep checking the Judge? What did she fear his disclosing? And the confession itself; why did he make it?

"I'm off again," Barry raged at himself. "Just because Ernie said, 'Winslow may be shielding Hambidge, or someone close to him.' That might mean someone close to Winslow. But who's closer than the Hambidges?" And then he remembered declaring, the afternoon of the Judge's confession, "The man—or the woman—who killed Kelly knew what he—or she—was going to do."

Fish That Lay Many Eggs

The ling lays over 26,000,000 eggs during the spawning period, while the herring averages only 36,000. Turbot is second, with over 9,000,000 eggs; next comes the cod with an average of 5,000,000 eggs.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Cows of Today Good Investment

Big Improvement Over the Milk Producers of Years Ago.

By J. G. CASH, Dairy Specialist, College of Agriculture, U. of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Current models in milk cows are quite as much of an improvement over their ancestors of 1925 vintage as the sleek, streamlined cars of today are over the cumbersome automobiles of a few years back.

Setting the standard for advancements in the milk-cow "models" have been the dairy herd improvement associations. These are organized and sponsored by the extension service of the agricultural college as a means of furthering better breeding, feeding and management of farm dairy herds. At the present time there are 58 of these associations in which 20,000 cows are being tested for milk and butterfat production and otherwise handled under approved methods.

Value of these methods in putting dairy herds on a more efficient and more profitable basis is evident from a review of past records, it is pointed out. In 1925 dairy herd improvement association cows in Illinois averaged only 282 pounds of butterfat. In 1934 member cows averaged 324.9 pounds. On the basis of 1934 prices the late model cow cleared $64 above feed costs. On this same basis the 1925 cow would have cleared $52, or $12 less.

If dairy herd improvement association farmers had obtained no better production in 1934 than they did in 1925, the total net return above feed costs in 1934 would have been $240,000 less for the 20,000 member cows of the state.

Most members are confident that their herds are continuing to improve in efficiency. It is expected that the amount of butterfat produced for each pound of feed will be maintained because of better cows and more careful feeding and herd management.

Farmers have been able to develop this higher production efficiency among their herds mainly through testing, culling, feeding of better rations and improved breeding programs advocated by their improvement associations. Those who intend to "keep up with the models in milk cows" will find it to their advantage to be members of their local associations during the coming year. Through these improvement associations they will be able to distinguish the star boarders from the paying producers and cull out the poor cows. In addition they will have access to the latest information on rations. Also accurate herd records will help them locate proved herd sires.

Work Animals Need a Balanced Ration

For economy and efficiency, the horse and mule are hard to beat. Good work animals supply a highly satisfactory form of pulling power for farm implements and machinery, and they utilize feed crops that can be grown at home. But to get the best service out of work stock, care must be exercised to feed it properly.

Corn, oats, and barley are about equal in feeding value, but corn is a little cheaper, usually, for feeding mature animals. Barley should be crushed or ground before feeding. A great variety of hays are suitable for horse or mule feed. For each grower, the best type to feed is that grown on his own farm, Professor Ruffner of North Carolina State college stated.

Among the hays and roughages fed with good results are: Lespedeza, timothy, clover, corn stover, soybean, cowpea, alfalfa, and peanut. When timothy and ear corn are fed, it is well to include a quart of wheat bran each day to balance the diet.

Animals at work need 2 to 2½ pounds of feed, dry roughage and concentrates combined, for each 100 pounds of live weight. A 1,000-pound mule should receive 10 pounds of hay and 10 pounds of grain.

When animals have plenty of good hay or pasturage, and are not working, the grain feed may be cut in half.

Controlling Erosion

Few of us appreciate fully the importance organic matter plays in controlling erosion, along with the greater production of crops it promotes. Soils well supplied with organic matter are more retentive of moisture, remain more friable, are easier to work, and are less likely to become hard or form a crust after rains. As the organic matter is increased the yields increase. In our farm practice there are three sources from which organic matter is usually supplied—farm manure, roots and stubbles left from crops, and green crops turned under.—Missouri Farmer.

Farm Notes

Seventy-seven per cent of the farm homes still use lamps for lighting purposes.

* * *

The sow should receive no food for 24 hours after farrowing but should be given plenty of lukewarm water.

* * *

Grain should be ground only to a medium degree of fineness for stock, so that it is gritty, and not mealy or floury.

Lions Urge Better Opportunities For Boys and Girls

Montgomery, June 13—Adequate opportunities for the boys and girls of the state were urged by the Lions of Alabama at their annual convention which closed Friday, June 12, in Montgomery. Resolutions adopted by the convention declared the educational problem to be the greatest one facing the state today and resolved that every effort be made to bring about a speedy solution.

The resolutions also commend the work of various Lions Clubs in giving support to cripple children, and urged that this activity be continued by the local clubs as their budgets will allow.

The resolution concerning education is as follows:

"The 34th District of Lionism in convention assembled, realizing that the major problem facing the state of Alabama is the provision of adequate educational opportunities for Alabama boys and girls, resolves that every effort be made to bring about a speedy solution of this problem, guaranteeing educational opportunities for Alabama equal to those of other states."

Members of the resolutions committee were A. F. Nickel, Auburn; William Kline, Flomaton; and Felton Collier, Bessemer.

State Capitol News

For the first time since the exa session of the legislature decamped from Goat Hill two months ago, Gov. Bibb Graves spoke publicly this week of the need for additional revenue to assure full school terms in Alabama.

Returning from his Gulf coast cottage at Foley, apparently restored to full health and vigor, the Governor replied freely to questions by capitol reporters.

"Despite the fact that the State gave approximately $2,000,000 to the common schools in excess of any previous year, the schools actually received about $3,500,000 less because of the inability of cities and counties to carry on," the Governor declared.

"Many counties in the State are poor and debt-ridden," he added. "For that reason the State must increase its share in the support of schools if an adequate educational system is to be maintained. We must acknowledge and accept that responsibility."

Local taxes for schools from ad valorem taxes have been drastically reduced because of the decrease in property values and the enormous amount of land reverting to the State because of non-payment of taxes, he explained.

Though a survey now being made by Representative Clint Harrison of Marengo, shows that many states consider public schools a local governmental function, Governor Graves said the uneven distribution of resources among the 67 counties of Alabama makes State aid to common schools virtually mandatory.

"The strong must help the weak, else the fundamental principle as well as the constitutional guarantee of free public schools would be endangered," he added.

An "open door" policy on out-of-state motor vehicles by reciprocal agreements between the states, which experts believe will bring more than 1,000,000 additional trucks, buses and tourist passenger automobiles into Alabama, with consequent increase in gasoline tax receipts, is being considered by Gov. Graves.

The plan which has been endorsed by the American Automotive Association and other trade bodies would declare an "open door" policy for a period exceeding the present 30-day limit by interstate compacts.

By reciprocal aggreements with other states, Florida lured approximately 1,000,000 additional motor vehicles last year, reports Ray Henson, chief of the motor vehicle license division of the State Tax Commission. Florida collected approximately $6,000,000 more in gas and oil taxes, he added.

Citing the prohibitive license and permit fees charged by some of the states, Henson said North Carolina charges $333 for a 30-passenger out-of-state chartered bus. Louisiana charges about $410 for trucks of ten to twelve thousand pounds rating, plus 68 cents per horse power.

"Alabama charges approximately $34 on out-of-state trucks and trailers," he pointed out. "Naturally, our license and permit fees discourage tourist and commercial traffic even though our fees are much lower. Hence, a considerable volume of traffic is diverted thru states that have adopted reciprocal agreements.

Governor Graves said he had not studied the plan in detail, but expressed approval of the principle. However, he said he would oppose such "guest privileges" extending more than three months.

The Alabama Supreme Court on last Thursday in effect granted a "service bonus" to county officials in about 20 counties by invalidating the enabling act of the Sparks amendment limiting the compensation of constitutional officers to $6,000 a year.

Approximately $150,000 in fees accruing to the officers affected by the act which had been impounded was ordered released as a result of the court's decision.

Since the court's ruling was made public, capitol corridors have been buzzing with gossip that an elective state officer may test the validity of the Sparks amendment in its entirety. The amendment scaled down the salaries of the constitutional officers from thirty-three and one-third to five per cent.

The test case pending in Montgomery Circuit Court to determine whether the state may legally assume the $3,800,000 debt of the State Bridge Corporation for the purpose of freeing the 15 toll-bridges will be completed this week, according to announcement by Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael.

Filing of briefs by Carmichael was expedited because of Governor Graves' desire to clarify all legal questions before the end of the fiscal year of the federal government, June 30.

The governor explained that the federal government had tentatively promised to credit the state for matching purposes to the extent of paproximately $2,500,000 if the refunding proposal stands the judicial test.

Fearing that the Alabama Supreme Court might be closed for appeal during its customary three months summer recess, Governor Graves conferred with Chief Justice John C. Anderson last week and was assured the court would review the case as soon as it is sent up from the lower court.

Advertising signs and posters on Alabama's highways have been ordered removed, State Highway Engineer H. H. Houck announced.

Maintenance forces of the highway department are now clearing the rights of way on all roads of the unsightly sign boards and owners of property abbuting the roads have been requested to cooperate with the department by removing all advertising signs on their property.

The order outlawing offending sign boards is primarily the result of studies showing that they constitute a serious traffic hazard by obstructing the view of motorists, Houck explained.

Ordinary signs and posters, it was stated, are being torn down, loaded on trucks and hauled away as rubbish. Where signs are of any considerable size and value, however, the owners are requested to come and get them. If they do not comply with the request within a reasonable time, these signs also will be destroyed.

Property owned by charitable or religious organizations is not exempt from ad valorem taxation, although the income from such property is used for charitable purposes, Attorney General Albert A. Carmhicael ruled in an opinion directed to Roy Johnson, tax assessor of Jefferson County.

In requesting an official ruling, Johnson explained that the Methodist orphanage at Selma owns two pieces of property in Birmingham which were acquired through mortgage foreclosures. Officials of the orphanage claim the rents from this property are used entirely for the suport of the orphanage and demand exemption from payment of ad valorem taxes under Section 4 of their charter.

The Attorney General explained that an act of the 1935 legislature repealed such exemptions except on property used exclusively for religious worship or occupied by charitable or philanthropic organizations.

Home Demonstration Notes

Marye Elizabeth Nolen
Home Demonstration Agent

Mrs. J. C. Brambaugh, president Home Demonstration Club, of Harpersville, and Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent of Shelby County, recently returned from Washington, where they attended the Triennial Conference of the Associated Country Women of the World. More than 200 Alabama women attended this conference.

The meeting was planned expecting from 1,000 to 1,200 women, and when registration was completed 7,300 women had registered. The conference was a grand success, and many other activities were enjoyed by those attending the conference, including the tea at the White House, private conference with Mrs. Roosevelt, boat trip on the Potomac, a tea for the Alabama delegation at the home of Senator and Mrs Hugo Black, who were joint hostesses with Congressman and Mrs. Joe Starnes. We were also able to see the Senate in session and to enjoy all the sightseeing, including the monasteries, Mt. Vernon, museums and government buildings. Seventeen countries sent representatives.

Mrs. Roosevelt, in her word of greeting to the group, stated that she was not only surprised that so many farm women were interested enough to make the trip to Washington, but she was more surprised that as many farm women could get away from their husbands.

There was also a lovely exhibit of the development of home demonstration work in the nearby states, and we are sure that all of those attending received a great bit of inspiration and information which will be crried back with them to their individual states and countries.

On June 10 Mrs. S. M. Tatum, of Camp Branch Home Demonstration Club; Mrs. Leon Baker, of Wright Club; Mrs. A. E. Turner, Calcis Club; Mrs. Frank Wyatt, of the Klein Club; and Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent, attended a county-wide rally of the Club women of Macon County, at Tuskegee. A most interesting program was enjoyed. The morning was devoted to a public speaking elimination dontest, the subject of which was "What Is Ahead for Rural America?"

At noon a delicious plate lunch was served to about 300 women. In the afternoon prizes were given to the winners in the public speaking contest, and certificates were given to the leaders of the various clubs of that county.

We especially enjoyed the exhibit of handicraft put on by the various clubs of Macon County. We also enjoyed the quilt show which was sponsored by the Home Demonstration Clubs.

While in Tuskegee we visited Tuskegee Institute for negroes, which is one of the best schools for negroes in the world.

Macon County has had home demonstration work for some 20 years and we felt the time was well spent in observing what they are doing and to see what they have accomplished in their county since the work is so young in our own county.

The poultry meeting which was to have been held June 16 was postponed on account of Mr. John Ivey being unable to be with us. Plans will be announced for the meeting later.

Cecile Cowart, from Calera 4-H Club and Sara Frances DeMent, from Boothton Club, represented Shelby County at the State Short Course which was held in Auburn May 26 to 29. Cecile Cowart entered "Amateur Night," which was held on Wednesday, May 27.

I am sure these girls would say that it is worth the effort to do your best in 4-H club work if you win a trip to Auburn to the Short Course. They were kept busy at some interesting and profitable activity every minute

"Silly Billies" at Wadesonian Sunday Is Wheeler-Woolsey Fun-Fest

Perhaps the funniest and certainly the most original of all Wheeler and Woolsey's screen offerings is "Silly Billies," their newest RKO Radio vehicle which is to be shown at the Wadesonian Theatre in Calera next Sunday. This the greatest picture of the famous Wheeler and Woolsey combination, has been selected by the Wadesonian as the beginning of a regular Sunday program for the future.

In "Silly Billies" the two comedy clowns tap a virgin field in using the picturesque covered wagon era as a setting for their riotous nonsense. In the roles of a pair of quack dentists they set forth to pull all the teeth in the wild and woolly West, and quite naturally they find themselves involved in trouble up to their necks.

They rent an office in a ghost-town; save a wagon train from an Indian attack; narrowly escape a lynching, drowning in a quicksand, burning at the stake, and other fates. These episodes come thick and fast throughout the plot, and have been deftly handled to maintain the laughter level of the film at a high point.

Petite Dorothy Lee, who has played the feminine lead in nearly all the famous mirthmakers' pictures, again supplies the love interest as a young schoolma'am on her way to California gold fields. Harry Woods and Ethan Laidlaw make a formidable pair of renegade heavies, and little Delmar Watson, Chief Thunderbird and Jim Thorpe, the noted Indian athlete, head the supporting cast, along with the largest group of ertra players ever to appear in a Wheeler and Woolsey picture.

Hundreds of Indians and cowboys participate in the wagon train scenes, and the redskin attack sequence offers plenty of real thrills as a contrast to the antics of the two funsters. Fred Guiol directed. Production credit goes to Lee Marcus.

The schedule of Sunday shows at the Wadesonian, Calera, is as follows: Matinee 1:30— 3:30 to 6; Sunday night, 8:45. Admission prices 10 and 15 cents.

The Telephone keeps you In Touch

A TELEPHONE of your own keeps you in touch with friends, relatives, stores, the job, and social affairs—that certainly is worth more than you pay for a telephone.

Then think of the countless trips, the thousands of steps the telephone saves.

The protection it affords is even more important. When something goes wrong, when you must get help quickly, then, too, you will appreciate the real value of telephone service.

A telephone does so much and costs so little that it doesn't pay to try to do without one.

Why not call or visit the telephone Business Office and find out how easily and inexpensively you can enjoy telephone service in your own home?

Uhlan's Chances Dim but Serious Effort Deserves Attention

NAPANOCH, N. Y.—Once the reporter put the proposition up to a fellow named Baer.

"That's easy," said the fellow named Baer. "I'll smash him to pieces." Again the reporter sought information from a man called Paulino. "I take. Okay. He no hurt me," said the man called Paulino.

Since subsequent events had proved that both gentlemen were more than a trifle mistaken the reporter had no confidence in the question now. Nevertheless, he decided to give it another workout.

"Max," he asked Schmeling, "how do you expect to beat Joe Louis?"

The tanned giant blinked those narrow eyes which peep out from under bushy eyebrows at the edge of a slanting forehead. Ordinarily he is quick on the pickup and fences with interviewers in English as easily as in German.

"We'll stay away from him. We won't let him hit us. We'll—," Max Machon, the former heavyweight champion's trainer, had rushed to the rescue.

"Sure, I know that," interrupted the reporter, "but you'll be on the other side of the ropes and a well-behaved beautifully tutored boy like Louis is not going to forget his manners to reach over and take a sock at you. Let's get down to cases. Max's going to be the lamb being led to—I mean he's going to be the guy in there on June 18. How's he going to be that—"

Thinks Movies Show Louis Can Be Hit

The narrow eyes no longer were blinking. The tanned giant was leaning forward eagerly. Ordinarily he is one of the coldest of men but he has a warming smile and now he turned it on. "That's right," he said. "I've seen the movies and I've seen him close up." He did not refer to Louis by name, indeed the Brown Bomber seldom is spoken of up here in Max Schmeling's training camp. "Certainly he can hit but he has to have something to hit, doesn't he? Well."

There was a moment overflowing with embarrassing silence.

"Well," admitted the reporter then, "it's a good gag if you can get away with it."

Having watched the German giant in several workouts since then, though, the reporter is not yet ready to agree that Schmeling can get away with it. Plainly he needs far more work before he will be ready for such an ambitious undertaking.

Max Schmeling

Judged solely on training exhibitions the Uhlan would by no means be a good bet to gain a decision over his Yankee stadium opponent. Working against Han Kohlhaas, Andy Wallace and such heavyweights of very minor importance, he seemed slow and easily hit. Moreover the punches that were conveyed by his own 14-ounce gloves lacked that authority they displayed several years ago.

Sparring Mates Are Guinea Pigs for Max

Nevertheless, it would be unfair to judge him solely from such a showing against partners. Such men usually are selected in the same manner that a surgeon picks out the best specimens in the guinea pig market. They are in camp for experimental, if not entirely scientific, purposes. If Max belted them out in one-two-three order each afternoon he would be achieving no more than has been done as well by numerous pugilists.

All that actually would be accomplished would be the ruination of three more guinea pigs. Similarly, it would get him nothing, save perhaps a few extra cheers from his loyal landsmen, who flock up here, if he devoted his time to the soft snap of outboxing his laboratory specimens. So he seems to be concentrating upon special assignments.

There is, for instance, the experiment being conducted in uppercuts. This blow is a new one for him, but in view of his short, thick-muscled forearms and the fact that Louis fights in a half crouch with his arms extended in front of him, might become a very effective one.

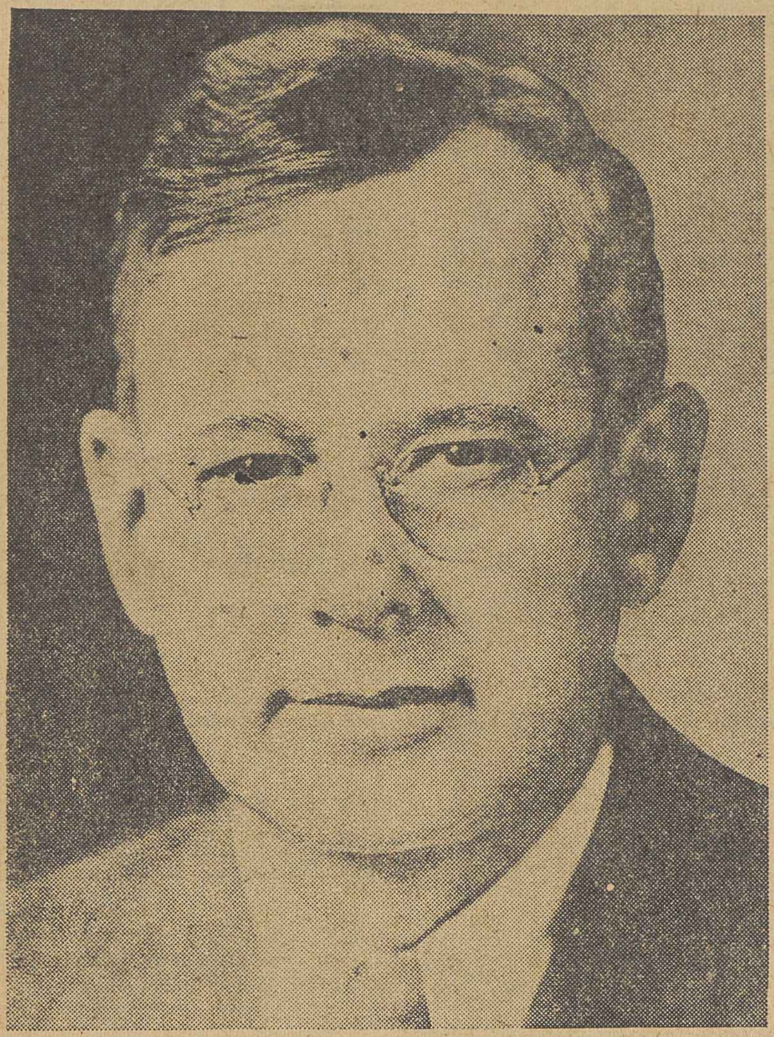
GOVERNOR ALF M. LANDON



Landon, Knox to Lead for G. O. P.

With Unprecedented Unanimity Republicans Pick Party Standard Bearers.

By WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

Cleveland, Ohio.—With a unanimity that was remarkable and very rare in American politics Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, and Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, were nominated by the Republican convention for President and Vice President.

But it was a unanimity that was arrived at only after several days of strenuous argument regarding both candidates and platform. An argument that was at times loud but never unfriendly. It was a result the new leaders of the party had hoped for. They expressed themselves as willing to talk it all out, regardless of how long it might take, until every delegate from every state was entirely satisfied. That result was evidently achieved. The platform was approved by the unanimous vote of the convention. Both candidates were nominated by a unanimous vote, and at the end had the support of every other distinguished son of the party who had been a contestant for the places on the ticket.

And the band played:

"Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here."

But if it were to be classed as a "gang," it was a new one. The white or bald heads of previous Republican conventions had given place to youth. The few silvered heads to be seen were following the procession, not leading it. Youth was the dominant feature of the Republican convention of 1936.

It was a serious-minded gathering of younger men and women. They were taking their politics seriously. Each one, or each group, knew the answers to the nation's problems, and right or wrong, they proposed to fight for their opinions. They were not taking orders. They recognized no boss. Each was there to do a job as he or she believed it should be done.

Such a condition—a condition I had never seen before in a third of a century of attending national political conventions—quite naturally produced an argument.

It involved the platform even more than who the candidates should be. The East and West did not see alike on many subjects. The corn belt differed with both the East and West. Delegates from each section saw the national problems as they applied to their section, and youth in politics had not yet learned the necessity of compromise. It resulted in emphatic, but not unfriendly, argument, and meant long hours for the resolutions committee.

Long Hours on the Platform.

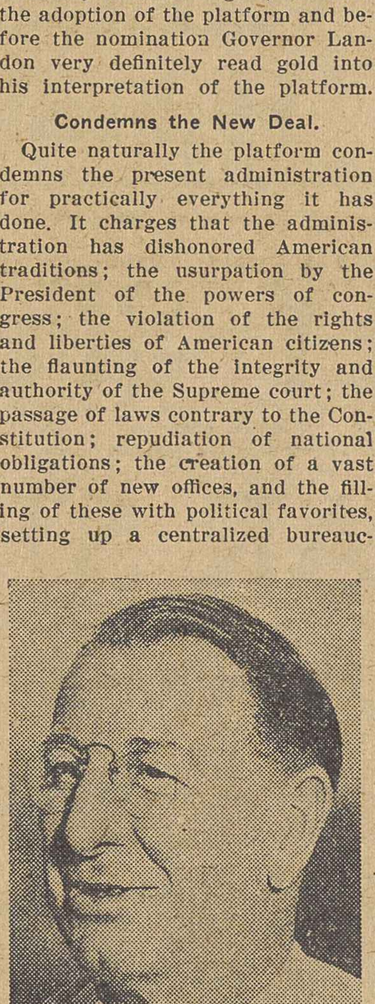
The convention was scheduled to open at eleven o'clock Tuesday morning, but the gavel of Chairman Fletcher did not call the great assemblage to order for an hour after that time. The first session was short, and consisted only of the appointment of the convention committees including those on credentials, rules, resolutions and permanent organization.

The resolutions committee went into session at once with the expectation of reporting a platform by Wednesday night. It was then that most of the argument began. All afternoon of Tuesday and well into the night individuals, organizations and factions were presenting platform planks—more than half a hundred altogether. Everybody who wished to present an idea was heard, and every idea had one or more proponents on the committee. Each member of the committee, it seemed, had ideas for one or more planks or for complete platforms. Through Tuesday night, through Wednesday, Wednesday night and all day Thursday the committee labored over what was to be the policies of the Republican party for 1936.

Senator Borah was especially insistent upon a number of points including money, foreign relations and monopoly. On the money question the committee, in the end, refrained from any mention of gold, but after the adoption of the platform and before the nomination Governor Landon very definitely read gold into his interpretation of the platform.

Condemns the New Deal.

Quite naturally the platform condemns the present administration for practically everything it has done. It charges that the administration has dishonored American traditions; the usurpation by the President of the powers of congress; the violation of the rights and liberties of American citizens; the flaunting of the integrity and authority of the Supreme court; the passage of laws contrary to the Constitution; repudiation of national obligations; the creation of a vast number of new offices, and the filling of these with political favorites, setting up a centralized bureaucracy; the making of secret tariff agreements that have flooded American markets with foreign products; it has appealed to passion and class prejudice, and many other things that are viewed with alarm.



COL. FRANK KNOX

Party Pledges.

The first pledge in the platform promises to maintain the American system of government; to preserve the American system of free enterprise, private competition and equality of opportunity.

On the subject of relief it proposes the return of responsibility to non-political local organizations, with federal grants to the states and territories so long as the need is urgent.

The platform condemns the present old age and unemployment insurance laws and promises to replace these with laws that are workable, and that will provide for all the adult population.

On the subject of agriculture the platform charges the New Deal with taking to itself the Republican principle of soil conservation and the retirement of sub-marginal lands, and approves of these things. It proposes to foster and protect the family type of farm, and to promote policies that will bring about an adjustment of agriculture to meet the needs of domestic and foreign markets. It proposes to facilitate production and increased consumption on a basis of abundance instead of scarcity, and proposes several definite means of doing that.

Other subjects covered in the platform relate to re-employment, labor, tariff, monopolies, civil service, government finance including a stopping of government waste and balance the budget, money and banking, and other things.

Hoover Gets Ovation.

The real highlights of the convention came on Wednesday and Thursday nights. On Wednesday night former President Herbert Hoover addressed the assembled multitude. Every seat was filled, every foot of standing space was occupied. The tremendous demonstration that greeted Mr. Hoover as he stepped to the front of the platform, a demonstration that neither Chairman Snell nor the former president could stop for more than 30 minutes, and another lasting for nearly an hour at the close of his address, thoroughly illustrated the place the former president has in the hearts of the Republicans of America. He delivered a terrific arraignment of the New Deal, and aroused his audience to a very high pitch of enthusiasm. He did not in any way indicate any preference as to the party candidate, or any desire to influence the deliberations of the convention.

On Thursday the convention met twice and immediately adjourned while awaiting the report of the resolutions committee. It was not until nine o'clock in the evening when that report was received, was read and immediately unanimously approved without a roll call.

The bombshell of the convention, and there is usually at least one, came just after the adoption of the platform, and with the introduction of John Hamilton who nominated Governor Landon. Mr. Hamilton had just received a telegram from Governor Landon, and he read it. In that telegram Governor Landon gave his interpretation of some of the planks of the platform. The platform makers, out of consideration for Senator Borah, had carefully refrained from any mention of gold in the money plank. Governor Landon said: "The convention advocates a sound currency . . . That, as I view it, is a currency expressed in terms of gold, and convertible into gold."

Any mention of gold was the one thing Senator Borah had strenuously opposed, and there it was definitely read into the platform if the convention nominated Governor Landon, and a few minutes later that is just what it did without a roll call and with one mighty and prolonged shout of approval. Governor Landon had done the thing the resolutions committee was afraid to do.

In the same telegram he gave his interpretation of other planks in the platform. If necessary, he proposed a constitutional amendment so the states might legislate for minimum wages and maximum hours for women. Another statement referred to the merit system in which he pledged himself, if elected, the inclusion of every position in the administrative service below the rank of assistant secretaries including the entire Post Office department.

Then came the nomination for President.

Board Bandwagon.

Through a week preceeding the opening of the convention the managers of the Landon, Knox, Borah, Vandenberg and Dickinson campaigns had been tireless in their solicitation of support for their candidates. There had been an effort made to combine the support of the various candidates against Landon, whose manager was claiming a nomination on the first ballot. On Thursday afternoon every candidate climbed into the Landon bandwagon, released their delegates, recommended that they vote for Governor Landon, and following the nominating speech of John Hamilton, the Landon manager, Senator Vandenberg, Senator Dickinson, Colonel Knox, each came to the platform to second the nomination of the governor of Kansas.

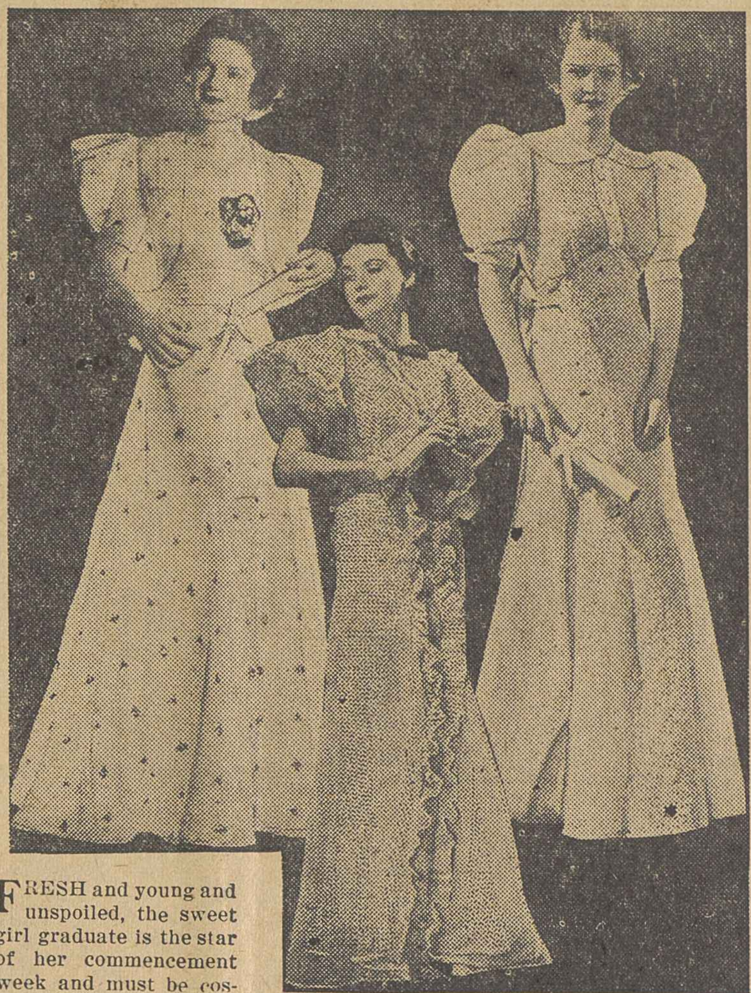
There was no roll call. Governor Landon was nominated by a shout that was heard throughout the nation. The Republican party was unanimous in its choice of a candidate for President of the United States.

With the exception of a selection of a Vice Presidential candidate the show was over in the early hours of Friday morning. While the delegates and the audience did not know it, the convention had adjourned to meet again at ten o'clock Friday. Shortly after that time a roll call of the states began for the naming of Vice Presidential candidates. As usual they were numerous, more because it gave delegates an opportunity to make a speech before the convention than because they represented any hope of a nomination. Michigan was strong for Senator Vandenberg, but the senator again announced, as he had done twice before, that he would not accept such a nomination, while at the same time expressing his determination to work for the success of the ticket. In the end, most of those named by enthusiastic supporters withdrew. There was one roll call, and on that call every state delegation cast its solid vote for Col. Frank Knox, a unanimous selection as had been that of Governor Landon.

Within a few minutes the entire show was over and the fight for the election of the ticket the Republicans had named was on. The decision will be next November.

For Graduation, Party and Prom

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



FRESH and young and unspoiled, the sweet girl graduate is the star of her commencement week and must be costumed daintily and lovely as can be for her part. She must also plan for the commencement parties. Being wise, as her diploma declares her to be, she will choose a graduation frock that will be appropriate for evening wear right through the summer.

Some of the most entrancing dual-purpose frocks are of Swiss organdie. Romantic, youthful and flattering, these sterling, exquisitely sheer cottons come in endless variety. Embroidered organdies are immensely popular this year. They are patterned in versatile fashion, ranging from flowing vine and floral motifs to demure bow-knot, also novelty dot effects. Eyelet and allover cutout embroidered patterns are delicately lacy and have an added crispness that is refreshing and cool for summer wear. Flecked Swiss organdies are fascinating, too, with chenille-like dots and geometric patterns applied in colors or white on solid grounds.

The new chic finished organdies are as sweet and dainty as the edelweiss flowers of their native land. These are so supple in finish they drape beautifully and have a soft but noticeable luster that is inherent in the material and comes back faithfully after each tubbing and pressing.

Miraculous, indeed, are the new crinkled and matelasse organdies that need only to be tubbed and then put on a hanger to dry to return to their original freshness. In solid color or in multi-color floral prints.

Graduating frocks this year are full length, with smoothly fitting skirt flaring from the knee. Because of the youth of their wearers and because the style interest is centered on the unusual fabric patterns, the frocks are always simple in line. Distinctive details are chic fly-away sleeves, always perky and crisp in organdie, a restrained use of demure ruffles, and as a rule, modest high necks.

The lovely models pictured have flaring skirts that will lilt blithely to the platform at the graduation exercises and appear later on at informal dances and dinners throughout the summer. Slim sheathes of taffeta make a sleek foundation with an elegant whisper of silk. Taffeta is also being used in a revival of the traditional sash with butterfly bow and long ends as instanced in the youthul frock of eyelet embroidered Swiss organdie to the right in the trio.

Just as the tradition of white for brides is no longer uniformly observed, pastel colors or touches of color on white have become as correct for graduation as all-white. Wherefore, the flower-like maiden pictured to the left will go tripping demurely up the aisle in a sprig-embroidered organdie. The brief bolero jacket has fly-away, pleated shoulder-widening sleeves to enhance its chic and its charm.

Of course you have fallen in love at first sight with the beguiling dress, centered in the picture. Everybody does. A discreet and artful use of ruffles adds to the quaint but very modish air of this summery frock which is fashioned of pin-dotted Swiss organdie. The red grosgrain ribbon tie at the throat and a red grosgrain belt match the color of the fabric dots.

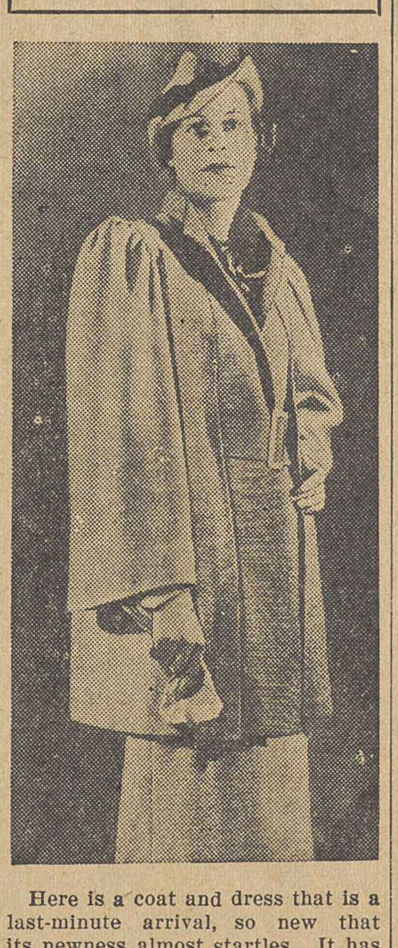
IT'S THE LATEST
By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Here is a coat and dress that is a last-minute arrival, so new that its newness almost startles. It has that modish broad shoulder line which is essential if you would be up and going in fashion. Great emphasis is given to color alliance in this model by Creed. The dress has a front of green, brown and red madras. The three-quarter length coat is made of beige and brown wool as is also the dress. The coat fastens with a wide chamois gray belt. The hat is gray felt.

Obi Sash

STRIKING BUTTONS ADD BRIGHT TOUCH

Many striking ideas are being developed in the button line. For sport blouses, a clever manufacturer uses numbers to replace ordinary buttons down the front. These, ranging from one to nine, are of plastic material, sometimes in bright color to form a contrasting effect against the blouse fabric or else in imitation ivory, tortoise shell or delicate, pale amber.

The signs of the Zodiac also have been a source of inspiration for button designers and have been used with great originality by leading dressmakers for summer afternoon or beach dresses. The Chinese inspiration has been responsible for one style showing Chinese script engraved over mother-of-pearl discs or plastic plaquettes in lacquer red.

Canine Heads Are Used to Trim Various Accessories

The feminine population of Paris has gone dog minded and canine heads trim everything from sports scarves and handkerchiefs to belt fastenings. Wire-haired terriers and Scotties remain popular favorites and their heads, in black and white composition material, make decorative belt buckles which match smaller editions used as buttons.

Pairs of wire-haired terriers and Scotties are suspended on leather chains from leather bracelets and are matched by fobs worn in the lapel of a spring sports suit. These fobs are made like dog leashes with the dogs attached to braided, colored leather chains.

Real Flower Fan

A lovely and unusual fan carried at an evening affair in Paris was made of living ferns and orchids set in a tortoise shell frame.

Beaded Necklaces

Beaded necklaces as wide as collars and taking the place of collars are increasing in importance and desirability.

STAR DUST

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

IT LOOKS more and more likely that Paramount and RKO will merge in the not-so-distant future, which will mean another of those upheavals that take place every so often in the motion picture business. It's rather like shuffling a pack of cards; the same men bob up over and over.

And, curiously enough, some of those men are not too competent. One of the big shots who gets important jobs, over and over, has consistently been a company wrecker. (Incidentally, he's not among the Paramount-RKO assortment!) Yet when one company lets him out, another one takes him on.

Olivia de Haviland, who has climbed to the top so rapidly since she appeared in "Midsummer Night's Dream," remarked the other day she had tied up her income in a trust fund, allowing herself only $250 a week, (wise girl!) and that, furthermore, she'd spend her spare time between pictures in her home town, Saratoga, Calif., because there's nothing like a small town where you know everybody to deflate your ego.

Olivia de Haviland

"Show Boat" may be pretty hard on your pocket book, because you're going to want to see it over and over again. Compared with the stage play and the screen version made years ago, it comes out on top. A hardened movie goer who had never liked Helen Morgan, a man who had seen her at night clubs and on the stage, capitulated when he heard her sing "My Bill." Another said he felt as if he'd never heard "Old Man River" till Paul Robeson sang it this time.

A new series of historical shorts is under way, and it's about time! Most of us remember what we see on the screen, so this ought to be the best possible method of teaching children history. The first one, "Song of the Nation," dramatizes the writing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and it's finished. Some of the other subjects are Lincoln's boyhood, the fall of the Alamo, the drawing up of the Declaration of Independence, the Louisiana Purchase and the duel between Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton.

Anna Sten, whose movie career went up like a skyrocket and came down like the rocket's stick, has returned from Europe, where she made a picture. No announcements yet about her making any more over here.

A lot of the movie stars of earlier days will be seen in the picture, "Hollywood Boulevard'; some of them have been slowly coming back to pictures, others have merely wanted to. Leatrice Joy had a test the other day. And one company has been dickering with Theda Bara, but she wants lots and lots of money.

Speaking of old-timers, Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., has just about decided not to make pictures any more; all the talk about "Marco Polo" has come to nothing. He admits that he's been away too long, that picture-making has progressed too rapidly for him.

Fred Astaire has finally got things fixed to suit him. From now on he'll make just two pictures a year. And Ginger Rogers (who's had some very smart new sandals named for her, incidentally,) will have a chance to go dramatic in some of the ones she makes without him. She insists that she doesn't want to be nothing but a dancer, and she's right. She should have a chance to show her other talents in acting and to develop them further in pictures.

Fred Astaire

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Harriet Hilliard will travel to California soon to play one of the leads in "Count Pete" . . . Ginger Rogers has written a song—"I Can't Understand Why You Can't Understand Me"; did both words and music . . . Sylvia Sidney's making a picture in England, and being urged to stay and make some more . . . Errol Flynn almost got deported because he forgot to renew his visa . . . Since James Cagney just won't make new pictures, his old ones are bobbing up again, and they're still good . . . Edna May Oliver is having a grand vacation, her first in a long time.

Sad Case of a Forgotten Man

The father of a college freshman received the following letter:

"Dear Dad:

"I flunked in history yesterday because the professor asked me: 'Who was Judas Iscariot?' and I did not know. We hadn't had anything about Judas in the course, and I asked him to put the question to the others in the class. Half the class said they never heard of Judas."

For three years he was intimately associated with the Leader whose triumph is celebrated at Easter, but in these triumphal exercises his name is never mentioned. He had a chance to be one of the immortals, and he lost the chance.—Bruce Barton in Cosmopolitan.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

HOME PROJECTS

Learning by doing has been a method used in teaching from the earliest days of education up to the most modern present-day methods. The school and the home must cooperate in the task of educating our youth if the desired goal of useful and worthwhile citizenship is attained.

Among the various opportunities by which the home may cooperate with the school is the home project program carried on by girls who enroll in vocational home economics classes. Each girl plans how she can best apply what she has learned at school to her own home situation, with the idea of contributing something toward making her home more convenient, healthful, and attractive. With the planning and carrying out of the jobs to be done, she has the advice of her home economics teacher and her mother.

During the school year she does three or more problems which require use of subjects studied in home economics. Records of time spent, work accomplished and conferences held enable her to evaluate more definitely the worth of the projects. The stories which follow are simple accounts of some things accomplished while doing home projects this year:

FOODS

I started this project while I was studying foods in class by planning menus for Saturday and Sunday dinners. While we were cooking in class I tried to use as many of the dishes we prepared in class as possible in my menus.

While planning my menus I had to take into consideration the food value needed. In other words, all the meals had to be considered as a unit.

There were some dishes that I had to prepare the night before. If they could be prepared the night before, such as pie crust or other pastries. I would leave them in the ice box until time to prepare the meal, which saved time. All this came into planning a work schedule.

After eight weeks of planning and preparing dinners I started on suppers. Every afternoon after school I prepared and served supper. I planned menus, served them, and also cleaned the kitchen and washed dishes. With my cooking came a good lesson in meal planning and housekeeping.

CLOTHING

I do not believe there is a single girl who can say "My wardrobe is complete. It needs no altering, no changes made, and nothing added to it." Unfortunately I could not say that, so I set to work because there was so much that could be done.

I made a list of the things I needed to do in order to accomplish the goal I had set up. The big word "inventory" was at the top of the list. I took an inventory of my wardrobe and I was surprised to find such an enormous amount of work to be done.

I found a dress that was too small for me and also had a spot on it that could not be removed. Collecting all the advice and knowledge I had gained from my instructor I decided I could rit the dress and stretch it while in the process of darkening the color, thus removing the spot.

I did a number of other things that helped mother as well as helping myself. I made two dresses for myself, a collar and cuff set, a blouse, let hems out of dresses, mended, washed and pressed my clothes, and did some dry cleaning. I also planned and selected my clothes for graduation.

HOME CARE OF THE SICK

A portion of our class work this semester was made up of studying health and home care of the sick. The knowledge I gained from this phase of our work became useful to me in completing this project that I took up while mother was recovering from an operation.

We did not have a trained nurse to care for mother so I had a good chance to use what I had learned in class and also complete one phase of my project work.

This was interesting as well as useful. It was a help to mother and also lightened the house work on my older sister.

Some of the things I accomplished were changing the bed with the patient in it, bathing the patient while in bed, arranging trays, and feeding the patient.

Mother was required to eat a certain amount of liver daily. She soon became tired of eating it prepared the same way every day, so with my teacher's assistance I got a number of ways to prepare liver to make it more appetizing. Mother enjoyed these.

There were numerous other things I did that have to be done by someone when there is a patient in the home. I gathered magazines for her to read, dressed her, polished and cleaned her nails, and made props for her bed. My teacher gave me a tray to place across her lap while she was eating in bed and when she first began to sit up.

One of the most desirable characteristics of this project is that there was little or no expense. The only real expense was the cost of the food I prepared for her.

STORY OF MY PROJECT
Home Economics I

At the beginning of my first year in home economics I considered my home situation before choosing a home project.

I live five miles from school in a mining town. There are five members of our family and I am the oldest child. Our home consists of six rooms: a living room, dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and a veritable "junk room."

I chose a bedroom project to try to convert this "junk room" into an attractive bedrom for myself, for up to this time I had roomed with my sister.

My first problem was to get rid of this "junk" which consisted of old clothes, fruit jars, and broken pieces of furniture.

I disposed of all that was useless and gave the old clothes to needy persons. My mother provided a place for the fruit jars. I then gave the room a thorough cleaning and left it to plan the details.

For a color scheme I chose rose, green and cream, green predominating. We had an extra bedstead which I cleaned and refinished by removing the old finish with sandpaper and painting it lettuce green. My father made for me a nice dressing table, clothes closet, and bedside table. These I also painted green.

My next step was to select cretonne and curtain off my dressing table and clothes closet. The cretonne has a background of cream with a rose flower and pale green leaves. Of course there is another color but it is not so predominant ts the three mentioned. For my curtains I selected a cherry marquisette which gave my room a cheerful, dainty atmosphere. Against the cream of the walls my curtains, cretonne and furniture give a very pleasing combination. My bedspread is rose.

For my accessories I chose a small bedside lamp, a mirror for my dressing table and small rag rugs.

My last step was to move in. This does not need any explaining, but no one will ever imagine my pleasure. To have the privacy of a room of your own is enough, but to know that you have fixed it to suit your own personality and for your own use doubles its value. Needless to say I am very much pleased with the results of my bed room project.

PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP
Home Project I

By taking home economics and having a home project I have learned to do the things I learned in school quicker and have acquired the habit of doing them.

I have learned to wash my face in hot water and mild soap without using a wash rag, and to rinse my face in cold water every morning. I have learned how to make my hands more attractive by manicuring my nails with light polish and keeping my nails long enough to look nice. I have learned that I should keep my clothes clean and pressed to look fresh and neat and also to keep my clothes mended. I learned how to mend at school. This has helped me to make my socks, hose and underwear last longer. I have learned how to store my clothes better and keep my dresser drawers with partitions in them.

I have observed more health habits and tried to improve my posture. After I finished my personal relationships project I found that I wanted to do more toward the care of my clothes.

I learned to press clothes correctly, improved my darning and patching, sew on fastenings correctly, washed clothes as they should be and other such things I also kept my clothes in my dresser drawers and closet.

The greatest benefit I got from this project was taking care of my socks and letting out hems in my dresses. By doing this I have a much neater looking appearance.

TO FORM HABITS OF CARING FOR MY ROOM
Home Project II

First, I planned what had to be done and when, such as sweeping, mopping, dusting, straightening dresser and airing and making bed. These were daily jobs. Mopping with a damp mop, washing mantle, changing bed linens and dresser scarfs were weekly jobs. Also included in the weekly work was cleaning the closet, rearranging books, putting fresh paper in the dresser drawers and straightening them. For occasional care I washed windows, washed all the furniture, and rearranged the furniture.

I think I have learned better how to care for the room and have formed the habit of caring for it which I would not have done if I had not had a home economics project.

CLOTHING CONSTRUCTION
Home Project III

After studying sewing in my home economics class I became so interested in what I made that I decided to see if I could do as well at home.

Since I had only completed a slip I began at home. I bought material and used the pattern. I placed the pattern on the material and cut it out just as it was supposed to be and had no trouble at all. The first one I made had to be tried several ways before I got it placed correctly. Some of the work I did on my first slip had to be taken out several times but I had to take out only a little basting on the side seam of the one I made at home. I found that I could baste almost twice as fast as I could when I first started learning how to sew. I did not have to use my tape measure as much either because I had learned how to judge distance with my eye. It didn't take nearly as long to make my second slip as my first and I am sure that my second was as good if not better than my first. I have enjoyed wearing the slips very much.

I liked sewing so much that after I made a slip I decided to make something different. I had noticed pictures of divided skirts and I wanted one.

I bought a pattern that fit exactly so I didn't have to alter it. After shrinking and pressing my material I placed my pattern carefully on it in order to save material. I studied the deltor and that helped me a lot. I thought it would take me a long time to make the divided skirt but I was so interested after I got started that I worked fast and it didn't take me long.

I found that I could sew without having to baste everything. I did this by using pins, being careful not to sew over them on the machine. The only thing I was slow with was the button holes. I had thought they would be real hard to make but I found them to be lots of fun. I placed my pattern so that I had enough cloth to make a halter which I think I will do later.

Coyotes Reported A Menace To Farmers

Montgomery, Ala., June 9.—The U. S. Bureau of Biological Survey is sending Carlyle Carr, one of its field men, into southeast Alabama to investigate reports that coyotes are making life miserable for planters in this section.

A. J. Williams, of Hurtsboro, in a letter to the State Conservation Department, estimated there are as many as 100 of these scavengers on his place in Russell County and Barbour and Macon are believed to be inhabited by the animals.

Several years ago some coyotes were planted in Barbour County and game authorities believe those reported recently may have been some of the original pack that found their way into neighboring districts.

The government has been very successful in trapping coyotes in the west and such steps may be found necessary in Alabama.

GOOD ADVICE

Take your bonus money and make a down payment on a home, or farm. Make your own terms to pay the balance. I have a nice nine-room house in Brent and a good farm in Montevallo, Alabama that I will sell at a bargain.

Student Conference Here July 8-9-10

REGISTRATION NOW BEING MADE FOR HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES

Registrations for the annual Student Career Conference at Alabama College July 8, 9 and 10 are now being made for the high school seniors who will attend and who are recommended by their principals, the enrollment at the session being limited to the upper section of the graduating classes in scholarships.

Mrs. Eudora Richardson, national field representative of the Business Women's Clubs, will deliver the main address.

The program will include comprehensive lectures by outstanding women on vocational opportunities and demands, group discussions of common career interests and problems led by specialists in a number of fields, opportunities to discover abilities and aptitudes through tests and individual conferences with psychologists and women in the professions, opportunities to read the latest vocational literature and periods for recreation.

The work of special instruction in vocations for women was expanded this year at the college through the addition in the spring of a conference designed for students on the campus. The third high school meeting of this kind will be held this summer. The first was led by Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, director of the Institute of Women's Professional Relations of Greensboro, North Carolina, and the second by Miss Helen M. Voorhess, of Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Massachusetts.

The faculty chairman of the Student Career Conference Committee is Dr. Hallie Farmer, who is receiving recommendations from the high school principals of the state and applications from the members of the senior class.

FISHING INDUSTRY OF ALABAMA REACHES HIGH POINT

Montgomery, Ala., June 25.—A table just received by the State Conservation Department from the U. S. Department of Fisheries shows that the fisheries industry of Alabama reached its highest pinacle, both from the standpoint of quantity and value, in 1928.

This table covers a period of 56 years, beginning with 1880 and continuing through 1934, and shows the rise and fall of the industry during that time.

In 1928 Alabama fisheries produced 14,466,000 pounds of fish which had a value of $587,000. The next highest poundage mark was established exactly 20 years earlier in 1908 when 10,665,000 pounds of fish had a value of $387,000.

The chart shows that monetary values increased rapidly thereafter, because in 1927 a total of 10,076,000 pounds of fish brought $437,000. Other big years were in 1902 when 9,351,000 pounds of fish were valued at $267,000; in 1929 when 9,025,000 pounds drew $410,000 and in 1934, the peak year for the depression, which produced 7,964,000 pounds with a value of $253,406.

Legion Post Elects Officers

The regular meeting of Hendrick-Hudson Post, American Legion, was held at the hut last Thursday night. The regular routine of business was transacted, after which the following officers for the coming year were elected: P. D. D. Pendleton, commander; R. P. Holcomb, adjutant; J. A. Harmon, first vice commander; W. M. Wyatt, second vice commander; F. H. Frost, finance officer; J. L. Appleton, chaplain; W. R. Adkins, historian; A. E. Baumgartner, sergeant at arms.

The following delegates were elected to the Alabama Department Convention at Huntsville July 19 to 21:

J. A. Harmon, C. Cabiness, H. W. James, S. R. Wooley, A. E. Baumgartner, P. D. D. Pendleton, L. D. Gilbert, J. Jenry, and P. N. Lee.

How Federal Relief Dollars Are Spent

REPORT OF OPERATIONS OF EMERGENCY RELIEF MEASURES

Birmingham, Ala., June 23.—The Federal Government has spent $41,186,516.73 in Alabama from the funds provided by the Emergency Relief appropriation act of 1935, according to the latest report of the United States Treasury, released through Judge John D. Petree, Director for the National Emergency Coucil for Alabama.

The expenditures listed are on the basis of checks actually issued through May 31, and do not include commitments for which checks have not yet been drawn. The expenditures in Alabama are divided as follows:

Agriculture, exclusive of public roads, $418,398.60; roads and grade crossing elimination under hte Bureau of Public Roads, $2,931,220; rivers and harbors, Corps of Engineers, $1,02,805; Emergency Conservation Work, $8,860.180.88; Federal Emergency Relief Administration $10,136,045.50; Public Works Administration, $1,585,250.80; Resettlement Administration, $2,637,098.05; Works Progress Administration, $12,762,254.68; and all other agencies, $1,753,261.71.

In connection with these expenditures, Judge Petree pointed out that they do not include the large amounts contributed by sponsors of various works projects. Judge Petree also explained that the last F. E. R. A. allotment to Alabama was August 31, 1935, the final grant to Alabama for direct Federal relief.

The operations of this Works Program have enabled the various agencies to employ a grand total of 42,211 persons taken from relief rolls, Judge Petree stated. This employment is divided as follows:

Works Progress Administration, 32,365; Public Works Administration, 1,494; State Highway Department (Bureau of Public Roads), 4,356; Forest Service, 105; Soil Conservation, 498; Land Utilization (Resettlement Administration), 1,454; War Department, 831; and all other Governmental agencies, 808.

In addition, the operations of the Works Program have necessitated the direct employment of a large number of skilled men not available from relief rolls.

Waterworks Projects Chief Among PWA Improvements In Alabama

Through the cooperation of the state and federal governments and hundreds of municipal officials, alert to the need and opportunity presented by the New Deal, more than 80,000 Alabamians have been benefitted by new waterworks and sewerage construction and major improvements to existing systems made possible through the PWA and WPA and carried out under the technical supervision of the Alabama State Department of Public Health.

Most of these projects have been carried out without the public notice given new highways and bridges and handsome public buildings, but they are of such value that their worth can not be measured in dollars and cents. Through their construction thousands of people have learned the convenience of running water and disposal of wastes, and—what is more important—the health of these same thousands has been more adequately safeguarded.

More than 17,000 people in 34 towns are being affected through the installation of waterworks, according to Dr. J. N. Baker, Alabama State Health Officer. None of these towns previously had waterworks, and a safe and adequate water supply is recognized as one of the most valuable assets a community may have, both from a health and from an economic standpoint.

In 18 of these towns new public water supply systems have been completed—Arab, Berry, Brookside, Calera, Childersburg, Falkville, Frisco City, Grove Hill, Guin, Hamilton, Hanceville, Heflin, Moundville, Red Bay, Springville, Sulligent, Thorsby and Vincent. Six other towns, Butler, Courtland, Lincoln, Warrior, Wedowee and Vernon, have waterworks in various stages of construction.

Additions to existing water supplies are proposed or under construction in 18 towns, representing a total population of over 26,000.

New water purification plants have been constructed at Camp Hill, Cullman, and Sylacauga, and one is proposed for Alabama College at Montevallo. Iron removal plants are under construction at Altoona, Carrollton and Millport.

The towns where additions, consisting of service mains, storage tanks, reservoirs and new deep wells, have been made include Aliceville, Castleberry, East Brewton, Fairhope, Stevenson, Hackleburg, Gordo, Uniontown and Union Springs. Numerous other supplies have undergone minor alterations and extensions.

New sewerage systems have been constructed in Andalusia, Carbon Hill, Fairhope, Guin, Irondale, Jackson and Sulligent. Systems are under construction at Alexander City, Pell City, Winfield, Vernon and Calera. These twelve towns will have sewerage service available to 22,846 people. Existing sewer systems are being extend-

Health Work Rapidly Spreading Over State's Sixty-seven Counties

Recognizing the importance of health to the progress and happiness of its people, the State of Alabama is carrying on an extensive health program in fifty-seven of its sixty-seven counties. This work is proving valuable in its every phase, demonstrated by its rapid spread over the state despite effects of the depression on the state's income.

It was back in 1914, in Walker County, that the first Alabama health unit was established, and incidentally, this was the second such organization in the entire United States. What can possibly be more important than the protection of the health of our people? It is a subject that in spite of higher learning and extensive scientific efforts there is still entirely too little consideration accorded.

But under the able leadership of Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer, this work has gradually found its place in almost every county's government. But there is much yet to be done; work in which every citizen can share to the advantage of all. At present, fifty-seven counties of the sixty-seven composing our state, have full-time health units, and no doubt within only a few more years the other ten will follow suit. It is hoped so, at least. It is the aim of the State Department of Public Health to be in the 100 per cent column at a very early date.

The personnel, minimum personnel, of fully-rounded county health units is composed of a health officer, nurse, secretary, and sanitation officer. Today, the work of the sanitation department is perhaps being stressed more than all other phases of health unit activities. The chief functions of a sanitation officer are first, education of the public in matters of sanitation relative to health. Under the heading of public education is taught the proper methods of excreta and sewerage disposal to control such diseases as hookworm, dysentary, and typhoid fever; how to have safe water supplies and the control of flies, rats and other vermin.

The sanitation officer has the responsibility of seeing that privies and septic tanks are installed in accordance with specifications approved by the State Health Department, and to lend assistance wherever and whenever it is needed. Another main function of this public servant is the enforcement of regulations governing food-handling establishments. This constitutes regular periodic inspections of these and other places to see that regulations set forth by the Department of Public Health relative to these matters are complied with.

Growth of the work is indicative of its importance, and the cooperation of every citizen of the state is being solicited to insure the greatest benefit.

TUBERCULOSIS SANITORIUM NEEDED GREATLY IN CENTRAL ALABAMA

There is great need for the location somewhere in Central Alabama of a hospital, or sanitorium, for the treatment and isolation of tuberculosis. For some time, this problem has been discussed by members of the staff of the Department of Public Health of Alabama, but so far, the accomplishment has been nothing more than to receive the endorsement of state officials.

Several months ago, a movement was begun to convert the Old Confederate Soldiers Home at Mountain Creek into such an institution, and Gov. Bibb Graves was said to have favored the movement, but for some reason the idea has apparently been dropped—and scores in this section will go on dying, victims of this dread disease.

The problem, it seems, is not that of securing the site for the hospital, nor even the erection of the building. This perhaps could be done by various means. But the paramount issue is funds for the maintenance of such an institution once it is established. However, there must be some means by which this can be done, and there are few more worthy projects toward which some of our leading citizens could lend their help.

An institution of this type could be made to serve at least a half dozen counties in the Central part of our state. During the past decade much has been learned about the control and cure of this once-most-dreaded malady, and it seems pathetic that the toll of lives annually from tuberculosis should be so high, just because scientific help is being withheld because of lack of money.

Dr. Lang Heads Writers Conclave

THE FIRST MAN TO SERVE AS PRESIDENT OF BODY IS RE-ELECTED

Dr. George Lang, of the University of Alabama, was re-elected president of the Alabama Writers Conclave at the close of its fourteenth annual session Friday. The constitution was amended to permit his re-election. He is the first man to serve in that office.

Miss Margaret Gillis, of Huntingdon College, Montgomery, was named vice-presiden; Miss Lelia May Smith, Birmingham, recording secretary; Conrad H. Ohme, Birmingham, treasurer; Mrs. Zebulon Judd, Auburn, historian; William Crawford Hinkle, LaFayette, parlimentarian; Dr. Frank Willis Barnett, chaplain; Esther Barrett Argo, Birmingham, program chairman.

The annual banquet was held Friday evening following the journalism session at which Ted Vanderveer, Pettersen Marzoni, Ralph Hurst, Henry H. Newman, Francis LeMay and Artmeus Calloway, all of Birmingham, spoke.

At the meetings Wednesday and Thursday evenings respectively, W. R. Wunsch of the Progressive Education faculty at the college this summer and Lucien Giddens, of the faculty here, were the speakers, with Mrs. Marie Bankhead Owen presiding.

Mrs. Jean Cameron Agnew presided at the Drama Festival Thursday which included music by H. D. LeBaron, of the faculty here; plays by the Judson Players and Colbert Little Theatre of Sheffield; and a play read by Maude Hardy Arnold. Esther Barrett Argo presided at the annual banquet, at which John C. Henley, Jr., of Birmingham spoke.. Annie Mae Hollingsworth presided at the tree dedication and Caroline Brandon Elliott at the book review section.

F.H.A Operations In Shelby County

Birmingham, June 22—Through operations of the Federal Housing Administration, 48 modernization notes totaling $17,150.81 had been insured in Shelby County through April 30, according to the latest report made to Judge John D. Petree, State Director of the National Emergency Council for Alabama.

In addition, there had been seven mortgages amounting to $19,400 accepted for insurance as of March 31st.

For the state as a whole, the report showed 8,528 modernization notes insured, amounting to $2,708,512.15; and 877 mortgages accepted for insurance, totaling $2,726,479.00.

The Federal Housing Administration was created to stimulate home repairs and modernization for the double purpose of creating employment and improving living conditions. In operation, the FHA insures local lending institutions against loss up to 20 per cent of the total loans of the institution.

FHA sponsors also a long term mortgage insurance program intended to lower interest rates, to bring about more uniform lending practices and to check disastrous declines in value of real estate in times of depression.

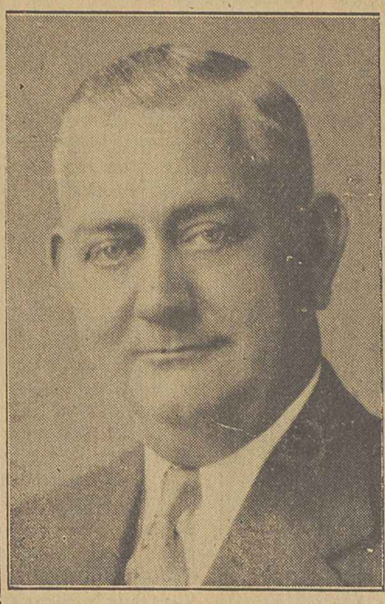
Appointed Postmaster



HON. R. A. REID

The Appointment of Hon. R. A. Reid as Postmaster at Montevallo, was confirmed by the United States Senate last Thursday. No official announcement has been made as to when he will assume the duties of the office. Mr. Reid has been Representative of Shelby County in the Alabama Legislature for the past two years, which position he will relinquish upon becoming a federal employe. The many friends of Mr. Reid, both at home and abroad, are delighted to know of his appointment.

Education Day To Be Observed

BAPTISTS SEEK TO PAY OFF BONDED DEBT ON HOWARD COLLEGE

Sunday, June 28, is Christian Education Sunday for all the churches in the Southern Baptist Convention. The churches of Alabama will make a special offering through the Sunday schools to pay off Howard College bonds for which the State Convention is responsible. Some years ago the Convention assumed responsibilitly for Howard College bonds to the amount of $85,000 in order to obtain a large donation for the college from the Rockefeller Foundation. This gift was secured and is being used by the college. All the bonds have been paid off except twenty-five thousand dollars. An effort is being made now to raise this amount during this month

To raise this amount now will mean that our State Convention will be $25,000 nearer out of debt. It will save over $16,000 in interest each year, which amount can be used for state missions. It will mean that the 8 per cent of the Co-operative Program money allocated to Howard College can be used by the college for current expenses rather than going to pay off bonds—giving the college $6,000 or more each year for running expenses. Therefore, it will be a great relief to both the State Board and to Howard College.

The faculty and employees of the college are giving $5,000 of the amount. The churches of the Birmingham District are attempting to raise another $5,000. Some large gifts have been made and others will be made. There must be many smaller gifts. What is your part? What will you do? All the Sunday School offering next Sunday will go for this cause. Let us make it just as large as we can.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The subject of the pastor at the eleven o'clock worship service next Sunday will be "Do We Want Peace?" This will be a continuation of the discussion of last Sunday, and everyone is urgently invited to attend the services.

Remember the Church School, which meets at 9:45 a.m., under the able leadership of Mr. W. J. Kennerly. Everyone is invited.

Baptist Church

All services will be held at the usual hours next Sunday. Dr. Pearson will preach at both morning and evening hours of worship. He is away this week meeting with a group of former college and seminary class mates. The group meets a week each year for study and fellowship. The meeting this years is with Dr. A. Hamilton Reid, pastor of the South Avondale Baptist Church, Birmingham.

De[illegible]ration Schools [illegible]ge

A SERIES OF PROGRA[illegible] SPECIAL INTEREST TO EDUCATORS

Visitors to the Demonstration Schools in Progressive Education at Alabama College this week may take advantage of a number of special programs, which opened on Monday with the explanation of the plan of the school by Dr. Alice V. Keliher, director. On the same afternoon, meetings were held in the classrooms, with members of the student committee of each class sumarizing and answering specific questions about the work.

Monday night Dr. Keliher conducted a Progressive Education Seminar, discussing units of work, methods and carrying through the subject matter and suitability of units of work for different ages.

Tuesday morning all staff members participated in the planning discussions and that afternoon Miss Mary Allen Tippett, teacher of industrial art, conudcted a special class for visitors only. During this latter period visitors will be able to handle art materials.

The Progressive Education seminar by Dr. Keliher was continued at 7 o'clock Tuesday night, and Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock the staff members held planning groups. Dr. Keliher spoke again Wednesday evening and Thursday morning for visitors. Planning groups were held Thursday morning at 11 o'clock and Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock the staff members will hold additional conferences with teachers when they may ask questions on the work.

W. D. Varnell, science teacher of the Tennessee Valley Authority School at Norris, Tennessee, will conduct the final seminar of the week Friday evening at 7:30. He will consider the place of nature study and science in the life of the child and the opportunities for both in the environment of the school.

The Demonstration Schools are being conducted on high schools and elementary school levels at Alabama College and coincide with the first term of summer school, June 11-July 22.

Fancher Child Died Last Thursday

Little Frank Miller Fancher, age 6 years, of Searls, Ala., died in the South Highland Hospital in Birmingham Thursday and was buried in Montevallo cemetery June 19. He is survived by his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Fancher, one sister, Mable, and two brothers, J. C. and Mack.

Mr. R. A. Reid spent several days last week in Washington, D. C.

Dr. and Mrs. L. M. Latham spent last week in Anniston with their daughter, Mrs. Charles Leyden and Mr. Leyden.

Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Fancher of Tarrant City are visiting their daughters, Mrs. Grady Carter, and Miss Beatrice Fancher.

Mrs. R. C. Tucker spent Monday in Birmingham.

Mrs. Zettie Fulford and children, Clifford and Alice Nell spent Wednesday in Birmingham.

Alabama Only State To Close Schools

Montgomery, June 22.—With the exception of one or two schools in Kansas, Alabama schools are apparently the only ones in the nation closing short of a normal term this year. This information was given Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, in a letter today from Howard A. Dawson, director of rural service for the National Education Association.

At the National Congress of Parents and Teachers held May 11 to 15 in Milwaukee, Mrs. Hill was the only state president reporting the wholesale closing of schools. To find out whether or not this was a true indication, the national office was asked for further information. Mr. Dawson's report shows Alabama to be the only state suffering wholesale closing.

Fifty-one counties in Alabama closed their schools this year short of a normal term with the average length being five and three-fourths months for elementary schools and seven and three-fourths for high schools. The normal term in Kansas is nine months.

Mr. Dawson's report is as follows: "I cannot say positively that Alabama is the only state having schools close short of a normal term because a complete study has not been made. However, with the exception of one or two schools in Kansas, Alabama schools are the only ones I have heard of closing. Undoubtedly Alabama has suffered far more in this respect than any other state."

Revised Guffey Coal Bill Is Passed—Republicans Map Campaign Strategy—England Abandons Anti-Italian Trade Sanctions.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

LAST minute passage of important legislation marked the closing sessions of congress before adjournment for the summer.

The house, by a vote of 161 to 90, passed the revised version of the Guffey bill to restore federal control of soft coal production, invalidated by the Supreme court. It passed the measure on to the senate.

Observers pointed out that this was the quickest repair job on a Supreme court decision that the New Deal has thus far achieved. The new bill eliminates provisions governing working hours and wages which the court held invalid.

It retains, however, two features which the court neither approved nor disapproved: 1—The granting to a national bituminous coal commission authority to fix prices and approve marketing agreements. 2—The imposition of a tax on the production of coal. The tax feature has been altered somewhat from the original bill. Instead of a flat 15 per cent tax on coal production, it calls for an outright excise levy of 1½ per cent on all soft coal, plus a 13½ per cent tax on coal in interstate commerce.

The house, likewise, adopted the two billion, 360 million dollar relief and deficiency bill. At the same time, it killed two other measures. One was for the appropriation of funds to complete the $150,000,000 Florida ship canal, which had been approved by the senate. The other was the anti-lobby bill sponsored by Senator Black of Alabama. As presented to the house it would have forced the registration of lobbyists, including those appearing before congress and before government departments. It would also have required information on contributions for lobbying purposes and payments made to lobbyists.

The senate by a vote of 42 to 24 passed the Wagner bill providing for a $460,000,000 program to encourage low cost housing construction. The bill would set up a federal housing authority to administer the act.

Sen. Fletcher

DEATH "in the harness" came to Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, dean of the senate, who had represented Florida in the upper house for the last quarter of a century. He died suddenly at his home in Washington. Senator Fletcher, a strong supporter of the Roosevelt administration although he was considered a conservative, was chairman of the banking and currency committee which bore the brunt of the task involved in the currency reform legislation and the banking act of 1935.

President Roosevelt, in a statement eulogizing the senator, said "the country has lost an able and conscientious servant in the death of Senator Fletcher." He declared the Floridian "was ever actuated by motives of high patriotism and unselfish devotion to the public welfare."

The death of Senator Fletcher followed closely the passing of Senator Park Trammel of Florida and the death of Speaker Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee.

Senator Fletcher was born in Sumter county, Georgia, January 6, 1859. He was graduated from Vanderbilt university in 1880 and began the practice of law in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1881. He was elected to the United States senate in 1908 and had been renominated and re-elected in each subsequent term.

While no movement had been undertaken to select his successor as chairman of the important banking and currency committee, it was felt in Washington circles that Senator Carter Glass, senate veteran, Virginia Democrat, wartime secretary of the treasury and staunch gold standard advocate, was in line for the post. Although a critic of some of President's policies, Senator Glass has never gone far off the reservation of party regularity.

SIX red-robed judges of Canada's Supreme court declared two of the Dominion's eight "social reform" laws unconstitutional, decided that two others were valid, one partly valid and returned tie verdicts on the other three.

The two major laws declared unconstitutional were the National Products Marketing Act, similar in some respects to the nullified American NRA and the Employment and Social Insurance Act, proposing a compulsory contributory employment insurance system. The laws were passed in 1934 and 1935 under the Conservative government then headed by Premier Bennett.

Declared valid were the Unfair Business Practices Act and the Farmers and Creditors Arrangement Act. The judges decided that the Dominion Trade and Industry Commission Act was partly valid. They reached a tie verdict on the Minimum Wages Act, the Limitation of Hours of Work Act and the Weekly Day of Rest in Industrial Undertakings Act.

John Hamilton

IN TOPEKA, Kan., Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican nominee for the Presidency, met Col. Frank Knox, Vice Presidential nominee, and Chairman John Hamilton and members of the executive committee of the Republican national committee to make plans for the coming campaign. Speaking itineraries for Governor Landon and Colonel Knox were discussed as well as other campaign strategy.

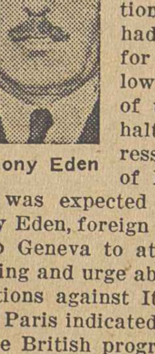
Youth is definitely represented in the reorganized personnel of the executive committee which will chart the Republican course. Hamilton, the new chairman, is forty-four. The youngest member, Robert P. Burroughs of Manchester, N. H., is thirty-six. Seven new members attended the meeting, including Burroughs; Representative Joseph W. Martin, Jr., North Attleboro, Mass.; J. Will. Taylor, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. Horace Sayre, Ardmore, Okla.; Mrs. John Wyeth, St. Joseph, Mo.; Ezra Whitla, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; and Earl Warren, Oakland, Calif. Members returned to the committee are: Charles D. Hilles, New York; Harrison E. Spangler, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; R. B. Creager, Brownsville, Texas; Mrs. Bertha Baur, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Paul Fitzsimmons, Newport, R. I.; Walter S. Hallahan, Charleston, W. Va.; and George Ball, Muncie, Ind.

In the reorganization of the committee, Hamilton traded posts with Henry P. Fletcher, who took over the job of counsel for the committee. C. B. Goodspeed of Chicago succeeded George F. Getz as treasurer. The other committee officers include four vice chairmen: Ralph E. Williams, Oregon; J. Henry Roraback, Connecticut; Mrs. John E. Hillman, Colorado; and Mrs. James Worthington, Pennsylvania.

DANGERS of civil war in China and an armed intervention by Japan were lessened somewhat by reports that Gen. Li Tsung-jen, military overlord of Kwangsi province, and his supporters had decided to yield to the superior strength of the Nanking central government, of which Chiang Kai-shek is the generalissimo. The rebellious chieftains of Kwangsi had been coupling their agitations against General Chiang with warlike demonstrations against the Japanese. Tokyo has demanded in no uncertain terms that the anti-Japanese activities throughout China be suppressed.

BONUS bonds and checks delivered to veterans of the World war throughout the United States spurred the tempo of business as buying was given a fresh impetus. Retail merchants, department stores, automobile companies and housing construction enterprises were expected to benefit most by the bonus payments.

The two billion, 643 million dollars required by the treasury to meet the bonus payments raised the nation's gross public debt to 34 billion, 331 million dollars, as the government's largest peace-time financial transaction was recorded on the statement of the treasury's position.



Anthony Eden

DEFINITE abandonment of Britain's trade sanctions against Italy and advocacy of their official removal by the League of Nations was decided upon by the British cabinet, under the presidency of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin. This action of the cabinet had been expected for some time, following the failure of the sanctions to halt Italy's progress in the conquest of Ethiopia.

It was expected that Capt. Anthony Eden, foreign secretary, would go to Geneva to attend the league meeting and urge abolition of league sanctions against Italy. Dispatches from Paris indicated French support of the British program.

The cabinet was also reported to have formulated a program regarding Germany and the reformation of the league which may call for continued pressure on Reichsfuehrer Hitler to use his power and influence to promote European peace. British statesmen believe that the Nazis are the keystone of the present situation.

President Roosevelt

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned to Washington from his tour through six western states and, though he was rather tired, he hoped to run up to New London, Conn., for the Yale-Harvard boat race. That depended on the congressional situation. He had to deal with the lawmakers who were all tangled up in the controversy over the tax bill, and also to complete his speech of acceptance to be delivered at Philadelphia on the twenty-seventh of June.

The final speech of Mr. Roosevelt's trip was delivered at Vincennes, Ind., where he dedicated the handsome memorial to George Rogers Clark. He paid eloquent tribute to that conqueror of the Northwest, and found occasion to appeal for support of his own program. Said he:

"In his (Clark's) day among the pioneers there were jumpers of land claims and those who sought to swindle their neighbors though they were poor in this world's goods and lived in sparsely settled communities. Today among our teeming millions there still are those who by dishonorable means seek to obtain the possessions of their unwary neighbors.

"Our modern civilization must constantly protect itself against moral defectives whose objectives are the same but whose methods are more subtle than their prototypes of a century and a half ago. We do not change our form of free government when we arm ourselves with new weapons against new devices of crime and cupidity."

In a series of rhetorical questions the President defended the AAA subsidies to farmers, soil conservation, reforestation, and preservation of wild life.

From Vincennes Mr. Roosevelt went to Hodgenville, Ky., for a brief visit to Lincoln's birthplace, and then his train carried him back to Washington.

A SEMI-ANNUAL checkup revealed that 10 debtor nations had notified the State department that they would default on their indebtedness to the United States. Included among these nations are: Great Britain, France, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Esthonia, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

Finland alone promised to pay. Belgium and Hungary had not yet replied to the State department's notice that an installment on their war debt was due.

While the present debt payment was being passed, in informed circles it is regarded that some basis of settlement will be sought by the European debtor nations in the near future. Increasing possibility of war in Europe, it is believed, will induce these nations to repair their credit situation in the United States.

J. B. Eastman

JUST as his office was about to expire, Joseph B. Eastman, federal co-ordinator of transportation, submitted a report in which he proposed a lot of reforms by which the railroads might win back the business they have lost to the truck and the automobile. Among his suggestions are lower fares, lighter weight, and speedier cars, use of busses and trucks by the railroads to meet competition and consolidation of terminals and other facilities.

He also advised the development of a nation-wide "container" service in the movement of freight by railway, highway and water, predicting that this would save millions of dollars in the handling of present freight and would create much new business. The containers are now used in a limited manner in some localities and industries.

Eastman recommended a "searching examination and thorough overhauling" of railroad pullman service, and a plan of operation under which the pullman company would own and operate the cars and railroads, leasing them and retaining the entire revenue from the sleeping and parlor car service.

IN A secret consistory Pope Pius XI raised to the rank of cardinal two of his old friends, Giovanni Mercati and Eugenio Tisserant. Twenty-seven cardinals were present at the ceremony, among them being Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia.

During the consistory the pope formally proclaimed appointments of three American and two Canadian bishops. They were Msgr. George L. Leech, bishop of Harrisburg, Pa.; Msgr. Hugh L. Lamb, auxiliary bishop to Cardinal Dougherty, Msgr. William Adrian, Nashville, Tenn.; Msgr. Francis Carrol, Calgary, Alta., and Msgr. Patrick Bray, St. John.

ONE of England's most distinguished and interesting authors and critics passed from the scene in the death of Gilbert Keith Chesterton, generally known as "G. K." He was sixty-two years old. Chesterton was converted to Catholicism in 1922 and thereafter much of his writing was devoted to his championship of that church. For many years his writings were very popular and in 1926 he established his own weekly magazine.

Gilbert K. Chesterton, dead at sixty-two, weighed more than two hundred and fifty pounds. As every doctor will surmise, he died of heart disease. His weight explains the unnecessarily early death. A pump breaks down if you overwork it; a sixty-two-year-old heart breaks down if you compel it to supply with blood—food, drink, oxygen—too many billions of cells.

Every cell in the body must have, from a laboring heart, its supply of food and oxygen, pumped every second.

The brain, alone, contains thirty thousand million separate cells, according to Doctor Carrel. In his 100 surplus pounds, Chesterton carried scores of billions of useless cells, each making an unnecessary demand on the heart.

Do not let yourself remain fat after forty if you would live to be old. To become thin and stay thin requires some effort of the will, often more disagreeable than dying.

At one of the ultra-radical workers' meetings in France, the red flag displayed and the communist "international" hymn sung, there was radical and determined talk. Monsieur Thorez told the meeting the factories of France would soon belong to the workers.

If the plan is sent through some workers would discover that it takes more than a red flag and a hymn to run a factory and make it pay; if factories did not pay there would be no pay rolls. Brains count as well as hands. The eyes carry no load, but they direct the feet and hands.

South China thought she wanted a war with Japan, and will probably have it. Troops from a Japanese naval squadron land at Amoy, Fukien province, accompanied by the usual convincing flock of airplanes.

War with Japan is the easiest thing to have, if you really want it.

In Canton, South China's big city, parades and mass meetings were organized to increase and express hatred of Japan.

The outpouring recalls Voltaire's description of a glass of English beer—"froth at the top, dregs at the bottom."

Russian sovietism came quickly, and might go quickly; signs of a breakdown are seen already. Those that do more and better work get special rewards; engineers, chemists, scientists occupy fine apartments compared with those of ordinary workmen. That is hardly "straight communism." Now Russia will have a constitution and house of parliament, important steps in the direction of conservatism.

Tell your little boy and girl to include in their prayers the following:

"And please, Lord, do not send us any more wars."

Uncle Sam recently began delivering hundreds of millions of bonus bond dollars to 3,518,000 veterans of the war—many veterans and a big bonus, for a war in which we were not concerned until foolishness pushed us in.

The French Premier Blum, first Jewish prime minister in French history, is a man of unusual ability, combining common sense with the radicalism of his Socialist party. Mr. Birchall writes to the New York Times that there is fear of anti-Semitic outbreaks in France; observers "see a ground-swell of an anti-Semitic movement in the vicious attacks of the right against the new Jewish premier." French anti-Semitism, according to Mr. Birchall, has survived the Dreyfus case, which should have ended it.

Our railroads find it hard to make money, but at least they are safe railroads.

W. Averell Harriman presented a gold safety medal from the fund established in memory of his father, E. H. Harriman, to F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central, which has not lost one life in 12 years.

It is interesting to learn from Mr. Ripley that the first Cunard steamship did not carry as many passengers as could be carried by one of the lifeboats on the Queen Mary. What is more important, each lifeboat has wireless apparatus.

Townsend Plan Flops

WASHINGTON.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend's fanciful dream for payment of pensions of $200 per month for everyone over sixty years of age seems to have gone up in smoke, but there are developments in connection with the California doctor's unworkable scheme that merit comment. The good doctor and his half-baked idea have been skidding rapidly since the house investigating committee showed up the plan as a befuddled idea and as I once predicted, the bubble burst in a big way.

While I am inclined to believe that Doctor Townsend was honest and sincere in proposing the $200 per month pension, it was the sort of thing that serves as an inducement for racketeers to gather. It was the old molasses barrel for the flies in the world of racketeers. It never had a chance to go anywhere and never will, because it was fundamentally unsound. We can dismiss it then except for the two phases which ought to be vigorously condemned by right-thinking people everywhere.

The two circumstances which I hear discussed most frequently are: The tragedy, the heartaches, that obviously follow in the wake of "movements" such as the Townsend plan that cannot succeed and that draw to themselves thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of persons who believe they are going to benefit; and secondly, it seems to me that the house committee, headed by Representative Bell, of Missouri, overplayed its hand with the result that it has brought upon house committees the same public disgust and distrust as characterizes 90 per cent of the senate investigations.

Each of these conditions is to be deplored. Each is definitely destructive. There can be no more excuse for some of the methods employed by the house committee in crucifying Doctor Townsend than for Doctor Townsend himself to wreck hearts and hopes and homes by pushing forward such a miserably impossible proposition as his $200 per month pension program.

The house committee had within its power opportunity to do a magnificent job in exposing the racketeering that became part and parcel of the Townsend plan. It had within its hands the capacity to educate millions within the United States against following such an illusion, such a mirage, as the Townsend plan. If it had confined itself to that work, Representative Bell and his committee should receive the plaudits of the nation. But the sad story is that the committee under Mr. Bell's guidance allowed itself to become an agency of prosecution, even persecution, rather than an unbiased investigating unit, determined only to obtain the truth.

* * *

Committee Errs

Since there never was any question that the Townsend nostrum would fall of its own weight eventually, it is difficult to understand why the committee resorted to the tactics it used. I watched some of those hearings. As the committee delved deeper into the activities of Doctor Townsend and his associates, it became infuriated. That was where it made its big mistake and it is going to be quite a long time before house committees again can have a reputation throughout the country of conducting unbiased and reasonable investigations.

Doctor Townsend was sufficiently "hard boiled" to justify the committee in making a vigorous investigation. He was sufficiently indifferent to their offers or hints of co-operation to warrant a feeling on the committee's part that they had to "bear down." Yet it must be said the committee went beyond all reason and I imagine that in the end it will flare back on the individuals.

Now, Doctor Townsend surely cannot blame anyone other than himself for the fact that he is faced with proceedings by the United States attorney. It will be remembered, of course, that Doctor Townsend deliberately walked out of the committee and refused to testify. That has always been held as contempt and congress has the right to punish for contempt. In this instance, the house of representatives elected to turn Doctor Townsend's case over to the United States attorney for punishment in court rather than to employ a house vote which might send the elderly dreamer to jail.

Further, the whole Townsend investigation has turned out to be something of a mess like the Townsend plan itself.

* * *

Second Type of Politics

Thus, there is every evidence of a second type of politics in this investigation. The evidence of politics lay in the fact that the house voted the inquiry largely because many of the individual house members were afraid, they were too cowardly, to take a definite stand in their home districts against the Townsendites. True they did not know how strong the Townsend movement was. So, as politicians always do, they dodged the issue and moved to expose it through the medium of a house investigation rather than fight individually to show how ridiculous, how unsound, the plan was.

Having set up the picture showing an utterly impossible program on the part of Doctor Townsend and his associates and followers, the house politicians were confronted suddenly by Doctor Townsend's arrogance in his refusal to testify. That presented a sudden change in the scenery. To explain the dangers in this new problem, it is only necessary to say that if the house had acted promptly by voting that Doctor Townsend was in contempt and must spend some time in jail, I expect the result would have been martyrdom for Doctor Townsend.

The house, therefore, has turned over the affair to the courts and the courts, being slow moving as they always are, will not get around to prosecution of the case until it is too late to have any influence on the election. So we can see readily that Doctor Townsend is left out in the cold. He can neither use the influence that is characteristic of martyrdom nor can he say that his skirts are clear. The house has left him hanging conveniently in mid-air and it was done solely for political reasons.

There may be some more hearings on the Townsend plan during the summer but the chances are that Representative Bell will not call the committee together again for some months. Practically, the case is closed. It has undoubtedly stopped to a large measure the drain that the Townsend organization was making on the unthinking, the aged and the destitute whose quarters, dimes and nickels have financed the thing thus far. While the committee did a good job by exposing the character of the scheme, I still am doubtful that it has brought to itself or to the house of representatives any fresh confidence in our governmental structure.

17-Year Locusts

The national capital, along with many other sections of the country, has been listening to the purring of hordes of "locusts." I use the word locusts in quotation marks because they are not really locusts. They are cicadas but to the most of us they are and will remain the seventeen-year locusts.

It is said that the first colonists in America, never before having met with the insects and believing that everything of God's creation was accounted for in the Bible, concluded they were locusts and the name has stuck. In any event, they appear in greatest numbers at seventeen-year intervals and 1936 seems to be a banner year.

Back in 1919, trees in many sections of the country were pierced by tiny saw-like instruments which the Department of Agriculture says are part of the equipment of the female cicadas. Billions of eggs were deposited under the soft bark. A month or two later, grubs emerged on the branches and dropped unnoticed to the earth.

Through the last several weeks these great beetle-like bugs with wings like isinglass have been humming and thrumming and leaving their empty shells attached to trees and grasses.

During that period, the males have spent their daylight hours singing. The Department of Agriculture is not quite sure why this singing has gone on because it has ascertained that all of the lady cicadas are quite deaf.

Perhaps I have devoted too much space to the story of the seventeen-year locust. Perhaps the seventeen-year locust is not important at all except to the robins and the starlings and the sparrows and the other birds which have had a feast in 1936 that almost no other bird now living has known. But I have a thought about these seventeen-year locusts, a train of thoughts, in fact. They lead to this:

What will conditions be in 1953, or seventeen years hence when those humans on earth will hear again the mating song of the locusts?

Will the policies and the principles initiated by Franklin D. Roosevelt and called "the New Deal" be firmly imbedded as American traditions or will they be cast out as impractical and forgotten? Will the changes in civilization be such that people will be willing to submit to regimentation, to have their government tell them what to do and how to do it, or will this nation be a nation of individuals who insist upon the rights and the privileges which the founders of our country believed to be just and right?

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

"Why do you say 'she?'" Pat had asked emotionally. "This wasn't a woman's crime."

Winslow had asserted, too; only a few hours ago: "that man." Curious.

And motive? Well, you couldn't deny that. If Kelly was threatening Judge Hambidge, and Pat knew it. There was no doubt that she did. "I've got something in my pocket," the Judge had quoted Kelly as shouting, and Pat had intervened promptly. All those weeks, before the decision was filed, she had writhed under the newspaper attacks on her father. Suppose she had known what was compelling that decision, and undertaken to remove the compulsion. "Silly!" Barry fumed at himself. "Fantastic! Peter isn't shielding anyone. He's talking sense, that's all, and he's the only one of the lot of us who does. I told him I'd suspected almost everyone in New York, and now it's Long Island. And the only girl in the world I ever gave a damn about. I'm the champion catch-as-catch-can moron of the United States and Canada!

The house of cards was a wreck now, and Barry turned to other self questionings. "That paper in Kelly's pocket—the threat over Luis. But it seems to have been the threat over Hambidge, also. What's the connection?

"None," he finally decided, interring that idea, too, and turning in bed, determined that he must sleep. "Something between Morano and Kelly, yes, but between Morano and Judge Hambidge—well, that's just beet-tops!" With that he fell asleep.

The telephone awakened him.

"Ten o'clock," the girl at the switchboard droned. "Call from Southampton?"

"Mr. Gilbert? This is the hospital at Southampton. Miss Hambidge asked me to tell you that Jacky Rogers has been hurt. We don't know how badly yet. His horse threw him. She'd like to know if you can come at once."

"Certainly."

"Miss Hambidge says, if you'll go straight to her house, she'll be there."

Fortunately, he got Evans at once, and they were on the Merrick road less than an hour later. "Never mind the red lights," Barry ordered. "Keep going."

But Evans was wary, beating the lights when it seemed safe to do so; stopping when it didn't, and pushing the car to its limit on stretches of unpoliced highway. Before two o'clock, Evans drew up in front of the Hambidges'. Pat was waiting.

"I've just this minute got back from the hospital," she declared. "Peg's still there, of course. But Jacky's arm's broken."

"Nothing worse?"

Pat shook her head.

"The whole thing's my fault," she said, tremulously. "Jacky's too young for a pony. Although I had one at his age. My mother was brought up in a little town called Warrenton, where babies rode before they could walk."

She took him into the drawing-room, where they were joined by her father, who seemed terribly broken.

"Poor kid," he kept saying. "And poor Peggy. With all her other worries."

Between them, they told Barry what had happened. A bit of paper had blown across the pony's eyes, and he had bolted, with Pat after him. She got hold of the bridle, but the frantic little animal had dragged her out of her saddle. Still she had clung, until, maddened, the pony had bucked, and thrown his small rider. Pat had let go then; not without visible and invisible casualties to skin and clothes.

"They're nothing," she insisted, "but, if that wretched beast had got away—"

She left the sentence unfinished.

"I think we'd all be better for a bite of something," the Judge suggested, and led the way into the dining room, where luncheon evidently had been ready for some time. Nobody ate much.

Pat's nerves were on edge, and Hambidge rambled on about the "poor kid," and this being "the last straw" for Peggy, and what were they going to do now, with the Ridders coming to Southampton.

And, suddenly, Pat said, "This is Wednesday."

Barry conceded the point.

"We agreed to tell the truth if Jack wasn't free Wednesday."

The Judge's muscles stiffened.

"What do you mean by the truth, Pat?"

"That you saw Kelly after Jack left him."

For answer, Hambidge turned squarely to Barry.

"You're pretty shrewd, Mr. Gilbert," he said, for the second time. "If you were the District Attorney, and heard what I told you here a few weeks ago, what would you ask?"

Barry replied, "I'd ask what was that paper in Kelly's pocket? What was in it to compel an honest man to write a crooked decision? I'd ask who else might have wanted that paper—and what became of it?"

Both Pat and her father were staring at Barry now, with wide, startled eyes in which lay something like terror.

The Judge cried, "We can't face that."

"We've got to face it," Pat said. "We've got to. There's a woman with a sick boy—"

"There's another woman too," the Judge interrupted. "A woman closer and dearer to me—" He checked himself, remembering suddenly that he and his daughter were not alone. Remembering, he turned back to Barry. "You know how I feel about all this," he pleaded. "I've said repeatedly that we must clear Ridder at any cost. But now you've put my fear into words. They can't convict this boy. What's the difference whether he's free tomorrow or two weeks from tomorrow? If there were any possibility of convicting an innocent man—any innocent man—I'd have no choice. But now—"

The telephone rang in the hall.

Pat said, "It's Peggy!"

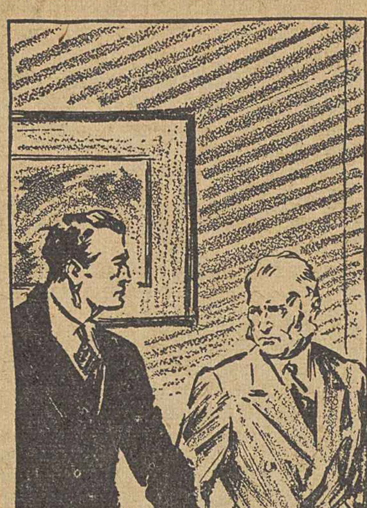
She had risen, and the Judge after her, when a servant appeared.

"Mr. Winslow on the wire," the servant announced. "Very important, sir."

The Judge went out, closing the door after him.

Pat excused herself. "I think I'd better go to my father."

Barry waited, alone, but his anxiety was great, too, and, at last, he parted the double doors and went into the drawing room.



For Answer, Hambidge Turned Squarely to Barry.

As he did so, he heard the Judge's voice.

Evidently, Hambidge had just hung up the phone, and was addressing his daughter.

"They've arrested Morano," he said. "For murdering Kelly. What are we going to do now?"

But the girl had seen Barry.

An instant later, she came into the room, very white and shaken.

Barry looked at her.

"Who killed Kelly?" he asked. "You know, don't you?"

But Pat did not answer him. Her hand closed over the back of a chair, and she swayed dizzily.

Barry caught her up in his arms.

"It's no use. We've got to have the truth. Who murdered Mike Kelly?"

His grip tightened on her shoulders.

"For God's sake—Pat—darling—was it you?"

"Who murdered Mike Kelly?"

The question was being asked him from every news-stand in New York.

Beneath it, in huge headlines, the Globe answered, and accused. In journalistic circles, that story is still referred to as "the big beat": "Who murdered Mike Kelly?" "Do the police know?" "Have they always known?" "And has this knowledge been pigeon-holed, while an innocent man was held for the crime, because the real murderer knew too much about Tammany Hall?"

The Globe replied to these queries in a series of denunciatory statements, libel-proofed by a discreet sprinkling of the usual "it is alleged" and "who is said to be."

"Luis Morano owned the house at 24 Jefferson street. He bought it in 1929, and lived there alone, with two colored servants, until 1931, when he purchased a stock farm near Morristown, N. J. The house remained vacant, and, last January, Morano sold it to the Progressive Realty company for $12,000.

"In March, when the Progressive company transferred most of Jefferson street to the city for a so-called boulevard, the value of the Morano property was set at $55,000.

"The Civic association alleged that the Progressive company was merely a stalking horse for Boss Kelly, and condemnation proceedings were instituted before Judge Curtis Hambidge, whose decision was filed only an hour after Kelly was found dead, his skull fractured by a blow from a heavy cut-glass decanter.

"On the day of the murder, a man, believed to be Morano, telephoned the Globe that he could and would establish Kelly's connection with the Progressive company. An appointment was made for 10:30 that night. The man did not appear.

"But at eight o'clock—two hours and a half earlier—Kelly went to the Cocoanut Bar. He is said to have had with him two henchmen, and a paper of some sort, with which he threatened Morano. Kelly alleged that an effort was made to pick his pocket of this document, but it was still in his possession when he left the Cocoanut Bar.

"When Kelly's body was found, the paper had vanished. All this is, and always has been known to the police. Kelly was killed between one and two o'clock in the morning.

"At one o'clock, Morano telephoned his attorney that he was hopping into his car to drive to Morristown. But the police know, and have always known that Morano's car was still in front of the Cocoanut Bar three hours later. They know, and have always known that a new traffic cop gave the chauffeur a summons at that time, and that the two men went into the Bar together to find Morano. He was not there, and the doorman said he had not been there since shortly after one o'clock.

"Where was Morano? The police know, or should know that he was the occupant of a taxicab that dashed out of Sixteenth street—where Kelly lived and was then lying dead—at two o'clock the morning of the murder. Half a block from Kelly's house, the taxi struck and killed a woman, Mrs. Theodore Jaxon, of 53 Washington square. The number of that taxi is, or should be known to the police. Its driver is, or should be known to the police. He is George Mundelein of 861 Cass street, the Bronx.

"Morano hired the cab at Sixteenth street and Sixth avenue, and told Mundelein to take him to the Cocoanut Bar. When the accident threatened to identify him, he changed his mind, and ordered the driver to 'keep on going.' He said then that he had to catch a 2:12 train at the Pennsylvania station.

"Whether or not Morano caught that train, he was not seen again until late the next evening, when he reappeared at the Cocoanut Bar with his right wrist heavily bandaged. Morano told the doorman he had sprained the wrist playing with one of the horses on his stock farm. But Morano was not anywhere near that farm the night of the Kelly murder, or the day following.

"Most of these facts are, or should be known to the police. Morano is still at liberty. No effort has been made to detain him as a material witness. For more than two months, another man has been locked in the Tombs, under indictment for this murder. If the police haven't known of Morano's connection with the case, they have been grossly and ciriminally negligent. If they have known, they have been grossly and criminally corrupt.

"In either event, the public awaits their next move."

A considerable part of that public waited in the Cocoanut Bar, or in front of it.

And, at seven o'clock that night, Morano was "still at liberty." The police hadn't arrested him—in spite of the Globe, and Winslow's message to Hambidge—nor manifested the least interest in his whereabouts. The first show at the Bar was beginning when Tim Laugherty arrived with "Big Bill" Devine.

Both were in plain clothes, and attracted no attention.

"Where's the boss?" Tim asked one of the head waiters.

"Upstairs—on the balcony. He's having his dinner."

He was.

Whether Morano counted too much on his pull, or whether he realized the impossibility of escape, no one ever knew. The platinum blonde had urged him to clear out. "What for?" he asked.

"Then he said, 'Even in America, you can't get away with murder forever—not forever, you can't,'" she testified later.

"'I'm tired of the whole business,' he said. 'We might as well have it over.'"

What Morano meant by that was soon evident.

"He'd been drinkin' all afternoon," the platinum blonde testified. "First time I'd ever seen him squiffy."

It was buyers' night at the Cocoanut Bar. The street-floor was so crowded that the detectives had trouble reaching the stairs.

From what Morano called "the mezzanine," operators revolving multi-hued gelatine wheels in front of spot-lights, and gentlemen in paper caps emptied cornucopias. The din was incredible, and the air full of smoke, and confetti, and bright-colored streamers.

Tim walked into Morano's little dining room.

"Hello, Luis! They want to talk to you at headquarters," Tim said.

Luis refilled his glass.

Directly beneath him, 20 brazen voices were bawling a chorus:

"Let me be—
That's all I'm askin' you.
Can't you see?
That's all I'm askin' you.
Take your hand from off'n my hips.
Take your mouth away from my lips.
Let me be,
That's what I'm tellin' you—"

"I guess you better come along, Luis."

Morano rose.

"I'm not going," he said.

"No?"

"No."

"Because why?"

"Because I don't like your boarding house. I don't like that easy chair you got waiting for me. If you're gonna croak me, you might as well do it right here."

"Nobody don't want to croak you," Tim argued. "What's the use making trouble, Luis?"

For answer, Morano gave him the contents of the glass of champagne in the eyes.

"Big Bill" Devine seized Morano's right arm.

Only for an instant, however. As Luis came forward, "Big Bill" caught him straight on the chin. It was a terrific blow. It sent Morano spinning against his own chair, and then, over that, through the flimsy railing, and down among the dancers, 15 feet below.

"Let me be—that's all I'm askin' you," came voices, bawling the chorus.

And then a babel of voices.

Screams, cries, shouts for help.

The band was still playing when a "bouncer" lifted the boss' shoulders. He was bleeding at the mouth, and stone dead.

CHAPTER XI

"WHO murdered Mike Kelly? . . . Pat—darling—was it you?"

The Globe had answered the question, but, in Southampton, Barry Gilbert held this girl-of-all-girls in his arms, and asked it again.

For a moment, she stared at him, dazed and inert, and then she pushed him away.

"Let me sit down, please," she said, coldly.

She remained standing, however, when Barry released her, though she still clung to the chair at which she had stopped when she came into the room. "Do you really think I could kill anyone?" she asked, with just a trace of amusement tempering the wonder and resentment in her tone. "But, of course, I know why you think it. My father said he couldn't tell the truth because of a woman. The woman was my dead mother."

"I'm sorry—" Barry began.

"It doesn't matter," the girl interrupted. "Nothing much matters now. Peter says this evening's Globe completely clears young Ridder, and that they'll probably release him tomorrow. That's all you want, isn't it? And, if you don't mind, I'll go upstairs to my father. He's really ill."

She had closed the door to the hall after her and Barry opened it.

"Can I do anything?" he asked lamely.

"No, I don't think anybody can," Pat answered. "Nothing father or I could say now would help Morano, or anybody. Is Evans outside?"

"Yes."

"Then, of course, you'll see Peggy. Her worries are over. Please tell her how glad I am, and that I'll phone later about Jacky."

They were in the hall by this time and the butler appeared on the landing.

"Will you come to your father, Miss?" he said, quietly.

"I'm coming," Pat replied, just as quietly and, without looking at Barry again turned and ran up the stairs.

Well, that was over—along with everything else. "I made a clean sweep while I was at it," Barry told himself, ruefully, on his way to the hospital. "What did I have to shoot off my mouth for, just at the last minute? 'My dead mother.' Three words, and my whole train of suspicion went off the rails."

Pure Copper Pink Color

Pure copper is not exactly copper colored, but rather a silvery pink. The coppery shade is the result of the partial obscuring of this natural color by a thin coating of the darker colored copper oxide. But the colors shown by gold and some of its alloys, writes Dr. Thomas M. Beck, in the Chicago Tribune, are not due to any such oxide film, since gold is exceedingly reluctant to combine with oxygen. Rather they are due to the actual color of the metal.

Time for Seeding Summer Pastures

Sudan Grass, Mixture, Will Provide Feed During the Critical Months.

By DR. HOWARD B. SPRAGUE, Agronomist, New Jersey Experiment Station.—WNU Service.

There is still ample time for seeding temporary pasture crops to provide additional feed during the critical summer months. The planting of Sudan grass, or a mixture of Sudan grass and soy beans will insure sufficient feed to keep cows in production without the use of expensive barn feeds.

According to the Bureau of Dairy Industry, approximately 15 pounds of fresh grass daily is required to completely satisfy a cow producing 35 pounds of milk. Since permanent pastures are usually short in midsummer, it is necessary to provide additional pasturage during this period. Even the best permanent pasture will produce only half as much feed as during the most favorable periods. Sudan grass which has reached a height of eight to ten inches, or a mixture of Sudan grass and soy beans, adequately fill the need for increased pasturage in midsummer.

Sudan grass seeded alone should be planted at approximately 30 pounds per acre. The mixture of Sudan grass and soy beans may be seeded at the rate of 15 to 20 pounds of Sudan and 30 to 40 pounds of soy beans. This mixture is higher in protein and somewhat better feed than Sudan grass alone. However, straight Sudan grass is excellent pastures, as many farmers who have tried the crop will testify. Both crops will be favored by the use of lime, if the soil is strongly acid, and the application of 300 or 400 pounds of a complete fertilizer per acre. Sudan grass and soy beans may both be planted with a grain drill, although care should be taken to prevent planting too deeply. Seeding soon after a rain on a well prepared seed bed is ideal.

The amount of pasture needed will depend on the number of cows, approximately one acre for every four cows usually being adequate. If the crop is not needed for pasture, it may be cut for hay. Sudan grass is superior to other summer crops in ability to make new growth after it has once been grazed down.

Peach Fuzz Slows Attack of Bothersome Brown-Rot

Rubbing the fuzz off a peach makes it more attractive and more pleasant to eat, but it also makes it easier for the organisms which cause brown-rot to enter through the broken hair sockets and start decay, according to tests by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Elberta peaches, placed in a damp chamber containing the spores that cause brown-rot, became infected about twice as quickly when the protective hairs had been broken by brushing. Minimum time for infection of the brushed peaches was four and a half hours; for the unbrushed, eight hours.

At large packing centers attachments on brushing machines spray a fine sulphur dust over the peaches to protect them in transit to market against brown-rot infection. In orchards the disease is controlled by spraying or dusting the trees during the growing season and just prior to harvest.

Sows Need Minerals

The brood sows need vitamins and minerals as well as sufficient nutrients to farrow strong healthy litters, says a writer in the Rural New-Yorker. Alfalfa hay in racks will provide plenty of vitamins A and D as well as considerable calcium and phosphorus for needed growth and development. Water and salt must also be provided at all times. A mixture of equal parts corn and oats with 10 pounds of fish-meal added to each 90 pounds of grain makes a good brood sow ration. Gilts will keep in good condition and keep growing on about 1½ pounds of this, fed per 100 pounds live weight.

Value of Manure

Nitrogen represents 70 per cent of the worth of manure. Moist, packed manure undergoes the same fermentation as occurs in silos. Acetic, butyric and carbonic acids are produced. The acids combine with the ammonia and prevent nitrogen loss as long as manure is moist. Manure hauled in drying weather loses the volatile acids by excessive drying. The ammonia goes also. Stored manure should be hauled and spread in cool moist weather, or worked into soil soon after spreading.

Rocks as a Crop

The fad for rock gardens is enabling farmers who have rock deposits on their places to make "side money" harvesting this "crop" for sale to city gardeners, according to landscaping experts. The demand in some parts of the country is said to be so large that owners of home quarries are realizing quite an income from this source. There are a number of deposits of stone that afford material of color, texture and shape for advantageous use in rock gardening.

Quarries Beneath Paris May Provide Air-Raid Shelters

Half of City Underlain by Artificial Caverns

PARIS. — War-raid shelters for the population of Paris might be made out of the vast honeycomb of old underground quarries that underlie the city, suggests Prof. Pierre Devaux of the Ecole Polytechnique.

Very few people, even among Parisians, know anything about these old quarries, Professor Devaux states. Yet to a large extent Paris owes its very existence to them, for much of the limestone used in the city's buildings, and vast quantities of gypsum also, have been obtained from them. The name "plaster of Paris" is true in a very literal sense; the original material was made and used in Paris, out of gypsum dug from underneath Paris.

Far-Reaching System.

There is a public Quarries commission in Paris, that has charge of these far-ramifying artificial caverns. Their maps, though admittedly incomplete, show that perhaps half of the heart of the city, on both banks of the Seine, is underlain by abandoned quarries. In some of them are the famous catacombs of Paris, containing millions of skeletons.

Professor Devaux does not propose that the living should take refuge among the dead. He rules out catacombs, in his proposed scheme of shelters. He also considers the old gypsum quarries unsuitable, because of the frequent rock falls from their roofs. But the tunnels and rooms of the limestone quarries he considers safe.

Extensive Project.

Much work and expense would be necessary to make the old caverns safe. Many new entrances would have to be dug, for the old entrances are far too few in number, and too inconveniently located, to enable thousands of people to get underground in the few minutes allowed by an air-raid warning.

Ventilating systems would have to be provided, and means for preventing the infiltration of poison gases. There would also have to be large installations of water reservoirs, toilet facilities, and other necessities for large-scale temporary occupancy. But Professor Devaux considers his scheme practicable, if undertaken in time.

Discovery of New Lung Function Solves Old Human Blood Puzzle

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA. —Studies which clear up a 50-year-old puzzle about human blood were reported by Dr. William H. Howell, emeritus professor of physiology in the Johns Hopkins university, at the meeting here of the National Academy of Sciences.

The puzzle was to find where the platelets of the blood are formed. These platelets are little flattened discs which are important because one of their functions is to make blood clot after it has been shed.

New Discovery.

This is an entirely new idea. Although the platelets were discovered more than 50 years ago and there have been all kinds of theories as to their origin, function and fate, no one has ever thought these important platelets were formed in the marrow of bones where the red blood cells and many of the white blood cells are made. The generally accepted view, proposed by Wright, is that they are produced in the marrow from a species of giant cell, to which Doctor Howell, many years ago, gave the name megacaryocyte.

Midget Camera Films Vocal Cords in Action

VIENNA.—A motion picture camera so small and compact that it can be pushed into the larynx, to take films of the vocal cords in action, has been invented by two Viennese scientists, Dr. Kamillo Wiethe, a physician, and Dr. Franz Gerhard Back, an engineer. It is expected to be useful in at least three ways: to study the mechanics of the voice, particularly in famous singers; to investigate the physiology of the production of the various vowel sounds; and as an aid in the diagnosis of throat diseases, particularly those with a nervous involvement.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; backache; headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

PUBLISHED ON THURSDAY

W. M. WYATT, Publisher

Subscription - - - - - $1.00

Published weekly in the Masonic Building on Main Street. "Entered as second-class matter, April 1, 1933, at the Post Office at Montevallo, Ala., under the Act of Congress, March 3, 1879."

Mrs. Robert M. Potts of Brierfield was a visitor at The Times office last Saturday, paying her subscription for another year. The editor appreciates the complimentary things Mrs. Potts said expressing her pleasure in reading the paper each week. She has been one of the subscribers to the paper since it first started. Mrs. Potts mentioned the interest she finds in reading the advertisements each week and said she wished more of the stores would print their prices regularly.

Rev. William W. Scott, graduate of Birmingham-Southern College at the recent commencement, left this week for Emory University where he expects to continue his studies in the Candler School of Theology. Mr. Scott is a young man of unusual ability as a preacher and has a strong, pleasing personality. We wish for him the highest success.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

BOB REID, POSTMASTER

The appointment of Representative Bob Reid as postmaster of Montevallo will be greeted with hearty approval by the citizenship of the town and community.

While there were several good, competent and popular persons seeking the place, it was naturally realized that but one of them could have it. Now since Mr. Reid is the one designated, it is altogether proper to say that there was not one on the list that could surpass him in general fitness and qualifications for the important

That Bob Reid will make a good public servant as postmaster will be readily admitted by everyone who knows him; and he is known, even by his abbreviated monicker, "Bob", to everybody in this part of the country.

We congratulate Mr. Reid upon his appointment. We also congratulate the patrons of the Montevallo postoffice upon the fine service we may expect from our future postmaster.

AN ORCHID TO MRS. JETER

vallo P. T. A., an office she held

As first president of the Monte- three terms, Mrs. Jeter was instrumental in furnishing much of the playground equipment which provides recreation for Montevallo school children.

She is a member of and has served as president of the Wednesday Afternoon Club and the Baptist Women's Missionary Society, and for years was city chairman for the National Better Homes movement.

Mrs. Jeter is a charter member of Montevallo American Legion Auxiliary, having served two years as secretary-treasurer and four years as unit president. For several years she has been a member of the executive board of the Alabama Legion Auxiliary, and for the last two years has been director for the Fourth District, having been elected twice as delegate to the national convention.

Other activities in which Mrs. Jeter has taken a leading role include the program of the Alabama Anti - Tuberculosis Association, of which she is a member of the board of directors, and the annual roll call of the Red Cross.—Birmingham News.

TWO LEGISLATIVE VACANCIES LOOM

Two vacancies loom in the Alabama Legislature with the appointment of Representative R. A. Reid, of Shelby County, as postmaster at Montevallo.

Representative Reid's appointment was confirmed by the Senate last week while he was in Washington, but he has not yet taken office and does not know exactly when he will. His resignation from the legislature will be in order, of course, when he assumes the federal office.

The other vacancy will be in Marengo County when Representative Clint Harrison resigns to become a member of the Alabama Public Service Commission about July 1.

If the legislature meets before the general elections in November, it will be necessary for special elections to be called to fill these vacancies, with interest centering on whether the successors will be favorable to an administration revenue program or against tax increases.—Birmingham News.

ALABAMA SCHOOL FACTS

Do you know that Alabama has not collected enough revenue to run the schools without federal aid since 1930-31?

Do you know the Miller administration never collected enough revenue to run the schools?

Do you know the colleges are receiving from the state $702,745 this year, as compared to $3,346,328 in 1929-1930.

Do you know the State Department of Education has had its appropriations cut more than half since 1929-30?

Do you know all of the money spent by the State Department last year would have run the schools less than one day?

Do you know that the money asked by the schools for the past year is a million less than they spent in 1929-30?

Do you know Alabama spends 71 cents of each school dollar for teacher salaries, while the average for the nations in only 60 cents?

Do you know that only 2 cents of each Alabama school dollar goes for administration?

Do you know that three-fourths of the state funds are earmarked for special uses?

Do you know the highway fund, the largest in Montgomery, is completely earmarked?

Do you know five-sixths of the money education received from the state last year came from earmarked funds?

Do you know increasing earmarked funds for education by 50 per cent would solve the school problem?

Do you know complete earmarking of school taxes will take the schools out of politics and guarantee taxpayers that the money will go for schools?

Do you know that under the present system the schools carry 92 per cent of the state deficit, which last year amounted to four and a half million?

State Capitol News

Elmer N. Arant, dimunitive power company official of Ft. Deposit, who shot and killed his neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Norman last August because he suspected Norman of improper relations with his wife, paid the full penalty of the law last Friday morning in the Kilby Prison electric chair.

Before a group of newspapermen and relatives of his victims, Arant was ushered into the death chamber with an inaudible prayer on his lips which continued without interruption until the switch was thrown, sending 2,200 volts of electricity through his pale, frail body.

He was pronounced dead less than 10 minutes after he was seated in the crude, yellow death chair.

The execution of Arant marked the end of a desperate fight for clemency by his attorney, Calvin Poole, of Greenville, and his sister, Mrs. Renna Arant Rose, of Greenville, North Carolina. The Alabame Supreme Court denied a last minute petition for stay of sentence early Thursday after Gov. Bibb Graves, in a lengthy formal decision refused to interfere with the death sentence imposed by a Lowndes county trial jury and affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Shortly after Arant was pronounced dead, Walter Miller, Madison county negro who attacked and killed Vivian Woodfard, 19-year old Huntsville girl, went to his death in the same chair. The girl's father, C. C. Woodward, looked on impassively.

Montgomery county citizens last week placed an additional one mill tax on their property and re-voted the existing 3 mill tax to assure full school terms in future years.

Both propositions carried by substantial majorities at the polls, despite the fact that one or both questions were defeated at several boxes. Unofficial returns showed the 3-mill tax re-voted by 2,833 to 1,108, and the one mill levy carried by 2,880 to 1,412.

The judicial branch of the Circuit Courts in Alabama, as well as the other branches, will remain open for business all the year in compliance with the provisions of a new law enacted at the last special session of the State Legislature.

The new law provides the courts of the counties in Alabama shall be open for the transaction of judicial proceedings of every kind at all times. The act was approved by Governor Graves on March 28.

Orders for free text books to be distributed to second grade pupils of Alabama's public schools will be placed immediately, according to announcement by Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education

Purchase of the second grade books will mark the second step in plans to provide free text books to children of the first three grades in accordance with an administration bill passed by the 1936 Legislature. An appropriation of $125,000 is provided for the purpose

Dr. Keller said the free text books bill was "one of the greatest things ever done for the school children of Alabama." Books for first grade children were purchased last year with an appropriation of $175,000.

"The plan was a boon, especially to children of unemployed families," Dr. Keller said. "Thousands of children in the State had gone to school for two or three years without the aid of books, or had only one or two. Superintendents reported much better work among the small children, and the books were returned in excellent condition."

The first grade books used during the past year will be distributed among new first graders next Fall and the new books will be given to second grade students. Dr. Keller said reports from various county superintendents were that only a few books were lost or damaged.

Orders for second grade books will be placed immediately so they may be delivered by the cpening of school in September.

Vocational Home Economics

The old saying that one never grows too old to learn is being proved in many phases of our educational system today. In spite of the affect that the greatest emphasis is placed on youth as the learning period of life, those who are now adults need not feel that the learning period is over for them. Those people who have had limited or no training in their youth have various opportunities whereby they may make up for their loss. Those who have had educational opportunities soon find themselves behind the times unless they constantly brush up on what is new. It is such groups who compose the membership of the clubs for adult women which are sponsored by the teachers of vocational home economics. During this past school year the teachers of home economics in the Montevallo Training School organized and taught two groups in different sections of surrounding communities.

Pea Ridge Club

The Pea Ridge club was organized early in September with an enrollment including members whose ages ranged from sixteen to sixty-five. They chose to study how to make wise expenditures of money with emphasis on foods and clothing. Making the best use of supplies already on hand was emphasized by lessons on care of clothing and dry cleaning in the home. Buying clothing wisely was stressed in lessons on the selection of wool, silk, rayon and cotton materials and children's clothing. Food lessons included demonstrations and discussions on food preparation and buying. Having the meetings in homes of the ladies gave them a more practical value. The recreational opportunities of the meetings proved quite as attractive as the demonstrations. Both old and young enjoyed the games often played at the conclusion of the lesson. Seventeen meetings were held during the year with an average attendance of fifteen.

Dry Valley Club

The Dry Valley Club was organized early in the Spring. As in the Pea Ridge club there was a variation of ages in the members, but there was a unity of purpose within the group. Lessons on food preparation including vegetable cookery, desserts and breads composed one phase of the series. Another phase included table service and manners. A third phase taught during the latter part of the unit was a group of lessons on food preservation. Demonstrations on canning of meats was most interesting and practical. Several types of meats, such as chicken, beef, and rabbit were canned successfully with the use of a pressure cooker. Vegetables were also canned.

The interest of both groups as shown by their enthusiasm, attendance and eagerness to have a club next year indicates that in this phase of work, vocational home economics is making a worthwhile contribution to the community in which it serves.

Three-Point Program For School Funds

Montgomery, June 25.—A three-point program including governmetal economy, ear-marked funds for education, and enough revenue to provide for minimum needs, was outlined by Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, in a statewide radio hookup yesterday afternoon.

While declaring that the P.-T. A. insists upon the cutting off of useless jobholders, Mrs. Hill claimed that such economies could provide only a small part of the $4,000,000 needed by education in Alabama.

That economies in education are already in operation was stressed. The school system was described as one of the most economical in the nation, with the State Department spending less than half as much as it used to. The colleges, although facing ruin, managed to stay open last year on less than one fourth as much as they spent in 1929-30, and the public schools are asking a million less then they required that year.

Expenditures for elucation in the state amount to about fifteen millions. Alabama taxpayers at the same time spent forty millions for gasoline and seven millions for tobacco.

Mrs. Hill stated that honesty prevents the P.-T. A. from joining those who cry "There is enough tax money now for the schools if it were not wasted." She charged that in spite of numerous victories by economy advocates, especially during the Miller administration, there has not been enough money for five years to run the schools without federal aid.

If tax money is to be levied for schools, taxpayers have a right to some guarantee the money will go for schools, stated Mrs. Hill. The only practical way to give such a guarantee is to earmark all school money and pay all school expenses from this fund.

The Minimum Program providing for a seven-month term in all schools was defended by the P.-T. A., and it was urged that sufficient revenue be raised to carry out this program.

Alabama Ahead In Grade Separation

Alabama is ahead of most states in its grade elimination program, according to R. D. Tobien, assistant chief engineer of the Southern Railway and district director for the railroads on the works program grade separation projects.

Mr. Tobien, on a recent visit to the Highway Department, said the American Railroad Association had told him Alabama was in the forefront so far as getting projects under way was concerned, and ranks among the highest in actual operations now going on.

This, Mr. Tobien declared, is due to the hard work and the cooperation of Governor Bibb Graves, members of the highway commission, H. H. Houk, chief engineer and J. P. Trotter, bridge engineer. All have spent long hours after their regular office time in getting out plans.

In turn, the Highway Department officials expressed appreciation for the cooperation given by the railways. Without this cooperation, they said, the state would not have made such good progress.

DRIVE A FORD V-8 AND SAVE THE DIFFERENCE—EVERY MILE

Ford economy does not stop with economical use of gasoline and oil. From the day you buy a new Ford V-8 until the day you trade it in, you save the difference every mile.

1. FORD EXTRA VALUE. Modern V-8 engine. Welded steel body reinforced with steel. Safety glass all around. Centerpoise ride on 123" springbase. Super-safety mechanical brakes. Big 6.00x16" air-balloon tires on deluxe models. Torque-tube drive. Clear-vision ventilation and windshield that opens. ALL THESE FEATURES AT NO EXTRA COST IN THE FORD V-8.

2. FORD LOW MAINTENANCE COST. Only Ford owners enjoy the big economies of low priced Genuine Ford Parts and the Ford policy of exchanging factory reconditioned parts (including the V-8 motor) for a fraction of the cost of replacement of similar parts in other cars.

3. FORD HIGH RESALE VALUE. Because more value is built into the Ford V-8, more unused value is left when you trade it in. Striking evidence of this fact is the high value the public itself puts upon used Ford V-8 cars which has made the Ford always worth a higher percentage of its original cost than any other car.

THE F. H. A. PROGRESSES

The F. H. A. (Future Homemakers of America) organized by Miss Pate at Montevallo, is the only organization of its kind in this state. We are glad that our local girls have the opportunity of being members of this club for three reasons, namely: For the practice and learning of parliamentary laws; to be under the influence of a capable instructor who teaches us things that we want to learn to do; and greatest of all, have a part in state or nationwide benevolent work.

The club with the help of the entire Home Economics Department, has sold subscriptions to McCall's Magazine and has made cookies that were sold at the cafeteria, the proceeds of which were given to the crippled children's clinic.

Organization and cooperation were, of course, vital to the welfare of the club. Frances Reed, president, and Ina Mae Grady, secretary-treasurer, were perhaps responsible for the flame of interest that continues to glow. The members who were qualified and received second degree initiation this year are: Dora Lee Anderson, Martha Carr, Gladys Lucas, Jean Comer and Louise Baxley.

We are planning to send at least three third-degree members to the conference that is held annually for club members at Alabama College, Montevallo, on August 7-8.

The marriage of Miss Henrietta Peal and Mr. Louie Beasley was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Peal, at South Calera, Saturday evening at 6:30 by Rev. W. H. Haddock, in the presence of the family and a few close friends.

FOURTH OF JULY SERVICES

On the Fourth of July a number of preachers will be present to discuss different phases of the church and its work. Lunch will be served on the ground. This will be the beginning of our revival, conducted by Evangelist Gardner S. Hall, of Birmingham. Your presence is earnestly requested.—A. B. Baxley, Minister, Church of Christ, Calera, Ala.

Teachers Get Most Of School Dollar

Montgomery, June 16.—Alabama teachers receive 11 cents more out of every dollar spent on education than do the average teachers of the nation according to figures from the office of State Superintendent J. A. Keller, made public by the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Of each Alabama school dollar, 71 cents goes for teacher salary payments. The national average is 60 cents. Even then the shortage of school money forces the Alabama teacher to accept a salary only half as large as the nationl aveage.

Next to teacher salaries, the largest single item in the Alabama school dollar is transportation. Ten cents goes to run the school bus and pay the salary of the driver. The smallest item is administration; only two cents of each dollar is used for superintendent's salary, office expenses, and costs of the board of education.

Contrary to popular opinion, the cost for capital outlay in Alabama is low compared to other states. Six cents goes for new buildings and indebtedness on building programs. The national average is 16 cents.

Of the remaining 11 cents, five goes for insurance and building upkeep, three to buy fuel and pay janitors' expenses, and three cents for libraries and teaching supplies.

W. H. MacGregor Is A. E. A. Official

Montgomery, Ala., June 19.—W. H. MacGregor, principal last year of the Etowah County High School, at Attalla, was recently elected assistant executive secretary of the Alabama Education Association, according to an announcement made Friday by Garland S. Smith, of Vernon, president of the organization. Mr. MacGregor is a native of Georgia, where he received his high-school and undergraduate educational training. He holds an A. B. degree from Emory University and an M. S. degree from the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. His experience includes work in the elementary schools of Georgia and of Lee County, Alabama, as well as several years as principal of Alabama high schools. Two years ago Mr. MacGregor served as assistant statistician to Dr. E. L. Morphet, in the State Department of Education, at Montgomery.

Real Frost

"The winter up in Gulch Pass was the coldest of them all," said the prospector. "The thermometer frequently registered 50 degrees below zero."

"That really was nothing," said the salesman. "Up in the north country where I was making a call one winter, it was so cold in one of the hotels that the bellboys kept their hands in their pockets even after making a call."

Ducats Bring Back Fond Memories of Ring's Old Timers

ALL day long they sit there. Old-timers, most of them, they have little else to do. Occasionally they utter words of wisdom concerning this cream colored youth who glowers at them from brightly tinted posters tacked against the walls. Occasionally they smile little secret smiles at the antics of sweating fat men who rush in to offer king's ransoms for squatters' rights at Yankee stadium for the Louis-Schmeling fight.

More often though they just sit there, these fighters, managers and promoters of another day. Probably all of them are glad that collections are so good in this palace of the Broadway duke who deals in ducats. But what they like best is another collection. So all day long they sit there, looking at the ticket stubs, mementoes of almost forgotten fights, neatly pasted in frames outside the doors of Mike Jacobs' office. And these are the tales that are told:

There is the scrap of faded cardboard which entitled a Brighton Beach visitor to see Gibbons and McFarland lead with agile lefts so many years ago. Prize-fight ballyhoo and customs were much the same then as now. Papers of that day carried the proud tidings that John McCormack had bought the first box of six for this one.

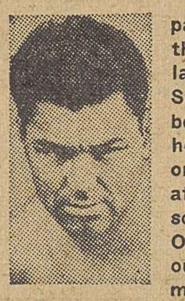
That night the eminent Irish tenor walked leisurely to his favored spot and found six thick muscled citizens seated there, caps pulled far down over bristling foreheads.

"I beg your pardon, boys, these are my seats," pleaded McCormack. The boys snarled. Ushers were summoned. The boys continued to snarl.

Ever a diplomat, the singer saved the day. He took his friends back to where there were some vacant seats 20 rows from the ring.

Recalling Bat Nelson at Dempsey-Willard Go

There are dozens of stubs which bring back memories of that great little fighting man, Terry McGovern.



Jack Dempsey

A larger piece of pasteboard bears the names of Willard and Dempsey. Seldom will there be such sweltering heat as there was on that afternoon after Battling Nelson took his bath. On the night previous to the Toledo massacre Bat had been scurrying hither and thither on errands of his own. Now as he wandered near the arena in the early morning he felt in need of that other refreshment which comes from a cooling tub. He looked, saw a barrel brimful of sparkling liquid and climbed in.

Cold drinks sold at such a premium that afternoon that vendors neglected what otherwise might have been a swell business opportunity. They made no effort to charge bonuses for sips from the tub of lemonade in which the once great lightweight champion had bathed.

Carefully pasted in the frame there is another bit of cardboard with $500 engraved upon it in tall numerals. This is one of the ducats from the Carpentier-Levinsky light-heavyweight scrap at Jersey City on Tuesday, October 12, 1920. Members of the International Sporting club, which staged the affair, were taxed this tidy sum for the pretty privilege of a ringside seat. Outsiders also were called upon for fancy prices but even though the big shots tossed in their C notes as if they were dealing in cigarette coupons, the show was not a great financial success. About all it did was to pave the way for the winner, Gorgeous Georges, to meet Dempsey.

When they met a year later the face price of each ringside pasteboard was $50 but first row ducats were being peddled as high as $500.

For hours during that eventful afternoon while millionaires and outright phonies fought for prized locations, one seat remained vacant almost within touching distance of the ring.

Next day Tex Rickard, who had promoted the affair, and Mike Jacobs, who hand bankrolled it, were chatting concerning mathematics, finance and the curious frenzies of the public. Tex absently stuck his hand into a side pocket and pulled out a piece of pasteboard.

"Gee whizz!" he said.

ARTISTS unable to visit Max Schmeling's fight camp missed a rare opportunity for entertainment and enlightenment. Mickey McAvoy, one of the German's better sparring partners, has "Good Luck Forever" tattooed on his right shoulder. There is a picture of a sailor on his left shoulder. His right arm is adorned with "U. S. A. Navy." On his left leg there is pictured the smiling face of a girl who seems to be named Anna . . . When Bill Wingate, a very good Baltimore sports writer, died a few days ago, the mayor of the town issued a public resolution of regret.

The next rumor the Brooklyn baseball club will have to deny is that Frank Hague, Jersey City's mayor, will buy the joint and install Travis Jackson as manager . . . Latest suggestion for the What to Do With Carnera club . . . "Stuff him and save him for the laughs" . . . They are saying that Eddie Mayo, the neat fielding third sacker bought by the Giants, cannot hit southpaws. Yet last year he went to bat 122 times against left handers and had 39 hits for a .319 average. . . . When he loses a game Fred Frankhouse saves his temper by not reading the newspapers until two days later.

Could it be true that Joe Louis' managers requested Mrs. Joe to leave camp because the Bomber was spending more time in billing and cooing than in training? . . . . Anyhow, Mrs. Joe, who dotes upon fights and who never missed a workout, decided to stay in New York (instead of Lakewood) until after the night of June 18 . . . In the gay nineties a pitcher always warmed up with the first baseman, instead of the catcher, before entering the box.

Connie Mack Is Still Wizard in Rookie Hunt

Connie Mack

In spite of gray hairs and advancing years, Connie Mack has not lost much of his skill in picking coming young ball players. Nicholson, the Washington (Md.) college outfielder who soon will be presented as a member of the Athletics, should make good in the big time within a year or so. He comes from Jimmy Foxx's neighborhood and another thing he hits almost as hard . . . James Graham, secretary of the Metropolitan Soccer league, once starred for the Norwood and Roslyn F. C. in Scotland. He helped organize the Greenock West of Scotland F. C. and is the proud holder of a Glasgow Juvenile Cup medal.

Sharp trainers already are beating the new rule requiring the jockeys' names to be released with overnight entries at metropolitan tracks. They wait until the 3:30 deadline before giving a name. Then, just as likely as not, they change the rider before race time the next day . . . There also is considerable tiffing going on because the celebrated bookies who crashed the clubhouses this year are said to be opposed to giving the same prices that are quoted in the main ring . . . Buddy Hassett, newest of Dodger heroes, has found a way to beat the autograph hunters who lie in wait outside Ebbets field. He borrows a pair of glasses from a reporter so that he can escape in disguise each afternoon.

Archie Walker, former lightweight contender, now works in the Curb Exchange Clearing house . . . Although it has been years since he won a bet, Jimmy Kelly, the celebrated Sullivan Streeter, still manages to breakfast on scrambled eggs and champagne . . . Hambla Bauer, the lady trainer from the West, who was merely given a badge by the New York Jockey club, can ride her own horses better than most jockeys.

Celebrated Gee Gees Wind Up in the Army

Some of our most celebrated gee gees wind up in the army . . . Sir Barton and Behave Yourself (both Kentucky Derby winners), Vander Pool, Audacious, Chilhowee, Single Foot, Kentucky Cardinal and Capt. Alcock are in the Remount service. Incidentally, there are 700 stallions in the American Remount association . . . William Graham, who stars for the Bay Ridge Hearts, is the son of the soccer scribe of the same name.

Turfmen hope for one good break out of the news that Governor Lehman refuses to be re-elected. They hint that a new governor may mean a new state racing commission or that the commission may be scrapped as was done years ago when Harry F. Sinclair was chairman.

THINGS I NEVER EXPECT TO SEE:

A New York State racing commissioner remembering (and proving) that he really is as much a servant of the muggs who exist in walkups as of the millionaires who reside in Westchester.

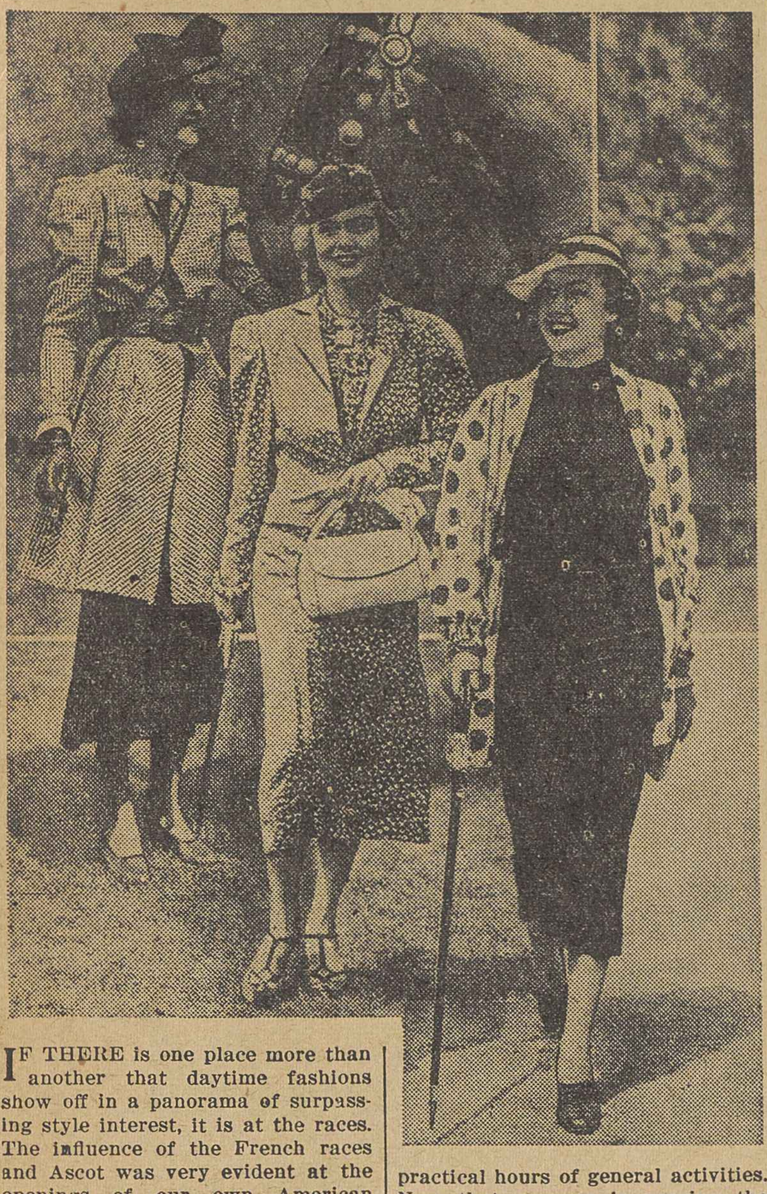
A Broadway columnist getting an item of sports news first.

The New York State Athletic commission keeping within proper legal bounds and thus giving the public a break.

Any commission appointed to supervise sports acting as if the wishes of the people really came ahead of the politicians.

Smart Silks for Spectator Sports

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



IF THERE is one place more than another that daytime fashions show off in a panorama of surpassing style interest, it is at the races. The influence of the French races and Ascot was very evident at the openings of our own American tracks this season. Although there were no trailing skirts there were the reminiscent cartwheels, the tiny elaborate "doll" hats which smart Parisiennes love so well with flower, vegetable and bird trimming—millinery fantasies such as are almost amusing in their eccentricities, yet quite worthwhile in that they are adding such zest to the current mode. Silk taffeta frocks and suits were numerous and set the pace for an interesting style movement. Skirts 14 inches from the ground, any number of short-sleeved dresses and jackets.

Typical of the choices of many well-dressed women was the very short black silk crepe suit with a fitted jacket that is worn with an enormous black feather-trimmed cartwheel hat. A huge white kid water lily at the shoulder gave a dramatic touch. Much is being said in fashion circles in regard to water lily colorings and water lily boutonnieres and corsages. As to suits of this type the fashion parade includes them in dark silk failles, in faconne silk taffeta, and of course, the gay printed suits are that ubiquitous they are taken for granted.

As to the newer silk prints there is a marked tendency to select tiny neat patternings for daytime wear. Made up in trimly tailored frocks with short sleeves and matching jackets, you have the costume-ideal for going about town and for the practical hours of general activities. Now that summer is nearing the trend toward cool silk sheers, both plain and print are obvious. To glorify these intriguing prints one must be accessory-minded to a high degree, which is not at all difficult since the shops are filled to overflowing with the most fascinating neckwear, gloves, bouquets, belts, footwear and handbags that genius might devise.

Seen at the Belmont race track was the jacket dress centered in the illustration. It is styled of dotted silk crepe, white on gray (a very important color is gray this season). Fitted jacket, square shoulders with big sleeves, and a ruffled jabot on the dress are details that interpret high swank.

CIRCULAR LINES FOR NEXT AUTUMN

While most women are concentrating now on the purchase of their summer wardrobes those who are designers of fashionable clothes are concerned about next fall and winter's styles. They are considering the creations shown in recent Paris collections and thinking up ideas to produce something new in the way of silhouettes for the autumn.

The first inkling of the trend which has leaked out of the workrooms concerns the width of hemlines. Circular lines are said to be so well liked that every one of us will be wearing skirts that whirl around us like ballet costumes before many months have gone.

Feminine Allure Feature of Negligees for Summer

Negligees good for all year, and especially charming for summer, are made of blush satin, with deep insets of ivory Alencon lace. The body of these negligees is cut on the bias, so that it drapes around the figure attractively. A rolled hem finishes the edge. The sash ends have lace trimming.

Another type of negligee has two bias ruffles for a shawl collar, and three bias sleeve ruffles arranged in tiers, all edged with Val lace. Very practical for summer, especially when the fabric is dotted swiss or washable silk.

Barnyard in Prints

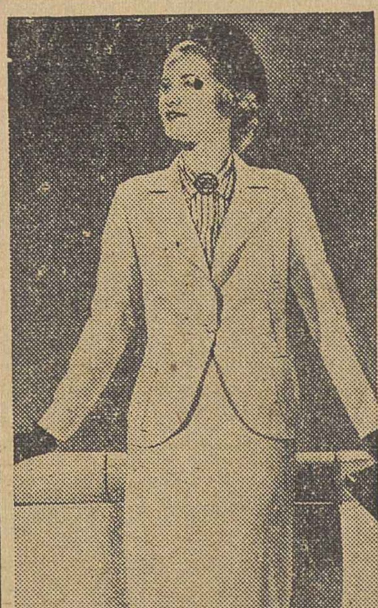
The barnyard is glorified in silk sheer animal prints of white roosters, birds and bunnies instead of traditional dots on black. One smart model features a vest and three pleated tiers of a twin print on a red ground.

Sports Garb Colors Gay

Summer sports clothes stress colorful hues and comfort. Molyneux has evolved evening pajamas of light green linen topped by a jacket of the same fabric lined with multicolored printed crepe.

WHITE LINEN SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



The linen suit in natural or pure white is an important number on the style program for summer. The accent on suits has been most pronounced all spring and now enthusiasm for suits is continuing for summer—suits of linen particularly that are cool and comfortable as temperature rises. The classic white suit here pictured is of linen of superfine grade imported from Moygashel, Ireland. It is particularly smart for town wear when accompanied with dark accessories such as fashion decrees with white. Note the navy beret, the navy-striped silk shirt, the navy gloves and bag. These identical accessories carried out in Dubonnet red are stunning.

A Fox Bracelet

Fur bracelets are next. Fox takes the lead and either bands the elbow or encircles the lower arm just above the wrist.

THERE'S nothing like keeping your business all in the family! Gene Markey wrote a scenario, "By the Dawn's Early Light," (and can't you see that title being shortened so that it will fit theater marquees?) and RKO has bought it for his wife, Joan Bennett, which is nice as he wrote it especially for her. Fred Stone will be the other star. It sounds pretty exciting. Stone will play an American consul stationed in China. Joan will be his daughter, and a revolution will furnish the drama. Joan is making a picture in England now, and is eager to get home and begin work in her husband's story.

Myrna Loy

It rather startled everyone to have Myrna Loy and Arthur Hornblow getting their romantic affairs straightened out at last; there have been rumors of a matrimonial nature about them for a long time. Hornblow and his wife, the lovely Juliet Crosby, had separated, but he had been opposed to a divorce. (Meanwhile Hollywood gossips were rushing about, saying that it was just too dreadful that his wife wouldn't divorce him so that he and Myrna could be married!) Eventually Mrs. Hornblow went to Reno, and after that it was plain sailing.

Don't refer to Buster Crabbe as Buster any more; he doesn't like it. He got the studio to let him be Larry Crabbe, but they insisted on putting "Buster" in the middle, and now he's known by all three names. He's working in "The Arizona Raiders" for Paramount, with Marsha Hunt.

Warner Brothers and Paul Whiteman have joined forces in an effort to discover talented children. Children from all over the country will appear with Whiteman on his radio broadcasts each week, and be given tests at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio.

Warner Brothers will also make a series of shorts, the casts to be composed entirely of children. And of course any children who make the grade will be under contract to Warner Brothers.

While we're on the subject of children, the settlement of the squabble over little Freddie Bartholomew is good news. Apparently he didn't want to leave his beloved aunt, who had done so much to develop his talent and taken such care of him, yet naturally his mother couldn't be denied her rights. His aunt said recently that she was disturbed over the effect the whole thing had had on him; he forgot his lines when he was working, a thing he had never done before, and had told her that, if he was taken away from her, he'd run away and keep running away until he got back to her.

Irene Dunne

Irene Dunne has been having a grand time in New York. She and her husband were guests the other evening at a small dinner party at which the eldest son of the former king of Spain was also present.

The Four Hundred of New York long since took the lovely Irene to its heart, but she is still the same sweet, unspoiled girl that she has always been. The prize for the most "regular" person in pictures certainly ought to go to her.

Mitchell Leisen, Paramount director, could take bows if he wanted to over persuading the great Stokowski to break into the movies. The famous conductor will appear in "The Big Broadcast of 1937," along with a couple of jazz bands —but not all playing at the same time!

Experiments May Aid Farmer With Better Secondary Highways

Cotton Now Employed as Material in Road Making

NOT the least of the aids for farmers now under way are the efforts to do something, finally, about the state of the secondary roads over which produce is trucked to market.

Along with "cotton" roads and "salt" roads already mentioned in the press is a new type cement-soil road under study in South Carolina. In the sandy soil of the Palmetto state, road engineers have a good highway material if a suitable binder for the base can be found. New studies reported by Charles H. Moorefield, state highway engineer, indicate that cement will do the trick.

Cement is spread over a sand-clay road and mixed into the soil with scrapers. A heavy sprinkling of water follows and then comes a thorough packing with rollers.

Cement Vs. Cotton.

Atop such a cement-sand base the usual bituminous surface is applied.

Cotton roads, so-called, contain very little cotton; only a few bales to the mile.

As with most secondary, lightly-traveled roads the aim is to prevent separation of the top surface from the base and thus decrease wrinkling or washboard effects, holes and general erosive deterioration.

Cotton webbing in wide sheets is laid over the crushed stone base of the "cotton" roads and bituminous adhesive material applied. Then above it comes the finer crushed stone for the top surface.

Outside of the South and the farming regions most people will be aware of cotton roads through their growing use in airport runways. Contracts have recently been signed for the building of such a runway at the big airport of Newark, N. J., which serves metropolitan New York.

Experiment With Salt.

Roadways of "salt" are being experimented upon at Cornell university. Again the term should not be taken literally, for New York state is not building roads like those of the great Utah salt beds over which Sir Malcom Campbell sped to his 300-mile-an-hour record. Unlike cotton, however, salt is not used solely as a binding material between the base and top surfaces. The salt is mixed into the natural clay of of the road and serves to keep it moist.

Indians' Birth Rate on Upgrade While Whites' Shows Loss

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Decline and oblivion are not to be the Indian's fate, if a high birth rate has anything to do with the question. The birth rate of the Plains Indians "is about the highest in the world, 48 per thousand," Prof. Clark Wissler of Yale university informed the meeting of the American Association of Physical Anthropologists here.

This is in striking contrast with the declining birth rate of the white population, which dipped under 20 per thousand even before the depression began.

Indians Not Dying Out.

The persistent notion that the Indians are a dying people probably dates from their troubles when they first were placed on reservations.

But even the shock of being caged in reservations had apparently no effect on the high Indian birth rate, which has had little change since about 1800. The decline was due to a much higher death rate, which reached its tragic climax about 1890, and has since declined.

Smoking Dulls Taste for Salt and Sweets

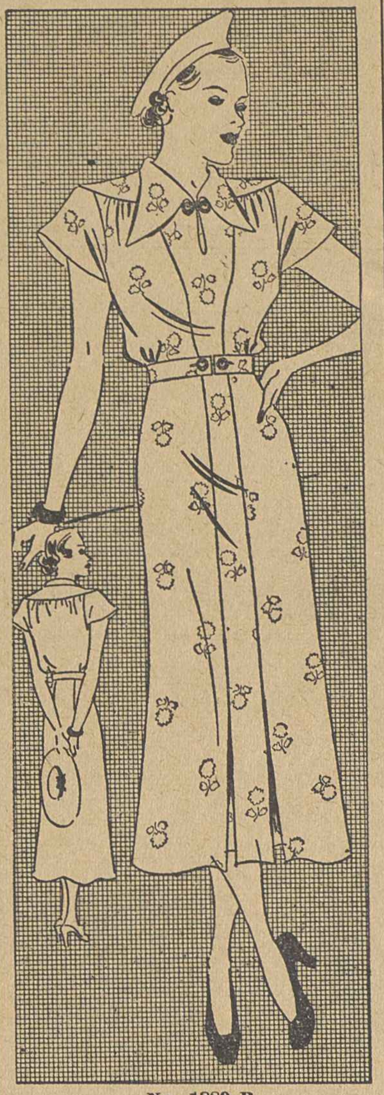
WASHINGTON. — If you reach for a smoke, you will not be able to taste your sweets very well.

Smoking tobacco dulls the acuteness of taste for both sugar and salt, it has been found in experiments conducted at Catholic University of America, here, by Dr. John E. Rauth and James J. Sinnott. But the effect is not permanent; when the smoking is stopped, the ability to taste returns to normal.

Six habitual smokers who planned to give up smoking for a period volunteered as subjects in the experiment. Tests were used to determine the weakest solution of sugar and of salt that could be tasted by each one.

Then they stopped smoking. Their taste became more acute, so that they could taste solutions of sugar only about half as strong as their former limit. Salt could be tasted in solutions about two-thirds as strong as formerly.

Who Wouldn't Be Slim and Trim in This Stunning Summer Frock?



No. 1889-B

Who isn't excited about the new wider shoulder width that tends to slenderize the waistline?

Note the unusual bodice lines, the panel extending to the hem, and kick pleats that contribute dash and ease. The natty collar is just right to take a pin, clip or posy. The frock is quickly fashioned and costs so little to make.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1889-B is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 18 requires 4⅜ yards of 39-inch material. Send fifteen cents in coin for the pattern.

The Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns is ready. Send 15 cents in coin for your copy.

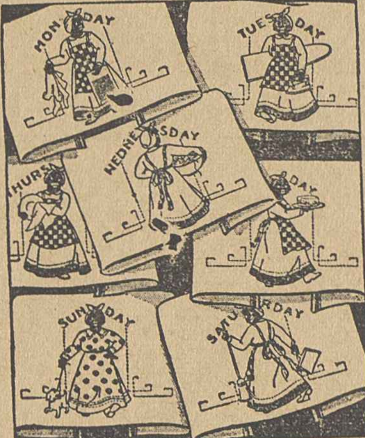
TEA TOWELS BRING GAYETY TO KITCHEN

No "afternoons off" for this colored Mammy, for she must "wash the cups and saucers up, and put the clothes away." But you can take an afternoon off and embroider yourself a set of tea towels with these amusing Mammies, for the work goes very quickly, it's cross stitch, outline, running and single stitch. Her gay bandana and checkerboard apron suggest themselves for the brightest floss you can find. A set's nice to donate when Fair time comes around.

In pattern 5547 you will find a transfer pattern of seven motifs—one for each day of the week—averaging 6 by 8 inches; material requirements and color suggestions; illustrations of all stitches needed.



PATTERN 5547

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, Household Arts Dept., 259 West Fourteenth St., New York, N. Y. Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

50-Foot Waves Are a Myth, Declare German Scientists

Stories of rollers 50 feet and 100 feet high are "mere fairy tales," according to German marine scientists. The highest wave in the widest sea is no more than 33 feet, they reported in Munich after sweeping investigations. "Ocean liners," they declare, "rising on the average to 80 or 100 feet above the surface thus tower above even the mightiest wave."

Woman's Skeleton of Medieval Age Uncovered Near Foley On Gulf Coast

Atlanta, Ga., June 25.—The first scientific records affirming the presence of aboriginal Indians on the Gulf Coast of Alabama during the medieval period are contained in a field report just submitted to the National Park Service's district offices here by Dr. Walter B. Jones, director of the Alabama Museum of Natural History.

A woman's flexed skeleton, of primitive burial, was uncovered during archeological excavations carried out at Gulf State Park, south of Foley, under direction of Dr. Jones and Ted Johansen, assistant curator. Labor was supplied by 20 Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees assigned tothe park camp.

"There have been many rumors of skeletons from various parts of the Gulf Coast," said Dr. Jones' preliminary report, "but so far as I am aware, no burial has been recorded previously by a scientific party."

The Alabama scientist's investigations concerned sites along the shore and on an island of Big Lake, large fresh water basin in the park. The woman's skeleton was found, "in a fair state of preservation," buried about 18 inches underground near the south shore. Large quantities of Indian potsherds also were uncovered by the excavations on the shore and island.

"It is evident," Dr. Jones pointed out, "that the shore of Big Lake was well developed at the time these aborigines occupied them, and it is believed the period of occupation was in medieval times. The flexed burial would indicate this. Likewise, a preliminary examination of the pottery, which consists of stamped, incised, cord-marked and basket-weave samples, would indicate prehistoric Indians rather than the ancient Mound Builders . . . There do not seem to be any superimposed cultures."

Excavations at Middle and Little Lakes, also located in the 3,515-acre park tract, have been recommended by Dr. Jones, who proposed erection of informative markers at all major archelogic sites of the area

General development work for the establishment of recreational facilities at Gulf State Park is being carried forward by CCC enrollees under joint supervision of Alabama officials and the National Park Service, represented by its Branch of Planning and State Cooperation headed by Conrad L. Wirth. Colonel Page S. Bunker, director of state parks, is Alabama's Park Authority. Dr. Jones is state geologist as well as museum director.

Waterworks Projects

All of the projects were approved and carried out under the technical supervision of the State Health Department's engineering division, headed by George H. Hazelhurst, director of the Bureau of Sanitation.

"The advantage of having a safe water supply—yes, even more emphatically—the necessity of a safe water supply, lies in the fact that water has been found to be the medium of transmission of such diseases as typhoid fever, dysentery, both bacillary and amoebic, and milder enteric disturbances," said Dr. Baker. "Water, when drunk, does not enter into the transmission of malaria.

"A water may be clear, odorless, of good taste and coolness, yet it may be heavily laden with the bacteria of disease.

"Public water supplies in our state have not been the cause of serious outbreak of enteric fever since 1924 and the reduction in typhoid in the U. S. registration area from 35.8 in 1900 to 4.8 in 1930 is in large part due to safer public supplies. Our state statistics show that typhoid fever presents the greatest problem now in the smaller otwns, without supervised water supplies, milk control and adequate environmental sanitation."

Cotton Over 12 Cents

Spot cotton reached a new 1936 high when middling crossed the 12-cent line. The market closed at 12.05, a gain of about 20 points for the day. At the same time July futures surged over 12 cents for the first time in many months. The rise was accompanied by only light sales.

With supply of old cotton rapidly diminishing and crop prospects for this year so unfavorable, local dealers said they looked for further advances in prices this Summer. Some of them are talking 15-cent cotton before the new crop begins to reach the market.

In a statement released, S. J. Schlenker, member of the firm of E. A. Pierce and Company, pointed out several constructive factors which he said were placing cotton in stronger position. His statement follows:

"Despite heavy sales of July by the producers pool, the cotton market continues to move gradually higher. The approached completion of this liquidation, resulting in a material reduction in the supply on contracts, is satisfactory from the constructive point of view. The strong statistical position of American cotton is beginning to have its counterpart in strengthening supply situation by important outside growths, and due to this, much of the recent demand has come from foreign sources.

"Textile advices from abroad indicate substantial expansion overseas. The possibility, too, of inflationary developments in important foreign countries and the tendency towards broader military preparations could add impetus to the price movement in the near future. Moreover, the action of the market indicates periodic realizing by longs, and this tends to maintain a healthy technical condition."

Dr. Thayer To Lead Program

SPECIAL STUDIES TO BE ON SECONDARY SCHOOL CURRICULUM

Dr. V. T. Thayer, educational director of the Ethical Cultural School of New York, will lead the seminar on "Reconstruction of the Secondary School Curriculum" which opens the Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Association at Alabama College. The meeting will continue through Friday.

Visitors may observe the planning of work of the Demonstration School at 11 o'clock that morning and for an hour, beginning at 2 o'clock that afternoon E. S. Brinkley and Dr. Thayer will meet groups interested in problems of the curriculum.

Dr. C. B. Smith, of the State Department of Education and Mr. Brinkley will speak at the general meeting from 4 to 6 o'clock that afternoon, at which Dean T. H. Napier will preside. Dr. Doak S. Campbell, of George Peabody College for Teachers, will be one of the speakers at the evening meeting at 7:30, when Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education, will preside. M. Ziolkowski, pianist and professor in the School of Music here, will give a special group of numbers on this occasion.

Study groups, observation in the training school and curriculum conferences will be held Thursday and Friday. Mrs. Norma Smith Bristow is regional chairman of the Progressive Education Association and is in charge of general arrangements for the meeting, held here during each of the past several summers through cooperations with Alabama College.

Admission to the Demonstration School and to all sessions of the conference will be by tickets which visitors may secure at registration desks in the lobby of Palmer Hall. The nominal registration fee provides admission to all programs except a special entertainment on Thursday evening by the Fairhope Dancers and a theatrical performance.

Cowart Purchases Kroell Property

A real estate transaction of much interest in Montevallo was made during the past week when Mr. Z. S. Cowart, of the Montevallo Drug Company, purchased from Mr. Pat J. Kroell a vacant lot in the heart of the business district, located at the corner of Main and Middle Streets.

When interviewed about the matter Mr. Cowart stated that he has no plans in mind for immediate development or use of the property. Evidently Mr. Cowart, being a good business man, with a keen eye to the future, saw that it would be to his advantage to own this splendid piece of business property, and therefore he bought it "for safe keeping," you might say.

It is evident that business men, of foresight have oberved a forthcoming period of activity in business and expansion of business facilities in Montevallo. There are rumors of other deals brewing in business property.

Regional Conference Here July 1-3

The first general meeting of the Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Association at Alabama College was held at 4:00 o,'clock Wednesday afternoon when E. S. Brinkley, of the Norfolk Schools, and C. B. Smith, of the Alabama State Department of Education, spoke. The topic of the meeting that evening at 7:30 was, "How Shall We Arrive at Basic Curriculum Needs?"

The conference will continue through Friday, July 3. Study groups will be held Thursday morning beginning at 8 o'clock and observation in the Demonstration School, now in session here, will be held throughout the morning. Curriculum conferences will be available by appointment Thursday afternoon.

The dancers from the School of Organic Education at Fairhope will entertain with a program on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock, followed by a presentation of the play, "Chalk Dust". This play is based on problems growing out of conditions in many high schools. It is a Works Progress Administration production.

On the closing day, observation in the Demonstration School, study groups and planning groups for work of the Demonstration School will precede the group summaries which will be conducted at 2 o'clock that afternoon by Mrs. Norma Smith Bristow, chairman.

Mrs. Clara Belle Monjar returned Wednesday to Birmingham after an extended visit to her brother, Mr. Walter Fancher, and family.

College Girls Annual Camp Begins July 27

The annual Camp for Girls at Alabama College will begin July 27 and will continue until August 22. Miss Jean Liston, of Decatur, is to be one of the counselors according to Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, director of the camp and student counselor at the college. It is for girls between the ages of 10 and 18 years of age.

Enrollment, which is limited to fifty, is advised for the entire period but may be completed for a shorter time. The facilities of the college campus, including gymnasium, swimming pool, tennis court, cap house, athletic fields, dormitories and camp house are open to the campers, who are now registering.

Student Conference Here Next Week

ATTENDANCE FROM HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES OF THE STATE

The full program for the third annual Student Career Conference held at Alabama College for girls who graduated from high schools of the State this year has been completed and announced by Dr. Hallie Farmer, faculty chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements for the meeting on the campus here July 8, 9 and 10.

The first day will include registration, a series of tests, step singing and a recreational program on the athletic field. Registration will be continued the following morning.

Miss Ethel Ramage, past state president of the Buiness and Professional Women' Clubs, will preside at the first general meeting, July 9, in Palmer Hall, when the main address will be delivered by Mrs. E. R. Richardson on "New Fields of Opportunity for Trained Women". President A. F. Harman will give an address of welcome to visitors at this time, following which registration will be held for the various round tables.

Superintendent H. G. Dowling, of Tuscaloosa, will speak at the general meeting on the same afternoon on "Employer and Business Women". The delegates will leave Ramsay Hall that evening for a special supper at the college camp house.

Miss Klee Hix, past president of the Birmingham Pilot Club, will preside at the general meeting that evening and will present Mrs. Richardson for her talk on "Our Grandmothers' World and Ours". This will be followed by a reception in Palmer Hall.

Round tables will be held on the closing day of the session in such fields as Business, Physical Education and Recreation, Teaching, Health, Social Work, Library Science, Art, Speech and Dramatics, Home Economics, Writing, Civil Service, Music and Beauty Parlor work.

Mrs. Richardson's third talk will be on "A College Education as Preparation for Living". This will be followed by a reception at the home of President and Mrs. Harman on the campus on the evening of July 10.

Young women high school graduates are eligible to attend without cost, excepting the small registration fee, on recommendation of their principals.

MR. ZIOLKOWSKI PRESENTED PROGRAM WEDNESDAY

M. Ziolkowski, professor of piano at Alabama College, appeared on the program of the Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Wednesday evening in Palmer Hall. At this general meeting he was heard in the following selections: Polonaise in A flat, Chopin; Erkling, Schubert-Liszt; and La Companelle, Paganini-Liszt.

The conference opened July 1 and will continue through July 3. On the program Wednesday evening Dr. Doak C. Campbell, of George Peabody College and Dr. V. T. Thayer, of New York, spoke with Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education presiding.

STORES WILL STAY OPEN JULY FOURTH

It is nderstood that an agreement has been reached among the merchants of Montevallo whereby the stores will remain open for business Saturday, July Fourth, and will close for a half holiday Monday afternoon, July 6th.

The Baptist Women's Missionary Society met at the church Monday, June 29th, for the regular circle and business meeting, which was opened with a song, scripture and prayer.

The three circles had a short business meeting and then all came together for the general session. The quarterly associational meeting which will be held at Vincent July 21st, was discussed along with the usual business. The meeting was closed with prayer by Dr. Pearson.

Business Womens Meeting At College Next Saturday

A Business Women's Conference will be held at Alabama College Saturday following the annual Student Career Conference of the three preceding days. The general meeting Saturday will be held at 10:30 and 2 in Palmer Hall. Mrs. Eudora Ramsay Richardson, of Richmond, Virginia, will speak at the morning session, when President A. F. Harman of the College will express an official welcome to the visitors.

Dr. Iva L. Peters, director of research on the Employability of Women, and Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, Student Counselor at the College will speak that afternoon This meeting will be held by a general discussion.

At 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon the Montevallo branch of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs will entertain at tea.

The vocational guidance for young women graduates of Alabama high schools this year will open Wednesday at 2 P. M. with registration. Mrs. Richardson will speak at the first general meeting Thursday on "New Fields of Opportunity for Trained Women". Superintendent H. G. Dowling, of Tucsaloossa, will speak that afternoon on "Employers and Business Women". Mrs Richardson will be heard again Thursday evening on the subject "Our Grandmothers' World and Ours". The final general meeting for the students will be held Saturday evening when Mrs. Richardson will discuss "A College Education as Preparation for living".

During the meeting music will be furnished by three members of music faculty here: H. D.LeBaron, organist and director of the school; York Kildea, violinist, and M. Ziolkowski, pianist Round tables in a number of fields will begin Friday morning. Mrs. Lena Nelson Jeter will preside at the business round table, at which the discussion leaders will be Mabel V. Cheatham, Rosa Lee Stoelker and Rochelle Rodd Gachet.

Miss Edythe Saylor will preside at the Physical Education and Recreation round table, presenting Margaret Hodo and Ray Mitchell in the discussions.

Miss Alice Boyd will preside at the Teaching round table, with Alice V. Keliher, A. C. Anderson and H. W. Jones leading the discussion.

Dr. William A. Peck, Dr. Lola Taylor, Clara Savage McGarry, Elizabeth La Forge and Sallie Hamilton will lead the discussion of Health; and in Social Work. with Miss Myrtle Brooke presiding, the discussion leaders will be Elizabeth B. Elmore, Mereb E. Mossman and Mrs. Jesse W. Jones.

Miss Abi Russell is to preside at the Library session, presenting as discussion leader Ellyn Broomell Beaty.

Miss Dawn S. Kennedy is in charge of the Art round table and the discussion leaders are Elizabeth Gilmartin and Mary Allen Tippett.

Speech and Dramatics are in charge of Miss Ellen-Haven Gould, Miss Lois Ackerley is to preside at the Home Economics discussions, when Emily Starr Kirkley, Mary Ling Hayley, Susan Brandon and Troy Springer will be heard by the group interested in this field.

Miss Sarah Puryear will present Francis K. and Lucien Giddens in the writing round table. Miss Katherine Farrah will direct the Music discussion; Miss Lorraine Pierson will preside at the Civil Service meeting and will present Kermit Woolley as a discussion leader. Mrs. Stanley Mahan will discuss the work of Beautician at the meeting presided over by Miss Lorraine Peter.

Members of the Alabama College faculty are taking active part in the session both as discussion leaders and, as presiding officer. Other participants include representatives from other sections of the State as well as local business men and women The factulty in charge of arrangements is Dr. Hallie Farmer. Attendance at the three-day high school session is limited to the upper groups of senior girls in scholarship, who are recommended by their high school principals. Alabama College handles all costs of attendance except the nominal registration fee and transportation facilities for the use of official guests of this occasion.

4-H Club Girls Attend State Meeting At Auburn Last Month

On May 26th we met Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent, at Calera enroute to attend the State Short Course at Auburn, Ala. We stopped at Montgomery for a short shopping trip, and arrived at Auburn about 12:00 o'clock. After lunch we were registered at Langdon Hall. The afternoon was taken up by a rest period and a tour of the lovely campus at Auburn In the evening we attended the picture show and enjoyed very much "Patty-O-Day."

After putting our room in order (Sara Frances and Cecile were roommates) the next morning we went to breakfast. After morning watch we had assembly from 8:15 until 12:00 o'clock. We appreciated and enjoyed Dr. Duncan' welcome address at this time. There were also contests in clothing, food preservation and home improvement. After dinner we had a rest period until 2:00 o'clock which was followed by council meeting. We greatly enjoyed a lesson in forestry, followed by two hours of play. At 6:00 o'clock we enjoyed a picnic on the campus in front of Comer Hall. A very enjoyable part of this day was the Amateur Hour, in which Cecile Cowart took part, giving a lovely dance.

After breakfast and morning watch on Thursday, the 28th, we had assembly until 9:00 o'clock, which was followed by project demonstrations until 11:00 o'clock. Club girls from Butler county gave a most interesting play from 11:00 o'clock until 12:00 o'clock, after which we enjoyed a most delicious dinner. After visiting the Art Building at 3:00 o'clock we had another lesson in forestry followed by two hours of play. One of the most delightful occasions was the reception at the home of President and Mrs. Duncan.

Immediately after breakfast on the morning of May 29th we reluctantly started for home. From Auburn we went to Tuskegee, where we enjoyed a visit at Tuskegee Institute, one of the largest schools for negroes in the world. From Tuskegee we drove on to Calera and then to our respective homes.

Sara Frances DeMent earned the money for her expenses by carrying the Birmingham News, and she wishes to take this opportunity to thank everyone who helped make this trip possible for her.

Everyone who went to Auburn wants to go back again next year, so let's start now keeping up our 4-H Club record in order that we may attend the State Short Course next year.

Alabama's Economic School System

Montgomery, June 30.—Further evidence of the economy of Alabama's school system is seen in the tendency of other states to do away with small districts and organize on a county-wide or state-wide basis. The latest state to advocate abolishing small districts is Oregon, where John H. Carkin of the State Tax Commission, estimated $3,000,000 can be cut from the present cost of $17,000,000.

Alabama, recently described in Washington as having one of the most economical setups in the nation, has the county unit system. There are 67 county and 45 city districts, contrasted to as many as 10,000 districts in some state. The larger ditricts make necessary fewer boards and superintendents, cutting expenses.

Mr. Kennerly has completed moving of the Reynolds old residence to the north side of the lot recently acqired at the corner of Main and Vine Streets. Workmen are engaged in remodeling and extending the building, making it into an apartment house.

Mrs. J. I. Reid has spent the last week with her father near Warrior.

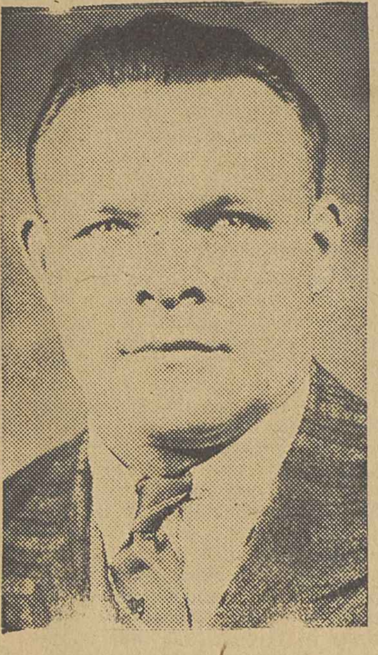
Short School Terms Stressed By Students

Montgomery, June 30. — Short school terms were bitterly stressed by 65 high school students called before the 350 Parent-Teachers Association members attending the Summer Institute at the University of Alabama last week. Students from only three Alabama high schools present reported as many as eight months of school last year.

The students were called from 17 high schools to tell parents what they thought about the schools. With the exception of Brunswick, Georgia, all the schools were found in six Alabama counties. Only the students from Brunswick, Murphy, High, Mobile; Woodlawn, Birmingham; and Tuscaloosa High, reported as much as eight months.

The other schools represented were Brookwood, Alberta, Holt, Gorgas, Bughl Junior High, Gordo Pickens County High, Liberty, Carrolton, Hale County High, Akron, West Blocton and Tuscaloosa High.

Mr. G. N. Meredith of Anniston spent a while in Montevallo last week visiting his friends, the family of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Rogan. Mr. Meredith lived in Montevallo when he was a young man.



SAM HALL

Hon. Sam Hall, prominent fraternal leader of Birmingham will make the principal address at the Picnic at Dogwood next Saturday.

Dogwood All Set For The Fourth

FRATERNAL DAY AND PICNIC EXPECTED TO DRAW LARGE CROWD

It is announced that everything is ready for the pleasure, convenience and comfort of the thoussands who are expected to attend the Fraternal Day and Picnic at Dogwood on Saturday of this week, July the Fourth.

The occasion is sponsored by the Improved Order of Red Men, and other patriotic and fraternal organizations have taken an active part in the preparations, and will be represented in a number of features of the day's program.

Among the special attractions on the program are three baseball games, patriotic speaking, foot races, sack races, and other contests for the children. Everyone is assured that the wide variety of the program will furnish something to attract the attention of every person in attendance.

A specially nuique and attractive feature which all will want to see is the sham battle that will be staged by the red men against the palefaces. It will be a replica of the pioneer days when the first Americans stood bravely and defiantly against the approach of the palefaces who came and pushed them back from their native hunting grounds.

During the day there will be plenty of refreshments and good things to eat, which may be secured on the picnic grounds.

Everybody is especially urged to come and hear Sam Hill, outstanding fraternal leader, of Birmingham, speak on "The New Americanism." There will also be other speakers on subjects of Americanism, Patriotism, and Organization.

A hearty welcome is extended to everybody to come to Dogwood on the Fourth, and have a good time.

Death Removes An Old Citizen

Mr. B. Tom Randall, a life-long resident of this community, died at 10 o'clock Monday night at his home twi miles east of Montevallo on the Calera Highway Mr. Randall had been in failing health for several months. Born July 25, 1857, he had resided in the same house all his life. He had all along been engaged in farming pursuits at which he had been very successful, until failing health forced his retiirement from active work He was well known and respected.

He leaves no immediate relatives, his wife having preceded him to the grave about two months ago.

Funeral services were conducted from the residence Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock and interment followed in Randall Cemetery adjoining the residence.

Mr. Earl M. Hearne, secretary of the Alabama Petroleum Industries Committee, attended the organization meeting for Shelby County Tuesday night, and made an address concerning the subject of taxation of petroleum products.

The next meeting will be held at Calera on Tuesday, July 28. In the meantime, it is stated, a membership campaign will be put on. Every person whose principal business is in connection with serving the motoring public with his motoring needs is invited to join. There are no dues to be paid for membership in the organization.

New Home Sought For State Archives

MOVEMENT IS STARTED BY AMERICAN LEGION OF ALABAMA

Montgomery, June 22. — The American Legion of Alabama today started a campaign to raise $1,000,000 for an Alabama Memorial Building to be erected near the State Capitol. The proposed fireproof building will hold the state's valuable historical records, now scattered in various buildings—some of them practically fire traps.

Dr. Francis Marion Inge of Mobile, commander of the Alabama department of the Legion, announced that county quotas would be based on an average of $6 for each Alabamian who entered the World War. Since Alabama sent about 83,000 men to the war, their quota would amount to nearly $500,000. Other citizens will be urged to make contributions to the fund.

Efforts will be made to obtain a Federal appropriation to match the half-million dollars raised in Alabama.

The proposed building, to be situated at the South end of the Capitol, will also provide state headquarters for the Legion, Spanish-American War Veterans, United Daughters of the Confederacy and other patriotic organizations. An auditorium seating 1,000 persons will be used for patriotic and educational meetings.

The building with its classic columns will harmonize with the architecture of the Capitol.

Baptist Church

"Witnessing for Him" will be the Pastor's theme at the Sunday morning worship hour. The subject for the evening will be, "Good Citizenship."

Sunday School meets at 9:45 a.m. The Baptist Training Union meets at 7:00 p.m.

Summer School Shows Increase

MANY VISITORS ENGAGED IN ACTIVITIES ON COLLEGE CAMPUS

The enrollment at the first term of summer school at Alabama College has exceeded that of recent summers according to announcement of E. H. Wills, registrar. The first term began June 11 and the second will commence July 23, continuing until August 26.

The meetings which remain to be held during the summer are The Progressive Education Regional Conference, July 1-3; The Student Career Conference—July 8-10; The School of Intruction for Vocational Home Econmics Teachers, July 27-August 15; The Camp for Girls, July 27-Augut 22.

A feature which has attracted many visitors as well as students is the Demonstration School in Progressive Education which coincides with the first term of summer school. The School will be open for observation until its close July 22.

A faculty of fifty-seven members and a group of special lecturers are offering the summer work here in such subjects as art, biology, chemistry, physics, education, English, history, home economics, mathematics, modern languages, music, physical education, psychology, sociology and speech. The first term is six weeks in length, classes being scheduled five days a week; the second is to be five weeks in length with classes six days a week. The summer school is under the direction of Dean T. H. Napier, with the assistance of Dr. M. L. Orr, director of the training schools and teacher training. The Demonstration School is under the direction of Dr. Alice V. Keliher, chairman of the Commission on Human Relations of the Progressive Education Association, who has taken part in this work for the past several summers at Alabama College.

Middle Street Is Now Being Paved

NEW BRIDGE WILL BE OPEN ABOUT THE FIRST OF AUGUST

Work is in progress at present on the paving of Middle Street from the end of the old pavement at the Mulkey residence, to the new bridge across Shoals Creek. The base of crushed limerock is being layed, and when this is completed the road will be opened to traffic and allowed to stand for sixty days before the black top suface is applied.

The new bridge is ready to be opened, which will be done as quickly as the pavement base on Middle Street is completed. This, it is stated by those in charge of the work, will be about the first of August.

Some of the residents on East Boundary Street made up their minds they were ready to get out of the dust, and accordingly, put up the wherewith necessary to have their street paved while the work was in progress on Middle Street. It was originally planned to pave the entire block on East Boundary Street between Middle Street and Shelby Street but this arrangement did not carry through, and only a portion of the block will have pavement.

The road from Montevallo to Calera is closed while final preparation fo the base is being made ready for pavment to begin. Traffic to Calera is detoured through the Spring Creek route Traffic to the south goes through the cut off, entering the Birmingham-Montgomery highway at Shaw's Store.

OFFICERS CHOSEN BY CLERKS LOCAL IN MONTEVALLO

At the regular time for election of officers, the following were chosen at the regular meeting of Clerks Local No. 785, of Montevalo:

President, D. M. Carr; first vice president, John M. Woolley; second vice president, Mrs. H. L. Morse; recording secretary, Mrs. Mrs. J. W. Bolton; guide and guardian, J. C. Joiner.

The subsequent resignation of Mr. Carr as president brought the necessity for a special meeting to elect one to take his place. At this special meeting of the Local, the following officers were designated:

President, John M. Woolley; first vice president, Mrs. H. L. Morse; second vice president, not named; recording secretary, Mrs. J. W. Bolton; guide and guardian, J. C. Joiner.

Miss Mary Wofford of Cartersville, Ga., and Betty Peebles of Aliceville are guests of their grandmother, Mrs. C. L. Meroney.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

DEMO CONVENTION IS COLORFUL AFFAIR

Roosevelt and Garner Are The Whole Show at Philadelphia Convention

By W. C. WEBBER

Convention Hall, Philadelphia, Pa.—"Franklin Delano Roosevelt for President—!"

Philadelphia's monster convention hall rocked as 18,000 delegates and spectators leaped to their feet roaring approval of their standard bearer in the coming election. It was a jubilant, spontaneous outburst, the beginning of a demonstration seldom equalled in convention history, and the climax of four days' waiting by most of the delegates.

All through this rather tame convention, the name of Roosevelt was magic. The somewhat apathetic audience, judged by convention standards, could be stirred into animation only by the utterance of his name. But the demonstrations on those occasions left nothing to be desired. They were not the carefully-managed, chairmen-directed affairs of other conventions held in the past, but the heartfelt expression of people to whom the Democratic candidate is the hope of country and party. Up would rise the State standards as chairmen, delegates and alternates swarmed into the aisles—a cheering, dancing, singing throng. The giant organ and the brass band perched high on the west side of the convention hall would be drowned out in the tumult—and the convention chairman held helpless until the demonstrations finally would wear themselves out.

Is Colorful Scene

All the usual trimmings of a national political convention were on hand at Philadelphia. The approach to the convention hall cluttered with the customary army of hawkers of novelties which ranged all the way from souvenir buttons to pseudo-brass horns—the milling mob of onlookers anxious for a glimpse of the great and near great—badges, badges, everywhere, and more badges—all were there.

Inside the hall a shouting, singing, laughing crowd filling every seat—great spotlights playing over the scene—telegraph boys rushing copy from the press sections where perspiring newspaper workers toiled at the task of catching the next edition—movie cameramen—news photographers swarming over the hall—intent radio workers—the gaily decorated platform—pictures of the candidates—State standards — microphones — flags and bunting—the blaring brass band and the rumbling organ that never quite get together on any tune—the wild applause whenever Dixie is played—a typical convention scene.

Platform Holds Interest

There was no doubt as to the final nominations—or that the convention would unanimously endorse the New Deal. It was Franklin D. Roosevelt and John N. Garner in a unanimity that has not been accorded a Democratic ticket since Cleveland was nominated.

Since there were no other candidates, chief interest was centered in the platform and in the abrogation of the Democratic party's two-thirds rule which has governed nominations since the party was founded.

The platform was completed only after a 13-hour session of the subcommittee held behind closed doors. Chief difficulty was in evolving a satisfactory wording of the party's stand on the constitutional amendment issue. Full pressure of radical groups was brought to bear, but without effect. The final draft omitted this flat declaration, but left the question largely open to whatever action might be taken by party leaders during the coming campaign. James A. Farley, the national chairman, visited the committee room himself about an hour before the preliminary draft was finally completed and he is believed to have placed the administration seal of approval on the compromise paragraph at that time.

Formation of this plank was one of the events that did not run according to schedule. Anticipating difficulty only from the conservative quarter, Senator Robert Wagner of New York, had selected as members of the drafting group six New Deal Senators, one ex-Senator, two administration officials, two delegates with liberal tendencies, and Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, the only conservative, but one who is sufficiently practical to recognize the overwhelming odds of 11 to 1.

Proceedings Strike Snag

But something struck a snag. Weary news hawks watched through the night outside the room where the subcommittee was meeting. Finally at 5 o'clock in the morning, the doors swung open and the members, obviously exhausted after the session, filed out in grim silence. Even Senator Wagner, who is usually very courteous, was inclined to be curt. But from other sources it was learned that this was not a staged affair, designed to impress a skeptical world, but that the group had spent the night wrangling over the major controversial points without reaching any conclusions. Final accord was reached in the afternoon session.

The final form of the platform puts the party on record as favoring amendment of the Constitution if necessary for the enactment of Federal or State laws "adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security." It is understood that President Roosevelt desired to win from the committee a plank sufficiently vague in its language to permit him either to advocate or ignore the issue surrounding the adoption of such an amendment.

JOHN N. GARNER

Other points in the platform which had been awaited with deep interest, particularly those dealing with agriculture and with labor, were left equally open to future action by party leaders. The section on agriculture pledges a continuance of soil conservation and domestic allotment programs, recognizes "the evils of farm tenancy" and pledges the full co-operation of the government in long term refinancing of farm indebtedness at the lowest possible rates of interest, and encourages practical, farm co-operatives.

Ignore Labor Demand

The labor plank was something of a surprise to many who had looked for a more definite declaration. After pointing out various New Deal accomplishments, the plan reads:

"We will continue to protect the worker and we will guard his rights, both as wage earner and consumer, in the production and consumption of all commodities including coal and water power and other natural resource products."

A demand from organized labor that the party agree to support a constitutional demand which would invalidate any Supreme Court decision that was not arrived at by at least a six to three vote, fell on barren soil

However, it is considered as fairly certain that President Roosevelt will deal more specifically with these questions in his forthcoming campaign. The way has been left completely open for action by the candidate without him being bound by specific hampering platform declarations.

There was a drive to have a Townsend plan plank inserted in the platform, but it was doomed to failure. Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington, refused to submit the proposal to the committee although under instructions from his State's delegation to do so. The Townsend adherents were blocked at every turn and their recommendations were never presented. The platform, however, endorses the Social Security act, and pledges to erect upon its foundations a structure of economic security.

Promise Public Works

Determination to proceed with the public works program in dealing with unemployment is also voiced by the party declaration. More than five million people have been re-employed, according to the platform, but where private business is unable to cope with the problem, work prevailing wages should be provided in cooperation with state and local governments on useful public projects.

There was much speculation as to what would be the exact wording of the plank dealing with civil service. The Cleveland convention had brought this issue into prominence, and it was necessary that the Democratic party express its views on the subject. Immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service to all non-policy-making positions in the Federal service was pledged. The party also declared for placing all continuing positions which have been exempt from its operation under the civil service law.

Protection of consumer, extension of rural electrification, continuance of the housing program, enforcement of criminal and civil provisions of the existing anti-trust laws, and strengthening of the latter by new legislation were also pledged.

Rumors Run Riot

The question of sound money came in for its share of the rumors. Guesses, most of which came from "authoritative sources" ranged from unrestricted inflation to an immediate return to the gold standard were rife. The final platform draft states that while the party approves of a permanently sound currency so stabilized as to prevent wide fluctuations in value, it believes in a currency which will "permit full utilization of the country's resources." Reduction in government expenses which will eventually permit a balanced budget and reduction of the national debt were also pledged.

President Roosevelt's famous "Good Neighbor" policy was incorporated into the platform as the Democratic stand on foreign policy, as was the continuance of the present plan of trade treaties.

Best received of the convention speeches in the opinion of many was the keynote address of Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky. His excoriation of the Republican party and praise of the New Deal accomplishments was genuine political oratory which combined all the arts of sarcasm, humor, logic and pathos in a skillful blend which aroused the audience to wild enthusiasm. He centered his attack on the record of the Republican party during the twelve years prior to 1932, the policies of Herbert Hoover while in office, and the Liberty League. Little mention was made by him of the current Republican candidates.

Scores Landon

The latter task was left for Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, who spoke in the role of a delegate-at-large instead of that of permanent chairman. Delay in the report of the credentials committee was responsible for this unusual change. Robinson charged that Landon is preparing to bolt the Republican platform, citing his famous telegram to the Cleveland convention which he pointed out, was sent only after the nomination was assured. Robinson also scored the Supreme Court for its ruling invalidating the Guffey soft coal control law and New York State's minimum wage law.

The only real trouble within the convention hall came when a group in the gallery displayed banners proclaiming Al Smith as a real Democrat. No sooner had the banners been unfurled than fist fights broke out in the sections where the Al Smith banners were exhibited. Order was quickly restored, and most of the dissenting group left the hall.

Mack Nominates Roosevelt

Enthusiasm in the convention hall reached its maximum Friday when Judge John E. Mack of New York placed the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination. The delegates let loose a delirium of sound that almost tore the top off the sound meter which stood at the left of the stage. The demonstration which followed made all previous affairs of this kind look weak. It was a genuine tribute to a party leader.

John Nance Garner, Texas idol, was nominated for the office of Vice-President on Saturday morning by a jubilant, yelling convention. Ten gallon hats sailed through the air as the Texas delegation whooped it up for the State's favorite son. Garner is genuinely popular with the rank and file of the Democratic party, and the convention left no doubt about it.

But even this demonstration did not compare with that of Saturday night when Roosevelt delivered his acceptance speech at Franklin Field, huge stadium of the University of Pennsylvania. All through the week the demand for tickets to this event had far exceeded the supply, and when Roosevelt mounted the platform the big bowl was packed. As he took his place at the speaker's stand, the famous Roosevelt smile showed brightly, but to those close enough to see there seemed to be more than pleasure mirrored in the nominee's face. When the crowd gave full vent to its delight in their chosen leader, if there was a shade of mistiness in Roosevelt's eyes, he could hardly be blamed. No man could receive such a tribute and remain untouched.

BRISBANE

THIS WEEK

Land Ho!
The Changing Ocean
Safety and Speed
Much for Science

Arthur Brisbane

On Board Steamship Normandie.—Four nights from New York and the ship is at Southampton. The Isle of Wight is on your right. Passengers are landing for England. On your left is France, across the water. You land there later. On old crossings passengers watched eagerly for the first land. Now crossing and landing are as exciting as a trip by rail from Chicago to Lake Forest, or from Wall street to Forty-Second street by subway. You are in Europe before you realize that you have started. The poetry of travel has departed with fast ships on the ocean and automobiles instead of camels on the desert.

No matter how often you cross this Atlantic ocean, or the North American continent, the crossing is always different and interesting. The ocean, like the wide plains, is forever changing.

Two days ago the waves looked like playthings for children. Last night the ocean changed its mind and rolled the waves up high with a shrieking wind. The steward said, "We shall have to fasten the arm chairs tomorrow," but the heavy ship paid no attention to the waves. The ocean changed its mind again and calmed down.

A speedometer telling how fast the ship moves is operated by a mechanism below the keel that records the speed of the rushing water. Burning oil produces steam; steam power is converted into electric power, and that drives the ship. The captain always knows how deep the ocean is beneath him; an electric contrivance sends a sound wave down through the water to the bottom, which sends back an echo.

Knowing the speed at which sound travels through water, it is easy to calculate the depth. The machine does it for you. It is a feeble sound—one hundred and sixty thousand vibrations to the second. No human ear could pick it up, but the machine records it. Twenty-five thousand vibrations per second is the limit of your ear, and that is not bad for a primitive contrivance like a human being.

Newton D. Baker, secretary of war in the "big" war, tells graduating students of the Massachusetts Institute for Technology it is their duty to "carry science into politics." Scientists, Mr. Baker thought, must seek for "the solution of world problems when the great international crisis comes, as it surely will come."

A sufficient "great crisis" seems to be here now, with many countries wanting to fight each other, different classes already fighting each other, and in this richest country in the world—ten million human beings living practically on charity.

If that is not a real crisis, few would care to see one.

George Bernard Shaw, not yet eighty, says, "I must give up public speaking, I am too old." That surprises you from a Celt and an Irishman. At eighty many men have been vigorous in thought and body; for instance, Pope Leo, Von Moltke, Gladstone, Michelangelo.

Not one of those, however, suffered from handicaps that have aged George Bernard Shaw prematurely; he is a vegetarian and a teetotaler.

In spite of England's pitifully weak and belated backdown on sanctions, due to London's fear of Mussolini's air fleet; a backdown denounced as cowardice by Lloyd George, Britain, for face-saving purposes, will maintain a great fleet in the Mediterranean. Mussolini will welcome such convenient air and submarine targets near home as a sort of British hostages to fortune.

M. Auriol announces that France will not devalue the franc any further. It has already been reduced by 80 per cent, as though our dollar had been knocked down to twenty cents instead of fifty-nine cents. Prime Minister Blum knows that it does not pay to scare capital out of its wits, something that our best Washington minds have still to learn. The French workmen will have their forty-hour week and the strikes are about over.

Returning to the real American interest, the defeat of Joe Louis, young gentlemen and old will observe that it is most important in all undertakings not to be afraid, worn out or cowardly. Fighters that Louis had encountered saw before them "an invincible conqueror of men."

All Set for Big Race

Washington. — The Republicans and the Democrats have their Presidential tickets. The elephant and the donkey have their jockeys for the campaign. The tumult and the shouting—and the blistering, withering fire of politics, have begun.

It is a long way to the finish line where the checkered flag falls for the winner of the race. But the big fight is really on and it is interesting as well as significant to note how it has started.

It is always a sure sign that party leaders respect and fear opponents when they start a campaign with a declaration that the enemy is weak; that his selection resulted from chicanery or bossism, or that the particular candidate selected has been put up at a sacrifice. That is what has happened already in the current campaign, and you can expect it to continue because it is stating no secret to disclose that the New Dealers fear Gov. Landon of Kansas, the Republican nominee, and that the Republican leadership, beneath the surface, are wishing for a clairvoyant or crystal gazer to tell them how much of a chance they have to beat President-candidate Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Of course, no astute political observer would dare predict at this stage of the game who the winner will be. On the other hand, it is part of the psychology of the game of politics for politicians to claim everything in sight. Yet, I know that each side expects a real battle, a horse race. The November result is pretty likely to be determined by events of the next two months. At the end of that time, trends will be evident and some appraisal of the campaign will be possible. In the interim, claims and high sounding phrases will be offered by the basketful and enthusiasm will be promoted. Yet, the end, the result, will not begin to be evident until afterward because this is the season for the tumult and shouting.

I cannot concur in the claims already advanced by Postmaster General-Chairman Farley that the election is in the bag for Mr. Roosevelt any more than I can believe that Chairman John Hamilton of the Republicans is equipped with special foresight enabling him to say that Governor Landon is a sure winner.

I said above that the campaign has all the appearance of a horse race and a close one. To that extent it is a condition much more favorable to the Republicans than obtained three months ago when, as I recall, I suggested that if the election were held at that time, Mr. Roosevelt had a 60-40 advantage over anybody the Republicans could name. To say now, therefore, that the race probably will be close necessarily indicates two things: unification of Republican strength, and some mistakes by the Democratic leadership (one may properly inquire what has brought about the unification of the Republicans). The answer seems rather obvious. It is that the Republican party has been reorganized from tip to toe. The reorganization has been more sweeping and more effective and the result much more satisfactory to the country than most political observers had any reason to expect. I say "satisfactory to the country" because the Republican party is a major political unit and, though at present a minority party, will come back to power some time. The Democrats have been a minority party, and the course of human events has witnessed it restored to power. So the people have a stake in either party, and whichever one proceeds to improve its political structure is giving something of vital value to the country as a whole.

* * *

G. O. P. Cleans House

The Democratic attack on the Republicans for the last sixteen years has been concentrated to a large extent on the charge that the Republicans were boss-controlled. Chairman Farley has continually harped on that alleged condition. When the Republicans did their house cleaning job at Cleveland, they took away an important issue from the Democrats, but even so some of the Democrats and some independents like Senator George Norris of Nebraska, refused to accept the purging as genuine.

Senator Norris disclosed his attitude very definitely the other day when he broadcast a radio speech. He employed the time-worn allegation that the Cleveland convention was dominated by "special interests," and that the platform adopted there was plainly reactionary."

Senator Norris has not supported a Republican candidate for 12 years, although he ran for re-election six years ago as a Republican. He believes in Mr. Roosevelt and insists that Mr. Roosevelt alone can save the country.

It is to be assumed also that Mr. Roosevelt will have the support of the LaFollettes, Senator Bob and Governor Phil, in Wisconsin. These men, however, have labeled themselves as Progressives, and have not carried the party label of either the Democrats or Republicans.

There will be others of the same warp and woof. There will be old-line Democrats who will do as Senator Copeland of New York has done, take a walk. Alfred E. Smith is not going to support the New Dealers nor will a great many of his followers. So, it is obvious that each party will be subjected to defections of one kind or another.

* * *

Now, concerning mistakes that have been made:

Some Mistakes

Chairman Farley made a bad mistake politically when he said that Alfred M. Landon was "just the little-known governor of a typical prairie state." That remark has been rising to haunt the Democratic chairman almost daily since it escaped from his lips, and unless I miss my guess he will hear it repeated, thrown into his teeth, so many times between now and November that the words will give him a stomachache equivalent to green apples.

The reasons this remark was a serious blunder are two. First and foremost is that every state in the Union rightfully has justified pride of its people, its commerce and industry and its future prospects. Every state feels profound resentment when its capacity to do great things is questioned. Consequently, when Mr. Farley catalogued Kansas as a typical prairie state and its governor as little-known, there was a surging tidal wave of resentment, and it was not confined to Kansas alone.

The second reason why Mr. Farley's remark cut the wrong way was that Mr. Farley is a New Yorker and a Tammanyite. There is something repulsive to the millions of mid-westerners about Tammany, and a very great many residents of prairie states long have objected to the attempt of certain New Yorkers to "run things" for the whole United States.

Another mistake that has been made, really a series of mistakes, is the coercion that has been permitted to go on among those receiving relief. It is not exactly fair to charge Mr. Farley and President Roosevelt with these, yet I am inclined to believe they could have prevented local Democratic politicians from attempting to force relief clients to vote the Democratic ticket. That condition has obtained in as many as fifteen states.

It is one of those things in politics that naturally causes a revulsion of feeling, yet it is one of those things with which the leaders possibly may have had nothing directly to do. The fact that they might have prevented it and did not is accepted by the average voter in exactly the same light as though a written order directing such procedure had been issued.

The handling of the tax question by the administration in this session of congress has not been of a character warranting too much praise. It has alienated many influential persons who might otherwise have supported Mr. Roosevelt.

* * *

On the Other Hand

On the other side of the picture, the Republicans can make mistakes yet, plenty of them. They have an advantage over the Democrats in one regard: they have not been charged with the responsibility of government for the last three and one-half years, and therefore will not have to answer for mistakes in administration. It lies in the hands of the Republican managers, therefore, to prevent political mistakes between now and election if they are capable of so doing. They have started out with an offensive campaign and have an opportunity to continue it, whereas the Democrats can conduct an offensive campaign only so long as they can avoid entering onto a defense of Roosevelt New Deal policies.

I understand that the Democratic national committee is loaded to the dashboard with material for attack, but from this stage of the battle it seems quite apparent that they are going to need plans for defense as well as offense, and they will not have enthusiastic support from some spots in their own army.

The Democrats are prepared to attack Governor Landon on the theory that the country cannot feel sure of his plans and policies; that he has done nothing to enable the country to appraise him and that there is no assurance, in event of his election, that he is a big enough man for the job of Chief Executive. On the other hand, the Republicans can counter-attack by using the language of Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, who declared that no man nor party disregarding its pledges was to be trusted, and right there is where the New Dealers must begin to defend.

Scythe Remains Where Placed in Tree by Civil War Soldier

The historic tree known as the Scythe tree is on the grounds of the Birmingham (Ala.) ancestral home of the Paul Earle Greene family.

During the Civil war Robert Earle, then in his teens, enlisted in the first company to leave Elyton. The day his company left, the lad was cutting hay. He placed his scythe on a small tree in the front yard and said, "Let this scythe stay until I return from war." The youth was killed and the aged tree with the scythe growing in it is one of the show places of Birmingham.

It had taken Harwood barely more than 24 hours to get his man. "He certainly worked fast," Barry paid mental tribute; "once he'd identified that voice on the phone." Some time before the evening papers would reach Southampton. What was the difference? "Nothing much matters now," Pat had said, and it didn't. They'd probably release young Ridder tomorrow, and, two days later, old Ridder'd be in New York. "I've got plenty to do," Barry said to himself, and to Evans, "I've had a cable from Mr. Ridder. He's on the Bremen, arriving Saturday. You'd better get your wife back to town."

They were at the hospital now, and Evans made no reply.

Peggy came into the reception room. "I can't stay," she began. "Jacky's up there. He says everything's all right, but, somehow, I'm worried."

"Can you stand a bit of good news?" Barry asked.

"I don't know. I haven't had any in so long—"

"It's about Jack."

He wanted to "break it gently," but Peg couldn't wait.

"He's— What is it? Just another clue? Or— Go on, please!"

"They've arrested Morano. Peter phoned Judge Hambidge. He says Jack'll be out tomorrow."

Peg didn't move.

At least her body didn't but she ran her tongue over her lips, and her hands opened and closed spasmodically.

After a moment: "No foolin'?" she said.

It was an absurd thing to say, but, in a long experience with suffering, Barry had learned that just such things are said under stress.

"No foolin'."

Tears came into the girl's eyes, and flowed down her cheeks.

"It's in tonight's Globe," Barry told her. "The papers aren't here yet, but I'll ask Evans to bring you one. There doesn't seem to be any possibility of mistake. I'll go in to town by the first train in the morning. I'll take care of everything, and keep in close touch with you."

"Thanks," Peggy said.

One syllable, but Barry thought he had never heard so much praise and gratitude before. His own eyes were threatened with moisture, so he declared, "You'd better get back to the boy. Pat's going to phone later, and I'll ring up tonight. That's all now."

And he left the room as abruptly as Pat had left him, a few minutes ago.

"Home?" Evans asked.

Barry nodded. That word was the last straw.

"Anything else, sir?" Evans inquired, in front of the Ridder house.

"Yes, please. The instant the evening papers get to Southampton, will you bring me a copy of the Globe, and take one to Mrs. Rogers?" He gave the chauffeur a quarter. "Kelly's murderer's under arrest," he continued, "and we're through 'sleuthing.' You'll find it all in the Globe."

"Yes, sir."

Evans was thinking of something else.

"You understand — about Mrs. Evans?" Barry asked.

"Yes, sir." A pause. "You ain't staying here yourself, I take it."

"I am leaving tomorrow."

"I was wondering," Evans said, "would you like us to come with you?"

"Very much," Barry answered, "but it can't be done."

"You ain't always going to live in a hotel—begging your pardon, sir. Mrs. Evans is a mighty good cook."

"Thanks," Barry returned, "but my cooking's going to be provided by the state of New York. You may as well know the truth, Evans. I'm not Mr. Ridder. Never was. I jimmied my way into this house for a night's shelter, and then you and Willetts came, and thought I was Ridder, and I let you go on thinking so. The game's up now. The boss gets back Saturday, and what happens then is anyone's guess."

Evans said, "Yes, sir."

"That's all, except I'd be glad if you'd tell Willetts, and the rest. It'll save me introducing the subject."

"Yes, sir."

"And better stand by tonight. I may have to drive back to the hospital."

"Yes, sir . . . I was wondering—"

Barry grinned.

"You do a good deal of that, don't you?"

"I was wondering how you'd like to go to my sister's. You know—where I live in town. You could lay low there a while, and then slip away somewhere."

"That's swell of you," Barry responded. "Much obliged. But I think I've done all the slipping that's good for a man. Tell Willetts, when you get a chance, and remember to bring me the Globe."

It was close on to five o'clock then, and "plenty to do" before dinner. Willetts wasn't about—luckily. Barry let himself in with his key, and ran up to his room. Should he pack first, or get the rest of it out of the way?

He decided to begin with "the rest of it."

From a long envelope, in his inside pocket, he took all his vouchers. Then, on a sheet of note paper, he wrote, "Received . . . Cash $200." Beneath that, he listed the check from Mrs. Ridder, and "board, lodging, etc." Under "Disbursed," he credited himself with the same check, which had been banked for Peggy, and with whatever sums he had given her, and a few minor expenditures. "That leaves my account straight," Barry thought. "Except for unlawful entry, tampering with the mails, and pretending to be somebody I wasn't."

It left his bank account far from straight. When he'd subtracted "Disbursed" from "Received," and made out his check for the balance, the result was a rather startling overdraft. "All right," Barry said. "I'll sell out my wardrobe. Studs, and cuff-links, and things. I guess I won't need 'em any more."

He wanted—terribly—to write a letter to Mrs. Ridder. It would have begun, "Dear Mother: (Not mine, of course.)" That was too maudlin. "Me: I'm just a sob-sister," Barry berated himself, tucking his accounts, accompanied only by his check, into an envelope, and inscribing it, "Mrs. John Clarke Ridder, Addressed." He propped the envelope against a calendar, and, for a moment, sat looking at it. "I wish I could find my mother," he had thought, his first morning at Southampton. He wished it even more fervently now, after all these weeks of "make believe."

"I've got to write Pat," he decided, at last. "I certainly owe her an apology, and a 'good-by.'" This letter certainly mustn't be "maudlin."

"Dear Pat," he started. "Dear Pat: (I suppose I should write 'Miss Hambidge' now, but I can't.) You wouldn't let me say I was sorry for what happened today, but I am. I won't try to excuse myself. You'll forget it, I hope, as quickly as you'll forget everything else in this grotesque association. I won't forget. You're the realest lady I ever knew. So this is thanks and good-by to you and your father, and—most sincerely trusting that your worries, like Peg's, are over—I remain always respectfully, Barry Gilbert."

Packing proved complicated. Most of his clothing—paid for long ago—was out here, and had to be taken in. But there was no suit-case. Neat, to the end, Barry folded his belongings into two tailor's boxes. He hadn't quite finished folding when Willetts knocked.

"Evening paper, sir."

"Thank you."

"And your key, sir. You left it in the front door."

"You'd better keep it. And there's a letter for Mrs. Ridder on the desk there. I'd like her to get it when she arrives."

"Very good, sir. Dinner at seven?"

"If you please."

That was all. No reference to Barry's packing, or the confession that—Barry felt sure—had been relayed by Evans half an hour ago. "I'm taking the 7:21 back to town tomorrow morning," Barry said, as Willetts was closing the door, but Willetts only answered, "Yes, sir," and went on closing it.

Morano hadn't been arrested. So much was clear from the screaming headlines Barry scanned. However, "that ends it," Barry felt sure. "Harwood did a swell job. Why didn't I follow up the number of that cab? It didn't seem of the least importance when the taxi-driving medico gave it to me. I might have known it was, though, when Ernie wrote it down in his notebook."

Dinner was uneventful—with Willetts remembering his "position" and behaving as any well-trained butler might have been expected to behave. Afterward, Barry phoned Peg. She had seen the Globe, but was still dubious. "Do you really think they'll let Jack out now?"

"Certainly. They're not going to get that sheet started again on Tammany Hall."

"And it'll be tomorrow, you think?"

"Probably. I'll keep in touch with you," Barry promised, and finished his packing. Then he re-read the Globe story, and marked parts of it—to ponder in town.

Throughout breakfast next morning, Barry wondered whether this remarkable butler could know he was "going for good." "I've left a few parting gifts on my desk," he ventured, at last. "For cook, and everybody. Will you take care of 'em?"

"Yes, sir."

"I shan't be back. I suppose Evans told you."

"Yes, sir."

That was too much.

Barry said, "Well, what do you think about it?"

"That's not for me to say, sir. My place is to obey orders. I've tried to do that, sir. If I've made a mistake, it hasn't been for want of trying."

"Your mistake was quite natural," Barry reassured him. "You'd been told you'd find young Mr. Ridder here, and you found me. I said I was young Mr. Ridder. That seems to let you out."

"Yes, sir."

Willetts hesitated.

"Anyway, that wasn't the mistake I had in mind, sir. That was a natural mistake. I thought you were a gentleman. I still think so. It's five after seven, sir."

Barry just made the train. At Speonk, he bought a morning paper, and read of Morano's death. Even the conservative Times regarded that as the end of the case against Rogers. "Night Club Owner, Accused of Kelly Murder, Killed Resisting Arrest," its headlines began, and ended with, "Move to Free Rogers Expected Today." Barry pored over both stories—that in the Times and that in last night's Globe—all the way to New York. "Well," he reflected, "one of my suspects was guilty, anyway. Peter Winslow can't laugh that off."

And, suddenly, he let the newspaper fall, and leaned forward, with his wrists on his knees.

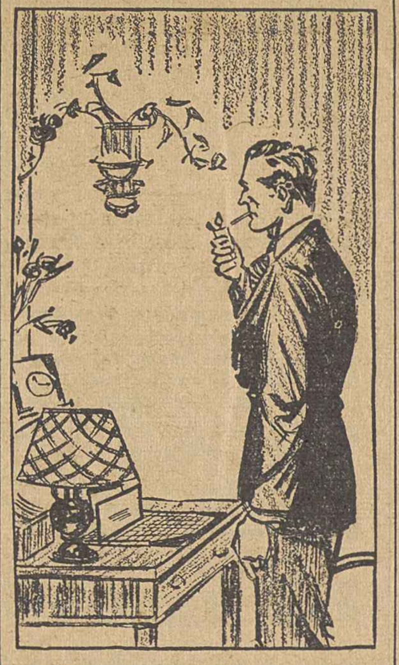
"It's queer, though," he said, almost aloud, to the click of the wheels. "Very queer. Very damned queer."

At the station, he stopped for a time-table. "Is there one," he asked, "that gives all the trains out of here?"

The man grinned at him, thrusting forward three thick folders.

Ten o'clock found him at Winslow's office.

"Mr. Winslow won't be in today," Peter's secretary announced. "Mrs. Winslow had a bad heart attack last night. So bad that Mr. Winslow telephoned to the Hambidges. They're with Mrs. Winslow now."



"That Leaves My Account Straight," Barry Thought.

"Was that your last news?"

"No. Mr. Winslow called up half an hour ago to say that Mrs. Winslow's a little better."

"Had he seen this?"

Barry indicated the headline in the Times.

"Yes. He talked to Mr. Colton about it. Mr. Colton's one of the young men in the office, you know. He's gone to the district attorney to ask for Rogers' release. Mr. Winslow said if you called I was to tell you that would be only a matter of hours. Should you like us to phone you when there's anything certain?"

"Please. I suppose there's no use of my going to the Tombs now?"

"Not much. Mr. Colton's going there from the district attorney's. We'll phone you."

Barry phoned Peggy, and then strolled across Forty-second street. It was a delightful morning, and his rather comic bundles had been dispatched to his hotel from the station.

"No sense in my following 'em yet," Barry told himself. "I don't want to sit around that cursed room all day."

He didn't want to walk all day, and he did want to see what the other papers had to say of last night's events in the Cocoanut Bar. At Fifth avenue, therefore, he turned into the public library. The reports were much alike — "Night club proprietor killed resisting arrest" and "The indictment against Jay Rogers, now held for the Kelly murder, probably will be dismissed today." Barry sat, almost alone, in the "newspaper room," turning the case over in his mind. Then he asked for old files of one of the tabloids.

He was nearly an hour finding an account of the Winslow wedding. Without any definite knowledge of the date, it was a bit like looking for the proverbial needle in a haystack. Barry's curiosity was rewarded, at last, when he stumbled upon a pictorial front page headed, "Lawyer Weds Convict's Widow." The ceremony had taken place at St. Stephen's. There were pictures of the church and of the convict —"George Selby (inset) and Love Nest Where He Took His Bride." The smudgy little "inset" might have been a portrait of Nicholas Murray Butler or Jack Dempsey, and the house might have been any house, anywhere. There was an obviously faked photograph of a hold-up, and an obviously genuine one of "Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Leaving St. Stephen's." "Gosh," Barry reflected: "No wonder Mrs. Winslow had a nervous breakdown!"

The story, on the second page, was in the best tabloid tradition. "Five years ago," it began, "Peter Winslow, obscure young attorney, secured the acquittal of George Selby, charged with participating in the robbery of a candy store in the Bronx. Yesterday, Peter Winslow, rich and famous criminal lawyer, and George Selby's widow were the principal figures in what was to have been a secret ceremony at St. Stephen's."

The present Mrs. Winslow had run away with George Selby while he was a cadet in a military school. They had come to New York, rented the "love nest," and been "blissfully happy" until Selby ran out of money, and was compelled to take his wife to a boarding house. He had been arrested there, for the candy store robbery, in April, 1921. Peter Winslow had got him off, but, the following June, he was caught in another robbery in Philadelphia, and sentenced to a long term in the State Penitentiary. With two other convicts, "Lefty" Miller and "Mugs" Scanlan, he had escaped in October, 1923. Penniless, the men "staged a hold-up that same night in Fairmount Park. The victim called for help, and Selby killed him. Scanlan was shot dead by a police officer, and Selby, attempting to get away, jumped into the river, and was drowned. His body was found two weeks later, entangled in an anchor chain."

Winslow had given Mrs. Selby work in his office, and "three years after Selby's death, love culminated in the ceremony at St. Stephen's."

That explained a good deal, Barry thought remembering the soft, round, pink little woman with worried eyes. It explained Peter's protective attitude. It might explain his quick interest in the Rogers case, in which, Barry had told Winslow, Peggy had been "putting up such a game fight to make a man of her husband."

"That sort of thing always gets me," Peter had observed. "A woman tied up to some man who's not worthy of her, and in love with him."

Peter's "Julie" had been in love with her first husband, then. And he with her, evidently, to judge by what the tabloids said of their happiness. "Must have been something good in that chap," Barry reasoned. "Probably realized what his wife was trying to do for him. We're a curious mixture."

He was still brooding over curious mixtures, and other things, when a clock struck somewhere, and reminded him that, by now, there might be a message as to young Ridder's release awaiting him at his hotel.

There wasn't.

All Thursday afternoon Barry sat in his room and, at five o'clock, he called Peter's secretary. "Nothing definite yet," she informed him. "The District Attorney's making the motion all right, but it'll be tomorrow now before anything comes of it."

Against his better judgment, then, Barry phoned Harwood. "Don't worry," the city editor said. "Have you seen tonight's Globe? Whole first page one loud yell for this kid's release. They'll be so glad to get him off their hands—"

In spite of his friendliness, Barry noticed that Ernie didn't say, "Come on down; we've something else for you." Nor even, "Of course, we'll expect you to cover Rogers getting out of jail." Why should he? "The big beat" was Harwood's "beat," not Barry's and, anyway, the old man would be at his desk the day after tomorrow. Harwood did say that, at last. "You'd better see him. I'll phone you when. Probably not before Monday. He'll be pretty busy for a day or two. Of course, you'll be around for your salary on Saturday. Might look me up then."

He was still on the pay roll, at least. That was important, what with over-drafts and hotel bills, and such things. Sober reflection, backed by experience, had persuaded Barry that he couldn't get much on his wardrobe. The studs and cuff-links were rather cheap stuff. He had sold an overcoat once—in this very town—for three dollars.

European Cowboys

Cowboys roamed Europe before America was discovered, and even today the Gypsy riders on the Camargue, in the south of France, and the plainsmen of the Hortobagy, in Hungary, are quite as picturesque as the cowboys of the United States.

Glazed Chintz and Quilted Print

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Gay Prints for Gay Hours

COME to the party frocked in gay glazed chintz and you will look not only charming but "new" as to fashion. What! Glazed chintz going formal after all these years it has been serving as material for sofa cushions on summer verandas, as bathroom curtains and as general utility household hangings? Yes'm, it's not only true but what's more, glazed chintz is simply perfect in the new role it is playing as high-style fabric for evening gowns and wraps. Try a gown of glazed chintz, you'll love it.

You will be perfectly safe and sane in choosing a dress of glazed chintz for the merits of this charming material have been recognized by leading Paris couturiers. Worth fashions an evening redingote with big sleeves of this cotton, the patterning of which accents huge gorgeous flowers.

See in the picture the lady seated in the foreground. The adorable gown she wears is fashioned of gleaming glazed chintz or cired chintz, as some call it. The daring astral patterning is done in vivid coloring on a dark background. Bows of self-fabric accent the off-shoulder silhouette. The Alix skirt is cut with a very full circular flare in last-minute fashion.

It is nothing short of a revelation the way cottons of every description are coming to the fore in a formal way. Designers are fearless in appropriating the most ordinary of household cottons for their use in creating fashionable apparel. For instance, clever coats to wear this summer are being made of bedspread pique and they are that good-looking you will be wanting to possess one at first sight.

As to printed linens and cottons especially printed piques and cottons that look like linens, and linens that look like cottons and a host of other eye-catching wash fabrics, they are scoring a triumph in the most exclusive circles of high fashion. Some of the printed linen-looking cottons are gorgeously patterned with widely spaced florals that splash color unsparingly throughout their design.

If you haven't seen them already, there is a real thrill waiting you in the summer swaggers and jackets that are fashioned of hand-quilted gay print. The bright field flowers in the jacket worn over the black silk organdie, pictured, look as if they could be picked. Hand-quilting outlines each flower in this very beautiful silk shantung print. The enormous bouquet is composed of pink and yellow silk organdie flowers.

Quilting is being done in a great way this season. If you want to express the "last word" in a daytime jacket or coatee to wear over summer dresses, make it of black or navy satin that has been hand quilted in decorative design.

Getting back to the subject of cotton fabrics the junior girls are having the happiest sort of a time wearing dresses of gingham that are made quite formally for parties. As to organdies, dotted swisses, cotton nets, especially point d'esprit, printed voiles and a whole list of fascinating sheers, they are cutting a big splurge this season in "society"—made up as painstakingly as silks or velvets.

HAT OF TULLE FOR SUMMER EVENINGS

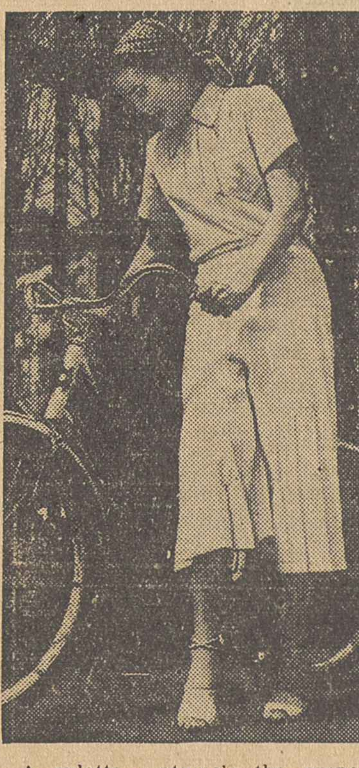
The diner-out in summer, whether by daylight or dark, needs a hat as well as a gown. And the hats that are first choice this season are those of tulle. There are brimless hats or sailors made of layers of tulle, marked by rounds of stitching and a loose frill formed by the layers at the edge. Some of these stitched tulle hats are made in so many layers that they resemble sports fabric, although the edges are left rough to distinguish them from the tailored materials. The little bonnets made of tulle are particularly delightful for youthful heads when they are worn far back and have a flared-out, short veil from the crown edge. One of the new evening hats seen recently is a tricorne made of novelty or stitched net in brown, or black, or navy, with a splash of bright flowers tacked on at back.

"Taxi Wraps" Are Needed in the Summer Wardrobe

On summer evenings when it's too warm for a fabric wrap, there still is need for a light covering for bare shoulders. A wrap that is most popular, and can be most easily and inexpensively made, is one of cotton cable net. Anyone can make one for herself. It is gathered around the back neck with a small stand-up collar, has raglan sleeves, and is as long and full as you like. The three-quarters length is particularly in favor, according to cable reports from the Paris mid-season collections. Such a wrap is probably most practical in navy, or black, or brown, but a white or pastel colored net wrap can be very dress-up for special evenings. They have been dubbed "taxi wraps" and can become really indispensable in the summer wardrobe.

PIQUE CULOTTE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



A culotte costume's the proper dress for sports wear — by unanimous vote in the world of fashion. For cycling, for tennis and for beach this pleated culotte costume made of sanforized-shrunk fine wale pique will be found most practical and attractive. The beauty of it is that the fabric has been so processed, it carries a guarantee not to shrink or get out of shape.

Vest of Linen

Vests of white starched linen, always made high at the neck, are smart with navy or black street costumes.

All Around the House

Fresh gingerbread topped with ice cream makes a delicious dessert.

The ends of rugs should always be left open when they are rolled and tied up for the summer.

Don't use a stiff brush when washing linoleum. This destroys the luster. Wash lightly with soap and water.

BANKHEAD HOMECOMING

Dr. J. Alex Moore, upon his return from Jasper last week, where he attended the homecoming celebration for Congressman William B. Bankhead, who was recently elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, said:

"I was very greatly delighted to be among those who were privileged to have a part in welcoming Congressman Bankhead upon his return to his home town, Jasper. Mr. Bankhead was my long-time neighbor and all-time friend when I lived in Jasper. It was a great ovation he received from his fellow townspeople, large delegations from every county in his Congressional district, as well as a great number of prominent visitors from other sections of Alabama, who were there for the occasion. I was happy indeed to be among them."

CIVIC CLUB

The regular meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club was held at the Baptist Church Wednesday noon, with Dr. H. W. Vaughan presiding.

Mr. Lucien Giddens rendered a report of the club committee previously appointed to consider participation in and support of a community recreation project in Montevallo, in cooperation with Miss Margaret Hodo's work under the federal government's outline.

Mr. Giddens's report revealed that his committee had considered the matter as far as possible, which consideration has brought them to an expected conference with Mr. Cone, works director of Shelby County, for determination as to the aid that may be secured from the government's program.

Upon completion of the report, and after discussion by members of the club, a motion was passed authorizing a continuation of the club's interest in the development of a community house in Montevallo, and the committee was authorized to continue its study of the proposition and report the full details at a later time.

Mr. E. S. Brinkley, superintendent of the schools of Norfolk, Virginia, was presented by Dr. Vaughan as the guest speaker for the meeting.

Mr. Brinkley covered briefly two very interesting current subjects in his home state; interesting not only in Virginia, but in most any other place you may find:

First, he made reference to the present method in effect in Virginia, for the control and regulation of the traffic in hard liquors, beer and wines He said that hard liquors are sold only under strict regulations of the state-controlled stores. Beer and wine, he said, are sold in most any place of business that can qualify as a reputable confectionery dispensing agency.

His concluding summary of the Virginia liquor plan was that, as a school man, he could see no reason for saying anything other than the plan seems to be working satisfactorily and advantageously.

The restoration of the city of Williamsburg to its state and condition of colonial days was very iterestingly described by Mr. Brinkley.

ALABAMA SCHOOL FACTS

Do you know Alabama property values are $322,000,000 less than they were five years ago?

This makes school money from property taxes, state, county and city, about $5,000,000 less.

Dou you know the State Minimum Program sets an average salary of $75 per month, or $525 per year for a seven-month term?

Do you know if the schools of Alabama had run full terms last year the teachers would have received only $56 per months, or $392 for a seven-month term?

Do you know 205,000 rural boys and girls in Alabama were forced to stop school early last year?

Did you ever stop to think that a big percentage of them could not be promoted to the next grade?

Do you realize this means the boys and girls must repeat the whole year?

This means a loss of tax money, because much of that spent was wasted.

Do you know in 1929 the teachers in both grade and high schools of seven counties averaged less than $60 per month?

Do you know that even with such salaries the state ran a deficit each year in keeping the school open seven months?

Do you know the federal government contributed more money to keep schools open in Alabama than any other state?

Do you know only four states have more illiteracy than Alabama?

Do you know people in Alabama pay only 2.76 per cent of their income to schools, while the average for the nation is 3.64?

State Capitol News

Montgomery. — Elaborate plans are being made by officials of the State Highway Department and civic clubs and associations in more than a score of Alabama towns and cities for formal celebration of the freeing of the state's 15 toll bridges.

Action of the Alabama Supreme Court last week in affirming the decision of Judge Walter B. Jones, in Montgomery Circuit Court, authorizing a refunding plan whereby the highway department may, in effect, assume the $3,800,000 bonded indebtedness, removed the last barrier in the deeply involved two-year old financial-legal transaction.

Thus, the high court's decision enables Gov. Bibb Graves to discharge a campaign pledge which many financial experts claimed to be impossible and wholly visionary.

Because the toll bridge receipts have NOT been sufficient to pay interest and principal installments on the bonds of the autonomous Alabama Bridge Corporation, many friends of the Governor had urged him to default rather than recognize the debt as a legal and moral obligation of the State.

However, the Governor steadfastly refused to adopt such a course, and the solution of the problem was reached only through the tedious procedure of enabling legislation by Congress and the State Legislature and an air-tight test of the entire refunding plan in the state courts.

Bondholders who may oppose the refunding plan will be allowed until July 10 to file a petition with the Supreme Court for rehearing, Lawrence Lee, the Governor's legal adviser, explained.

Selection of 1,200 Alabama boys between 17 and 25 years of age to fill vacancise in the state's Civilian Conservation Corp quota of 6,300 will begin July 3, according to Dr. A. H. Collins, commissioner of the State Department of Public Welfare.

Enrollees will be concentrated at recruiting stations in Mobile, Montgomery, Birmingham, Decatur and Anniston. Recruting will start in Mobile July 3, under the supervision of Mrs. Katie Gross, field director of the welfare department. Field Directors R. S. Hicks and Miss Carolyn Cunningham will have charge of recruiting in Montgomery, July 6; Miss Anita van de Voort in charge at Anniston July 7; Miss Opal Adams and Miss Thelma Welch at Decatur July 9 and Miss Van de Voort at Birmingham, July 9 and 10.

The quota of Shelby county is 15 white and 3 negroes.

Probate judges have NO authority to transfer a voter's name from one precinct to another within the county unless requested to do so by said voter, such authority being only within the province of the Board of Registrars, according to an official ruling by Atty.-Gen. Albert A. Carmichael.

The opinion was rendered at the request of Probate Judge J. F. Fosey of Birmingham.

Boards of Registrars are required to meet and remain in session five days after the first Monday of July for registering vooters in all counties except Jefferson, Mobile and Montgomery, the attorney general declared in another ruling.

The Alabama Optometrists Association last week elected Dr. Wyatt Barnes, of Decatur, as state president, and selected Anniston for the 1937 convention.

Dr. Barnes, a Tulane and University of Alabama graduate, succeeds Dr. L. G. Raum, of Birmingham. Other officers elected at the closing session were Dr. J. K. Robinson, of Sylacauga and Dr. J. H. Marrill, of Birmingham, secretary, treasurer.

The convention, which attracted more than 100 optometrists from over the state, closed with a barbecue at Narrow Lane, near here.

Dr. Julius Neumueller, of Southbridge, Mass., noted eye specialist, was the principal speaker during the convention.

W. M. Brunson, special people's attorney, appointed by Gov. Bibb Graves under authority of an act of the 1936 Legislature, appeared before the public service commission last week to protest a petition of all railroads operating in Alabama for permission to continue for six months the "emergency" increases in freight rates placed into effect last year.

Brunson protested renewal of the higher rate schedules generally, especially the rates on coal, explaining that while he represented all consumers, he was particularly interested in the schools and governmental agencies within the State which use about 50,000 tons of coal annually.

Petitioning for continuation of the increased rates, representatives of the railroads pointed out that the interstate commerce commission had authorized extension of the rates on interstate traffic until December 31.

In their hearing before the interstate commerce commission, the railroads claimed that their revenues had been increased a total of $105,000,000 throughout the country, but that the higher revenues had been offset by increased operating costs

State-Wide Employment Service To Begin Functioning Soon

Montgomery, Ala., June 23.—A free state-wide employment service for the benefit of the unemployed and employers in Alabama will be organized immediately, Mr. J. G. Duncan, Jr., Director of the State Employment Division of the Alabama Department of Labor announced today.

He said administrative offices, with branches in various industrial centers of the State, would be set up as soon as $20,000.00 in federal funds, allocated to Alabama for the work, was officially received.

"We will notify employers of the State immediately upon completion of the branch organizations," he declared, "and then we will be ready for work."

Release of the federal allotment was obtained through affiliation of the State Employment Service with the United States Employment organization, which was completed after conferences in Washington this week by Governor Bibb Graves, Mr. Robert R. Moore, State Commissioner of Labor, and Mr. Duncan, with Mr. W. Frank Persons, Director of the United States Employment Service. The affiliation had been held up for several months pending coordination of Alabama's laws with federal regulations.

Mr. Duncan urged unemployed workers not to send applications for jobs to the state headquarters, as the applications would only have to be mailed to the branch organizations nearest the worker, thus delaying putting his name on record.

Application forms will be available at branch offices, on which applicants must list names, ages, experience and all other data that will be of value to a prospective employer in determining whether the worker will fit the job.

Mr. Duncan emphasized that only applications of thoroughly capable workers would be submitted to employers for their selection.

He said details of the state-wide set-up and the actual date of considering applications would be announced later.

"The operation of the State Employment Service and the administration of unemployment compensation will be very closely correlated," Mr. Duncan said. "When those offices are properly functioning, the unemployment compensation as required by statute will be paid out through the employment offices. Therefore, it will be absolutely necessary for complete recods of employee's services to be kept in those offices. The federal government will bear the expense of this particular part of the administration of the service."

1,227,887 Fish Are Planted In State

Montgomery, Ala., June 30.—A total of 1,227,887 fish was planted in the fresh waters of Alabama during the fiscal year 1934-35, a report of the State Conservation Department shows.

This total included 331,028 bass, 876,977 bream, 10,525 crappie, 91 pike and 9,266 non-game fish.

The State hatchery at Eastaboga produced 1,071,915 fish for planting purposes, including 308,740 bass and 763,175 bream.

The Marion Federal hatchery contributed 91,010 fish to the State's restocking program, divided 9,410 bass and 81,600 bream.

Reclaiming from waters that were receding or drying up and transplanted in fresh streams were 12,878 bass, 32,202 bream, 10,525 crappie, 91 pike, and 9,266 non-game fish, or a total of 64,926.

The report stated that this was the largest sumber of fish planted in the streams of this State since hatchery operations were begun in 1925.

Numerous improvements at the Eastaboga hatchery and the steady expansion at the Marion hatchery are expected to increase the output to a million and a half fish within a very short time.

A cooperative working agreement between the State and Federal hatcheries was said to be working to the advantage of both.

The report emphasized that the 91,010 fish planted by the State from the Federal hatchery did not, by any means, represent the total output at Marion for this period of time.

Counties Should Bear Larger Proportion of School Tax

Montgomery, Ala., June 26.—The recent suggestions in the public press that the several counties of the state should bear a larger proportion of the school tax load brings to the front the present status of local support of public education in Alabama. To date 54 of the 67 counties of Alabama now levy 4 mills of county-wide tax for public schools, the maximum levy permitted under the Constitution. The last county to vote the maximum fourth mill is Montgomery, the levy being approved by a substantial majority on June 16.

Through special constitutional amendments 3 counties now levy a county-wide tax for schools in excess of the constitutional 4-mill limit: Baldwin, which levies 6 mills; Jefferson, which levies 4½; and Mobile, which levies 6. The 10 remaining counties which to date levy only a 3-mill county-wide tax are Barbour, Chilton, Greene, Henry, Lowndes, Macon, Madison, Russell, Sumter, and Wilcox. It is noted that a majority of these are Black Belt counties. The voters of Macon and of Sumter recently rejected the proposal to increase the county tax from 3 to 4 mills. Elections are scheduled to be held in Greene and in Wilcox within the next 30 days.

Aicording to estimates compiled by the superintendents of the counties concerned the total amount of additional revenue that could be secured for schools if the fourth mill were levied in the 10 counties levying only a 3-mill tax is approximately $64,000. The amounts of this potential revenue range from $4,300 in Greene to $17,500 in Madison.

In addition to the county-wide tax of 4 mills the Constitution permits each school district of a county to levy 3 mills, the proceeds of which are spent in the district authorizing the levy. At the present time 39 of the 67 counties have levied this district tax throughout the county, 28 counties having failed to levy it in one or more districts. The counties yet to levy the district tax in all districts are Autauga, Barbour, Bibb, Calhoun, Choctaw, Clay, Coffee, Conecuh, Coosa, Dallas, Fayette, Franklin, Greene, Hale, Henry, Lee, Limestone, Madison, Marengo, Marshall, Morgan, Perry, Pike, Randolph, Sumter, Talladega, Tuscaloosa, and Wilcox.

Estimates of the increased revenue possible to be derived from the unlevied district tax in the 28 counties total $108,000. This potential revenue ranges from $30 in Randolph to $27,000 in Dallas.

The total amount of revenue possible by extending both the county-wide and the district school tax throughout the state to the constitutional limit is approximately, $172,000. Before school revenue can be increased materially from local sources it is evident that the constitutional limit on school taxation must be amended for the state as a whole, or for certain counties desiring an increase in the local levy, as is the case in Baldwin, Jefferson, and Mobile.

However, even with no constitutional limit for school taxation many of the poorer counties of the tsate would find it practically impossible to operate schools on the present skeleton basis if no equalizing fund were provided from the State Treasury. This is because of the wide differences in the wealth of the several counties. Certain counties of the state would have to increase the present maximum levy of 7 mills four and five times in order to maintain the present Minimum School Program on local revenue alone.

Marion Davies At the Strand Thursday and Friday

Never has the beautiful star, Marion Davies, appeared in a more entertaining and gripping romance than in her latest Cosmopolitan production, 'Hearts Divided,' which shows at the Strand Theatre on Thursday and Friday.

This story of the wooing and winning of the brilliant and beautiful Betsy Patterson of Baltimore by Captain Jerome Bonaparte, brother of the French emperor, is a real heart throbbing drama.

While the romance is predominant, the picture has an historical background, with Jerome Bonaparte in America as the agent of his brother to negotiate the sale of the Louisiana Territory. It brings in many noted characters of the period, including Napoleon himself, President Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, John Marshall, Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton.

The picture is a lavish one, with mammoth sets and colorful backgrounds, while the women are costumed in the gorgeous Empire gowns of the period. Picturesque scenes take place in the Patterson mansion and estate and in the palace of the emperor of France.

The picture is enlivened by catchy songs written by the famous team of Harry Warren and Al Dubin, and sung by Dick Powell, who has the leading masculine role opposite Miss Davies. Other delightful music furnished by the Hall Johnson Choir who sing the spirituals of the negro slaves quartered on the Patterson estate.

There is plenty of thrilling action in addition to the somewhat tangled up romance in which Jerome woos his lady love incognito and against the wishes of the emperor. But this madcap adventurer hurls his thundering defiance at his powerful brother and brings his wooing to a climax in whirlwind fashion.

Never has Miss Davies been more pleasing, nor more charming than as the beautiful belle of Baltimore who loses her heart to Jerome whom she knows only as her tutor in French and music. She carries off the lighter portion of the romance with a delightful whimsey and rises to the more emotional scenes with the artistry of an experienced and polished performer.

Powell, who also played opposite Miss Davies in "Page Miss Glory", is highly amusing as well as romantic in his role of the carefree Jerome, who goes about making love in disguise. He not only does some capable acting, but his voice seems more pleasing than ever in the catchy songs that he sings in English and French.

Claude Rains does some exceptionally fine acting in the role of Napoleon Bonaparte. Never does he overemphasize the traditional mannerisms of the Little Corporal, nor resort to the trite jestures with which the emperor was credited. Rains' lack of posing makes the character seem natural and human.

Charlie Ruggles, Edward Everett Horton and Arthur Treacher add some fine comedy touches in their roles of three indefatigable suitors of the beautiful Betsy, who mock them and laughs at them and loves them as the kindly, blundering, elderly men that they are. Others who do fine work in a comedy vein are Walter Kingsford and Etienne Girardot, as the aides of Captin Bonaparte, and Hobart Cavanaugh as an inkeeper.

Still others in the talented cast who deserve special mention are Henry Stevenson, Clara Blandick, John Larkin, Halliwell Hobbes, George Irving and Hattie McDaniels.

"I WOULDN'T RISK MY LIFE ON ANY OTHER TIRE"
Says Louis Meyer—
Only three time winner
Indianapolis Race '28 '33 '36
EQUIP YOUR CAR WITH Firestone
GUM-DIPPED TIRES
for Greater Safety!
THE MASTERPIECE OF TIRE CONSTRUCTION
Firestone

THERE is a reason why Louis Meyer won the 500-mile Indianapolis race this year—and why he is the only man ever to win this gruelling race three times. He always used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, and never experienced tire trouble of any kind.

Louis Meyer knows tire construction. He also knows that to drive for 500 consecutive miles over this hot brick track, negotiating the dangerous curves 800 times at the record-breaking average speed of 109 miles an hour, requires tires of super strength and greatest blowout protection, as a blowout on any one of the dangerous curves would likely mean instant death. By the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process every cord in the tires on Louis Meyer's car was soaked and coated with liquid rubber, thereby preventing internal friction and heat. This is the secret of the extra strength and reserve safety built into Firestone Tires.

When you make your holiday trip this week-end, you of course will not drive 109 miles per hour, but at today's higher speeds you do need tires that will give you greatest blowout protection and will stop your car up to 25% quicker. Take no chances! Let us equip your car today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, the safest tires built. It costs so little to protect lives worth so much!

Manero's Not Quite as 'Dark' a 'Horse' as He First Appears

OUTSIDE the sun which had been so bright all day had faded to a dull purple. Still little groups of tired, half-clad men sat about the Baltusrol locker room. In one corner Tommy Armour was holding forth like the rare story teller that he is. Gene Sarazen sat nearby silently cuddling one chubby knickered leg beneath another.

This was early on the evening before the finals. Most of the top-ranking stars of golf who had just completed the second round of the national open tournament were clustered in this group. Nearby other clusters of near stars talked happily about the good break of fortune which unexpectedly had enabled them to qualify with 151s for the final rounds.

Occasionally there would be talk of the morrow. Then heads would nod meaningly toward Johnny Revolta, Paul Runyan, Ky Laffoon and those others listening eagerly in the Hagen-Armour amen corner. A reporter, trying to take in all this, and yet more interested in Granville's Belmont chances, brushed past a locker where a little dark-haired man was changing his shoes.

"Going to be some swell golf out there tomorrow," he remarked.

Fellow's Tone Is Polite; He's Major Tourney Type

Tony Manero

"Yes, maybe," said the dark-haired little fellow. The tone was polite, perhaps even a little wistful. The reporter looked at the little fellow curiously. When you cover the major golf tournaments you often run across men and women whom you never will meet again. They come in so hopefully and depart so— But at least this little fellow's clothes still hung in his locker and so he was not out of the tournament entirely.

The reporter decided that a chance kind word might not hurt. Most people like to talk when they have been going through events such as these. He glanced at the group of stars. "Do any good yourself?" he asked.

"Yes." The dark little man had finished dressing now and was turning away. "Pretty good," he added as he gently closed the locker door.

The reporter followed him out. "Who's that guy?" he asked a golf writer. The writer did not know. Neither did a second or a third. "Oh," said a fourth. "Him. He's —Oh I remember his name now. It's Tony Manero."

Now that the former Westchester caddy, whom few people knew, is national open golf champion, I have been wondering about this game in which he performs. Even in a year when Italians have been achieving sports distinction far out of the ordinary, his smashing of both the British and American record is rated a real dark-horse triumph. Yet—

Somehow I doubt whether it is entirely that. True enough, Sam Parks, who stunned the experts by winning a year ago, was eliminated recently. Yet golf is bound by far more rigid standards of probability than most other games, and there is a steadily increasing number of men who can come close to par on every round.

So it seems that even though a Runyan or a Laffoon might well be ahead of a hundred others on total scores for a year's play it becomes close to impossible now to do any expert picking on a lone event.

Glance at the records. You will discover that the thirty-one-year-old Tony has been playing excellent golf for the last seven seasons. Save that the sport is so teeming with stars his record might have placed him up with the leaders from the start of any expert prediction. Somehow I suspect that there will be numerous Maneros and Parkses in seasons to come.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

While triumphing by a scant nose in what should be the best of American stakes, the Belmont, Granville definitely did not seem to have his whole heart in the proceedings. Or rather — unlike the defeated Mr. Bones, who is a money horse—the son of Gallant Fox seemed to be possessed too much of the amateur idea.

A MILLIONAIRE sportsman, who necessarily does a considerable portion of his business with mobsters, predicts that all the present racket masters will be in the breadline within five years. Says that they achieved fame merely because prohibition was such a soft touch and that none of them is smart enough to make a living the hard way. . . . Scene on the National Open green: A caddy has just parted from a golfer who has completed his second, and final round. "How much?" other caddies call to their mate. They, of course, are asking about the score, but the other boy is a materialist more interested in the payoff, "Ten bucks," he replies, fingering a bill that has just been transferred to his pocket.

Pete Renzulli and Doc Doherty, coaches at Flushing High, are two soccer gentlemen who have real reason for feeling proud. Three members of their 1933 team are college captains, Danny Von Bremen at Navy, Philip Kramer at Colgate and Edward Graham at Yale.

Nasty mens are calling the New York racing judges, who have been having so much trouble lately, the "The Three Blind Mice." . . . Customers devoured 1,600 pounds of hot dogs during the Memorial day double-header at Wrigley field. . . . Two years ago Izzy Bierber, the celebrated horseman, placed the picture of three jockeys side by side on a corner wall. He had no particular reason for grouping Duke Bellizzi, Buddy Hanford and Laverne Fator. Just happened to grab the three from out of a stack of other jockey pictures with which he was decorating his place. All three of them are dead now. Bieber calls the corner the "Morgue."

Recalling Cuyler's First Day in the Big Leagues

Cuyler

In his first major league game as a regular Kiki Cuyler smashed a triple, double and single off Vic Aldridge. The veteran, now finishing his big time career with his third National league team, the Cincinnati Reds, still shows brilliant flashes by belting out extra base hits. . . . The governors of a celebrated golf club will meet soon to consider how much sugar they can offer Tony Manero, new National Open champion, to come back home. . . . Pedro Montanez has a belt to prove that he is lightweight champion of Puerto Rico, but has no such evidence from Venezuela, where he also won the title. The very modern boxing commission of that delightful country wanted a deposit of 3,000 something or another before letting him have the belt. Very sensibly Pedro decided that he would rather invest the coconuts in food and pretty clothes.

John Cavanagh, boss of the bookmaking ring at New York tracks, has been prominent on the turf for fifty years. He has seen less than 500 races in all that time. Too busy with his work. . . . Watty Clark attributes his .250 batting average to a bat he recently swiped from Joe Coscarat of the Bees. . . . Oscar Mellilo and George Davis, both of them capable of going more than a round or two in fast company, are the two most enthusiastic fight fans among big time ball players.

Although he refused right then to consider offers of advertising men who besieged him immediately after he won the National Open, Tony Manero was interested in sugar. His first words after reaching the clubhouse were, "Give me a cup of coffee with three or four lumps—lots of—sugar in it." . . . The wise boys say that Al Ettore will repeat his triumphs and definitely prove that Roy Haynes cannot take a punch when they meet again in Philadelphia this month. . . . A voter suggests that instead of spending so much taxpayers' money in press releases ballyhooing races the New York commission might make a stab at remedying a few of the worst conditions around the tracks. For instance, they might persuade Belmont to try a public address system which occasionally could be heard distinctly.

Artie Nehf, the once great Giant pitcher, who has recovered from a long illness, now prefers golf to all other sports. . . . Johnny Harvey, the old Harlem lightweight who kayoed Mexican Joe Rivers and Matty Baldwin, now is a process server. . . . Although he handled several hundred C's worth of checks in exchange for Louis - Schmeling fight ducats, Mike Jacobs proudly reports that not one of the pretty little pieces of paper has bounced yet.

The Giants believe that Joe Young, who has joined them direct from Fordham, is the hard-hitting infielder they need. . . . A clubhouse bookmaker seldom does less than $25,000 worth of business on a big race, such as the Belmont. . . . The more important stands in the main ring handle $5,000 each at such times while the little fellows get $2,000 on a slate.

Having experimented with the money-making possibilities of a soft course the U. S. G. A. will revert to the old custom of making the National Open Golf tournament a really tough event. There will be plenty of distance, rough and hazards at the Oakland Hills Country club in Michigan according to the plans for next year.

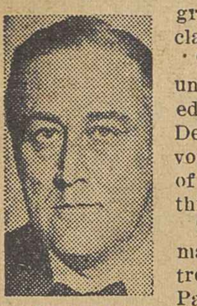
Democrats Renominate President Roosevelt—Drought Again Causes Crop Destruction — International Conference Considers Mediterranean Problems.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT was renominated by the Democratic convention in Philadelphia in a demonstration of great popular acclaim.



President Roosevelt

The convention unanimously adopted a strong New Deal platform and voted the abolition of the historic two-thirds rule.

The sessions were marked with extreme enthusiasm. Party harmony and a determination to stand militantly on the administration's record in the past three years and present a united front in the coming campaign characterized the convention.

The abolition of the two-thirds rule for the nomination of candidates was one of the significant achievements. This rule, which has been in use for more than 100 years, was superseded by the adoption of the rules committee's report recommending that at future conventions only a bare majority be required for nomination. While some southern and the eastern and western states opposed abrogation, they were reconciled to it by the committee's recommendation that changes be made in the apportionment of delegates.

The platform pledged continuance of soil conservation, benefit payments to farmers, a sound currency, a balanced budget and a constitutional amendment, if necessary, to achieve the party's broad social program. It praised the accomplishments of the New Deal in a preamble, declaring that it planned to continue them in the interest of the nation. The platform's keynote was that the Roosevelt administration has put and will keep the nation "on the road to recovery and prosperity."

Regarding the Constitution, the platform declared that while the Republican platform proposes to meet national problems by action of the separate states, the Democratic party recognizes that minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, monopolistic and unfair practices, dust storms, drouth and floods could not be handled by states. It stated:

"If these problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution, we shall seek such clarifying amendments as will assume to the legislatures of the several states and to the congress of the United States, each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the state and federal legislatures within their respective spheres shall find necessary, in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security. Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution."

In addition to soil conservation and benefit payments, the farm plank pledged the Democrats to financing share-croppers and tenants in buying land; favored commodity loans on farm surpluses and retirement of ten million acres of submarginal land from production and rural rehabilitation.

Reiterating the "good neighbor" policy, the foreign relations plank reaffirmed the party's neutrality program pledged to keep the nation out of foreign entanglements. It reasserted the reciprocal tariff policy, but demanded "adequate" protection to farmers and manufacturers against unfair competition.

Denouncing monopolies and concentration of economic power, the platform declared that the administration would "vigorously and fearlessly enforce the criminal and civil provisions of the existing anti-trust laws.

Other planks pledged: Expansion of the social security program; continuance of rural electrification; protection of the rights of labor to bargain collectively; expansion of federal housing projects; just treatment of war veterans and their dependants; extension of the merit system through classified civil service; freedom of speech, radio, religion and assembly; projection of public works projects to aid unemployment; opposition to Communism and "the menace of concealed Fascism."

THE specter of drouth stalked in the Northwest. Damage to crops on heat-parched farms in South Dakota, North Dakota, Wyoming and Montana caused great concern and recalled the disastrous drouth conditions of two years ago.

Railroads serving the drouth areas agreed again to place emergency freight rates into effect on live stock shipments to other grazing areas. Wheat and corn crops have suffered severe damage, reports indicate.

In Washington, a relief program for the drouth-stricken northwest states was mapped out by Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins. Work relief projects designed to give work at once to 5,000 farmers in the Dakotas and parts of Wyoming and Montana, whose crop lands have been laid waste for the seventh consecutive year, were planned.

In the Middle West the fact that June of 1936 has been cooler than the same month two years ago has offset the serious effects of lack of rain. Figures on June rainfall for 1936 and 1934 compiled by Nat C. Murray, crop authority of Chicago, showed that Ohio had 39 per cent of normal this year and 90 per cent in 1934; Minnesota 46 per cent in 1936 and 92 per cent in 1934; Missouri 26 per cent in 1936 and 62 per cent in 1934; and Kansas 37 per cent in 1936 and 65 per cent in 1934.

MEETING in Montreux, Switzerland, an international conference sought settlement of military and naval problems in the Mediterranean. The conference had been called by the powers as a result of Turkey's request to fortify the Dardanelles, which were demilitarized under the Lausanne treaty of 1923.

The possible threat of Russia's growing naval strength caused an alignment of the British and Japanese. Japan announced it was willing to accept any limitation on Japanese warships authorized to enter the Black sea, providing similar restrictions were placed on Russian warships leaving it. Britain was believed to be supporting Japan's position.

Russia demanded free westward passage of warships and submarines out of the Black sea through the Dardanelles, adding she was unable to see why other powers not bordering on this body of water desired unlimited passage to it. Because of her mutual assistance pact with the Soviet, France was expected to side with Russia.

The possibility of a mutual assistance pact in the Mediterranean loomed with Britain leading the way and seeking Italy's participation. Such a step would extend a series of such pacts which were concluded between Britain and France, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey against Italy at the time economic sanctions were imposed on Il Duce.

REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM LEMKE of North Dakota announced that he would run for the Presidency as candidate of a new political group known as the Union party. Father Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit priest, is the leading sponsor of Lemke's candidacy. Thomas Charles O'Brien of Boston will be the vice-presidential candidate on the ticket, it was announced.

Rep. Lemke

Mr. Lemke made public a 15-point platform embodying demands for refinancing of farm mortgages, old age security, a living wage for all workers, limitation on individual incomes, the establishment of a central bank, the issuance by congress of all currency and its regulation of the value of all the money.

Plans were made for the new party to hold a national convention some time during August in Cleveland.

Mr. Lemke said the Union party has the support of farm unions, labor, the National Union for Social Justice established by Father Coughlin, the Townsend old age pension movement and "all other liberals who have been driven from the old parties."

Mr. Lemke was co-author with Senator Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota of a $3,000,000,000 farm mortgage refinancing bill defeated in the house of representatives.

ARTHUR W. CUTTEN, who achieved spectacular wealth as a grain trader, died of a heart attack in his home in Chicago. He was sixty-five years old.

An exponent of individualism, Mr. Cutten went his way alone in the grain market, playing his "hunches" against the field. In 1924, he made a profit estimated at between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 in a corner on the corn market. He repeated his success with a coup in the wheat market the following year.

With a group of associates, he entered the stock market in 1928 and during the boom months made millions of dollars.

Most of his life Mr. Cutten was a "long" trader, who bought for the rise in the market, but following the crash, he is said to have become a "bear" or short seller. His operations as a bear in the Chicago Board of Trade brought his suspension by the grain futures administration for two years, but he won a reversal of this ruling in the United States Supreme court

STRIKES and industrial difficulties continued to harass France, although their ultimate solution was forecast in a conciliatory attitude assumed by the new "popular front" government toward the French chambers of commerce. Representatives of the chambers of commerce received assurance from Premier Leon Blum that no further manufacturing plants would be tied up by "folded arms" strikers, whose number at their peak reached approximately 1,000,000 employees.

In the meantime a strike of sailors in Marseilles was settled after a three-day refusal to work, when the shipowners capitulated to the strikers' demands. Fifty ships were affected by the walkout. The sailors demanded a 40-hour week, vacations with pay and bedsheets on their bunks.

Strife between the "leftists" and the "rightists" represented by the Croix de Feu with its reported membership of 700,000 was averted by the announcement by the government that the Fascist organization would be permitted to continue as a "political party" on the condition that it drop all semblance of a "private militia."

In Spain strikes involving 20,000 workers broke out in the province of Andalusia. Strong detachments of police and civil guards were on duty to curb rioting and violence.

FOLLOWING the lead of Great Britain, the United States formally revoked all sanctions imposed against Italy during the recent Italo-Ethiopian conflict. A proclamation by President Roosevelt declared all previous communications dealing with the sale of munitions of war, loans and travel by Americans on Italian ships was revoked.

Stanley Baldwin

Although the sanctions were against both Italy and Ethiopia, in practical application they were used only against Italy, since the United States did not supply the African nation with any war materials and the empire of Haile Selassie had no ships of its own.

The French cabinet agreed to abide by any action which the League of Nations may take in cancelling sanctions against Italy.

The British government's decision to abandon sanctions was defended in an address by Prime Minister Baldwin as the only alternative which would prevent a suicidal war plunging western civilization into "barbarous anarchy."

Baldwin asserted:

"We think it is right to drop sanctions because they are useless and ineffective.

"There is only one way to alter the course of events as they have thus far taken place. That is by going to war.

"I do not know a single nation in Europe that is prepared for that. I would not cast my vote for that course of action."

THE Seventy-fourth congress adjourned after a session lasting five and a half months during which it appropriated nearly $10,000,000,000 and was faced by some unexpected legislative complications.

In the closing hours the emergency tax bill which is expected to produce $800,000,000 in revenue was passed. Supreme court invalidation of the AAA and Guffey coal bills and the passage of the cash soldiers' bonus over the President's veto upset the budget plans and made such a bill necessary.

Although it was passed by the house, the amended Guffey coal bill designed to remove the objections of the Supreme court failed of passage in the senate. Similarly, the Wagner slum housing bill, which had passed the senate, failed in the house.

Larger than normal appropriations for governmental activities were passed. The bonus, farm payments, relief and the greatest national defense program in peace time history helped swell the total.

Funds for continuing the present relief program were voted; the public works revolving fund was amended to permit more heavy construction projects. But congress failed to approve the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tide dam.

Invalidation of the AAA brought a revised and expanded soil conservation and domestic allotment act; the rural electrification administration and electric farm and home authority were both placed on a permanent basis; the Commodity Credit corporation was expanded; two flood control bills were passed. Labor received attention through the Walsh-Healy bill dealing with working conditions on government contracts. A compromise ship subsidy bill was rushed through in the closing hours. Financial legislation included expansion of the jurisdiction of SEC. Important among business legislation was the Patman bill amending the Clayton anti-trust act regarding price discrimination.

A number of important bills failed of enactment. Among these were the Pettingill long and short hauls bill, stockyard regulation, Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage bill, and bills on the 30-hour week, extension of the railroad co-ordinator's tenure, anti-war profits, alien deportation, enlargement of the federal trade commission's power and treasury agency service.

IF YOU are one of the girls who have written to Karen Morley asking for some of her old clothes, cheer up—you may receive something soon.

The lovely Karen found, not long ago, that she had to put on some weight. So she did; moved to the beach, and put on 15 pounds. She was delighted, but naturally none of her clothes would fit, so she's sending them to the girls who have written to her in the past. Lucky girls—and generous Karen! Some of our pretty ladies of the screen would have sold the cast-off garments, or saved them, just in case they needed clothes of that period in future, and grew slim enough to wear them.

In the course of a personal appearance tour, John Boles recently visited Lynchburg, Va., in order to take a look at Randolph-Macon college, which his wife attended. The visit was a triumph, with the girls mobbing John, and John telephoning his wife, who is in London, from the president's office.

But imagine the chagrin of the business man who formally presented him to an audience as "Major Bowes!" However, it's innocent blunders like that one that produce spontaneous laughs.

Nowadays the door that leads to endless opportunities seems to be the one that leads to a radio studio—almost any radio studio. Not long ago Anne Nichols attended a broadcast of the radio version of her current play, "Pre-Honeymoon." (It was Miss Nichols, you'll recall, who wrote "Abie's Irish Rose.") In the cast engaged for the broadcast was a girl named Pat Lederer. And Miss Nichols liked her work so much that she promptly engaged her for a role in the stage version of the play.

"Fury" is one of the pictures you'll want to see. It's a picture with a message, a scathing indictment of lynching, and the leading roles are magnificently played by Sylvia Sidney and Spencer Tracy.

Apparently Eleanor Powell has gone romantic in a big way. The young man is John Payne, who hails from Richmond, Va., and is a grandson of John Howard Payne, author of "Home Sweet Home." The two young people were in a play together in New York. Eleanor was instrumental in persuading him to go to Hollywood to work in "Dodsworth," and has been coaching him for the screen.

Incidentally, Eleanor might never have attained the heights in Hollywood if she hadn't been annoyed because somebody patronized her when she was introduced as a tap dancer. Right then she decided that she'd show those Hollywood people what she could do as an actress.

Nowadays when you see and hear an actor singing in a picture, the chances are that what you hear wasn't recorded while the actor was photographed. This may be a good idea, because so many singers make funny faces when they sing, but on the other hand, it destroys the illusion that the singer is really singing.

If you want to be slender, says Mary Boland, don't sleep too much. She gives a rule that she has found effective during her long and successful career on the stage, and she's observed it during her equally successful movie career.

"Six hours' sleep for a man, seven for a woman, eight for a fool," says she. But she won't find many followers in Hollywood, because movie stars are told to get plenty of sleep so that they won't have circles under their eyes.

Urges Treatment of Cabbage Seed

Guard Against Black Leg, Black Rot, Advice of an Expert.

By C. H. NISSLEY, Professor of Vegetable Gardening, New Jersey College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Seed for mid-summer and fall cabbage needs treatment against black leg and black rot disease if it is to produce an abundant crop.

The black leg disease affects the inside of the seed and surface sterilization will not control it. The hot water treatment, however, kills both black leg and black rot organisms and the process is simple to follow.

Fill a wash boiler about two-thirds full of water and heat to 122 degrees Fahrenheit, using a good thermometer to be sure the temperature is exactly right. Submerge the cabbage seed, which has been placed loosely in a cheesecloth bag and move it up and down so the water will permeate the seed. After the seed has been submitted to the hot water for 25 minutes, cool it by dipping the bag of seed into a bucket of cold water. Then spread the seed out to dry.

When the water is heated over a gas stove, it is easy to control the temperature. But when a coal stove is used, the boiler should be removed when the water reaches the right degree of heat and the heat regulated by adding small quantities of boiling water from time to time so that the temperature at any one point does not go above 122 degrees.

Can Prevent Exhaustion, Sunstroke, Writer Says

Indigestion invariably precedes an attack of heat exhaustion. Carefully watching the manure and urine at morning, noon, and night will help prevent loss.

During warm weather let horses rest in the shade when the manure changes from normal to a mushy, loose, foul smelling mass of glistening, hard mucus covered, clay-like or dark colored balls. When urine becomes scant, dark colored, or thick and honey-like, you may be pretty sure the horse is suffering from indigestion, according to a writer in Hoard's Dairyman.

When "Dobbin" stops sweating and the nostrils are pretty much dilated, it's time to head for a shady tree. Sunstroke soon may follow and that means one dead horse. The body may be sprinkled with cold water and a wet sponge should be tied at the poll. Two ounces of a mixture of two parts medicinal alcohol and one part each of sweet spirits of niter and aromatic spirits of ammonia in one pint of water should be given once an hour until the horse is relieved.

Indians Grew Much Corn

The great age of corn culture in America is witnessed by the fact that the first explorers found Indians growing corn practically everywhere that it can grow on this continent, from the forested regions of New England and Ontario, through the rich Midwest and the irrigated pueblo lands of the Southwest, rising to a climax in the high Indian civilizations of the Mexican plateau, Yucatan, and the Andean uplands of South America, out again finally among the more primitive tribes of the Pampas, far to the south. Only desert, extremely poor soil, or a too short growing season could discourage an Indian tribe from adopting corn as a mainstay food plant.—Successful Farming.

Horse Ages Rapidly

A horse at five is comparatively as old as a man at twenty; at ten he equals a man of forty; at fifteen he is a man of fifty; at twenty a man of sixty; at twenty-five a man of seventy; at thirty a man of eighty; and at thirty-five he is considered as old as a man of ninety years. The comeback that horses are making is putting many old horses into the hands of farmers at prices out of line with what they are going to return. All horses offered for sale are of course "coming seven." If you can't tell whether a horse is young, old, or in between, by his teeth, better take a veterinarian who knows or an experience horseman with you when you make a purchase.—Hoard's Dairyman.

William Powell and Jean Arthur In Mystery Film

Showing At Strand Theatre, Montevallo Next Sunday and Monday

That debonair detective, William Powell and his lovely co-star, Jean Arthur, playing in RKO Radio's race track mystery, "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," hardly need an introduciton

This is the third movie in which they have combined their deductive powers to solve cryptic crimes.

The pair of screen favorites first appeared together in the "Canary Murder Case" and they were cast again in the "Greene Murder Case." Both were part of the famed Philo Vance detective series.

So well did the dark-haired, smooth-mannered Powell and dainty blonde Miss Arthur team together that RKO lost no time in casting them opposite each other in its current mystery film, the successor to "Star of Midnight."

Miss Arthur's easy mannerisms and dry wit form a perfect foil for the dynamic Powell's rapid fire bon mots.

In their current picture, Powell plays the role of a successful doctor, and Miss Arthur is his ex-wife. She decided to recapture her former husband, but finds him involved in a baffiing murder mystery.

The original story was written by the well-known mystery author, James Edward Grant, and adapted for the screen by Anthony Veiller.

Powell and Miss Arthur are supported by a strong cast, including Eric Blore, James Gleason, Robert Armstrong, Ralph Morgan, Lila Lee, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Grant Mitchell and Frank M. Thomas.

Stephen Roberts, who directed Powell in "Star of Midnight," is back at the megaphone again, and Edward Kaufman, who adapted "Star of Midnight," produced.

Bill Is Urbane Jean Captivating In Co-Star Film

Filmdom's number one Criminologist, William Powell, engages in a thrill-packed battle against crime, and finds time to swing a few lusty haymakers at cupid, in his current RKO Radio mystery drama, "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford." He is vastly aided by his co-star, the lovely blonde Jean Arthur.

An ingenious and baffling series of murders involving a group of race--track followers intrigue the deductive proclivities of Powell, a society physician, and test his scientific resources to the limit. As a matter of fact, he is forced to rely at times on the somewhat tantalizing intuitive genius of his ex--wife, as played by Miss Arthur.

The Urbane Powell is at his best, getting the most out of every scene and situation, and playing the comedy sequences with a bland humor that is peculiarly Powell-esque.

Comely Jean Arthur proves to be an ideal team-mate for Powell. In the part of an ex-wife, who has decided to remove the X, she cleverly reveals a few tactics that should be of great value to girls who take Leap Year seriously.

Eric Blore again "buttles" his way to many laughs throughout the picture. He is a high class comedian.

The feature cast includes Ralph Morgan, James and Lucille Gleason, Robert - Armstrong, Grant Mitchell, Erin O'Brien - Moore, Frank Thomas, Frankie Darro, all of whom turn in splendid performances, and Lila Lee, whose return to the screen discloses that she has lost none of her appeal.

Anthony Veiller did a commendable job of adapting James Edward Grant's original story. The lines are sprightly throughout, and the action fast and unflagging.

Stephen Roberts injected a lively tempo to the story and established himself as one of the best directors of sophisticated comedies. Credit for the production goes to Edward Kaufman.

Former County Agent Studies Farm Program

By C. E. STAPP, Contact Manager, Dallas Compress Co.

The government expects approximately 80 per cent of the farmers to take part in the program and has set aside money to make benefit payments to farmers who do take part in the program.

I have attended all of the District meetings held recently on the 1936 program. I am familiar with the program and will be glad to assist the County Agents of the District in advising our farmers as to how they may take part in the new program and receive the most possible benefit for same.

The new program provides for the following benefit payments:

1. Approximately 5c per pound on the new established average yield of lint cotton per acre for your farm, for the number of acres you leave out of cotton this year, up to 35 per cent of your cotton base acres.

Example—If your 1935 contract showed a total of 20 acres of cotton land to plant and rent, the most you could leave out of cotton this year and get paid for would be 35 per cent of the 20 acres. This would be 7 acres, leaving 13 acres to plant. However, as there is no minimum, you can leave out as few acres as you want to.

If the new established average yield for your 20 acres is 150 pounds of lint cotton per acre, by qualifying, you would get approximately 5c per pound for the 150 pounds or approximately $7.50 per acre, up to 7 acres, for the acres left out of cotton.

In order to qualify for this payment you would have to have, in 1936, at least 7 acres in soil improving crops such as cow peas, velvet beans, soy beans and other summer legumes.

2. In addition to the 5c per pound payment, by qualifying, you can get pay for vetch or Austrian peas turned under in 1936, terracing done in 1936 and for legume seed planted on the farm in 1936 if only the seed from these legumes are harvested and the vines left on the land.

You can qualify by planting summer legumes as suggested above. Cowpeas, velvet beans or any other summer legumes grown in your 1936 corn will help you qualify for benefit payments. Legumes cut for hay will also help you qualify. If you wish to qualify for payments in this program, plant as many acres of cowpeas, soy beans, velvet beans or any other legumes as you can.

Your land needs these legume crops and they will help you qualify for benefit payments.

Crops or Land Uses Listed According to Classifications of the 1936 Soil Conservation Program.

Cotton, soil depleting.

Tobacco, soil depleting.

Peanuts (harvested for nuts), soil depleting.

The turning under or cutting in the vines of a winter legume preceding a summer soil depleting crop, soil depleting; soil building practice, rate per acre, $15.0.

The turning under or cutting in of the stubble of crimson clover harvested for seed and followed with a soil depleting crop (f), soil depleting, soil building practice, rate per acre, $1.50.

Summer legumes (cowpeas, soybeans, velvet beans, lespedeza) Not on small grain land) for pasture or hay. soil conserving.

Summer legumes (Cowpeas, soybeans, velvet beans, lespedeza, crotalaria) (Not on small grain land) vines left on the land, soil conserving; soil building practice, rate per acre, $1.50.

The growing and leaving on the land of either winter or summer legumes and not followed by a soil depleting crop, soil conserving; soil building practice, rate per acre, $1.50.

Permanent pasture grasses (Bermuda, carpet, Dallis, red top, orchard) or mixtures of grasses and legumes (Lespedeza, white, bur and hop clover) planted on crop land in 1936. (d), soil conserving; soil building practice, rate per acre, $2.00.

Permanent pasture planted on crop land since January 1, 1930 and prior to January 1, 1936, soil conserving.

Hay meadows planted on crop land since January 1, 1930, soil conserving.

Permanent pastures not on crop land or painted prior to January 1, 1930, neutral classification.

Alfalfa, Kudzu, sericea, annual lespedeza now growing on crop land planted prior to 1936, soil conserving.

Alfalfa, Kudzu, sericea planted in 1936, soil conserving; soil building practice, rate per are, $2.00.

The planting of strips of close growing crops for erosion control and to be left on the land. The acreage to be that occupied by the strip. (c) soil conserving; soil building practice, rate per acre, $1.50, $2.00.

The planting of strips of close growing non-legume crops for erosion control and use as forage, soil depleting.

The planting of strips of close growing legume crops for erosion control and use as forage, soil conserving.

Liming of land — minimum application to be not less than 1,000 pounds per acre, soil building practice, 70c per 1,000 pounds

The application of phosphate on soil conserving crops or pasture excluding soybeans, cowpeas, velvet beans, peanuts and annual grasses. Rate to be not less than 100 pounds acid phosphate or its equivalent per acre, soil building practice, 50c per 16 pounds.

Hay meadows not on crop land or planted prior to January 1, 1930, neutral classification.

Forest trees planted on crop land since January 1, 1934. (Not set by nature), soil conserving.

Forest trees planted on crop land in 1936. (Not planted by nature), soil conserving, soil building practice, rate per acre, $5.00.

Woodland other than that planted at owner's expense since 1934, neutral classification.

Idle crop land, (e), neutral classification.

Idle land not in a crop since January 1, 1930, neutral classification.

Properly terracing land that needs terracing, soil building practice, 40c per 100 foot. Not over $2.00 per acre.

Wasteland, roads, lanes, lots, yards, neutral classification.

Wild hay, neutral classification.

Explanatory Notes

(a) Acres to be the percent of area occupied by crop (soil conserving not more than 50 per cent).

(b) If legumes occupy less than 33 and one-third per cent of the land the full area will be depleting. If the legume occupies more than 33 and one-third per cent of the land the actual percentage occupied by the legume will be recorded as conserving and|or a soil building practice and the remaining as depleting (soil conserving not more than 50 per cent.)

(c) If interplanted in a soil conserving or soil building crop that portion occupied by such crop is to be classified separately and is to take a classification according to the crop and its use.

(d) At least 50 per cent of the growth to be from the legume.

(e) If planted to a soil conserving or soil building crop the area may be classified according to the crop and its use.

(f) The plants to be cut high.

Education Meet Held Wednesday

Dr. V. T. Thayer, chairman of the Progressive Education Commission on the Secondary School Curriculum, will appear at Alabama College June 29-July1 for a daily lecture in connection with the Progressive Educational Demonstration School now in session on the campus. Dr. Thayer is director of the Ethical Culture School of New York and formerly a faculty member of Ohio State University.

He will deliver a special talk during the radio broadcast of the College from the studio in Palmer Hall at 3 o'clock Sunday.

The Regional Conference of the Progressive Educational Association will be held on the campus July 1-3 Dr. Thayer's lectures will serve as an effective preliminary to this meeting, which annually has drawn educators from all sections of the South.

Dr. Thayer has worked intensively for several years on problems of the secondary school curriculum. Committees of his commission are now making studies of the problems of adolescents and are working out problems of rebuilding courses in the subject matter fields.

He will hold seminars on problems of the high school student and the reconstruction of the secondary school curriculum.

Other special lecturers to appear in addition to the regular summer school and the Progressive Education faculties include Dr. H. Gordon Hullfish, of Ohio State University; Dr. Genevieve Leary, of New Haven, Conn.; and Dr. Laura Zirbes, of Ohio State University.

Three Millionth Ford V-8 Out

The 3,000,000th Ford V-8 rolled off the assembly line at the River Rouge plant of the Ford Motor Company at Dearborn last week, to establish a new sales record and mark another important milestone in the history of this great industrial enterprise.

And the 3,000,000th Ford V-8 was also the 1,000,000th Ford V-8 manufactured since June 13th of last year—a million car year for the world's leading automobile manufacturing company!

This was a record accomplishment of which Ford Motor Company executives may well be proud, because, in the opinion of trade leaders, it marked complete public acceptance of the Ford V-8 principle of design and construction and justified Henry Ford's confidence that the multi-cylinder car with its greater power and flexibility would become the outstanding favorite with the buying public if offered to them in the low-priced field.

During the darkest days of the depression, while other automobiles builders and executives were doubting the future of the automobile business—and in fact of American business in general—Henry Ford never lost confidence. In fact, the sage of Dearborn went to work with a will—and many millions of dollars—to bring out a new model with exceptional quality, with a new engine of exceptional performance and that model was the now famous Ford V-8.

Motor men doubted that the public—which was then six cylinder minded, would ever accept an eight cylinder car. But Ford knew his public as well as his motor cars.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Reid had as their guests Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Riser of Alpine, Mr. and Mrs. Yeager Horn of Columbiana and Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Killingsworth, Celia and Marvin, Jr., of Montgomery.

Mrs. Alice M. Nabors has sold her home on North Highlands, and will move to Mobile. Mrs. Nabors has lived here for 26 years. In future she plans to spend the winters in Mobile and the summers in Pennsylvania, her native state.

Business Women To Visit Campus

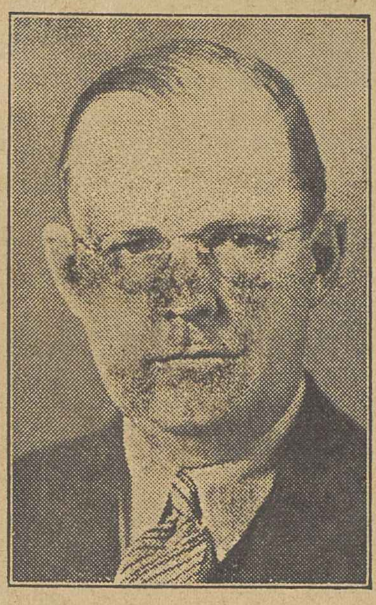
SPECIAL CONFERENCE SCHEDULED FOR SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 11

A large number of business women of the state are expected to visit the campus of Alabama College Saturday, July 11, for the special conference, following the Student Career Conference of the three preceding days. Mrs. Eudora Ramsay Richardson will speak at the general meeting Saturday morning at 10:30 on "Where Are We Now and Where Are We Going?" emphasizing opportunities for women in various vocations.

The second general meeting will be held at 2 o'clock that afternoon, also in Palmer Hall, when a special bulletin on the Employment of Women will be presented. It was prepared by the College in cooperation with the State and National Business and Professional Women's Clubs. Following its presentation by Dean T. H. Napier, Dr. Iva L. Peters and Dr. Minnie L. Steckel will be heard on "The National and the Bulletin" and "What the Bulletin Means to Alabama," respectively.

At 4 o'clock the Montevallo Business and Professional Women's Club will entertain the guests at tea. Registration for this special session will be held from 8 to 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning.

The third annual Student Career Conference, at which Mrs. Richardson will speak three times, will be held July 8, 9 and 10. A number of unofficial guests will attend this session, which is planned primarily for young women who finished their high school work the past session.



DR. V. T. THAYER

Dr. Thayer is educational director of the Ethical Cultural School, of New York. He was at Alabama College last week leading the seminar on "Reconstruction of the Secondary School Curriculum," which opened the Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Association.

Education Meeting Closed Last Friday

The Regional Conference on Progressive Education, at Alabama College, closed last Friday afternoon following a three-day session. Obervation in the Demonstration School continued from 7:30 to 11 Friday morning.

Study groups and planning groups for work of the Demonstration School met during the morning, while at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon Mrs. Norma Smith Bristow, chairman, presided at the closing meeting when group leaders summarized the work of the groups.

Thursday evening, "Chalk Dust," a W. P. A. performance, was presented in Palmer Hall. The dancers from the School of Organic Education at Fairhope were presented earlier in the evening.

E. S. Brinkley, assistant superintendent of schools at Norfolk, Virginia, was available by appointment for conferences on the curriculum Thursday afternoon. The discussion group leaders included Dr. C B. Smith, of the State Department of Education; Dr. Alice V. Keliher, of the Progressive Education Association; Dr. Ralph E. Wager, of Emory Univerity; Miss Elizabeth Gilmartin, supervisor of art at Toledo; Miss Lucille Foust; of the State Teachers College at Livingston; and Mrs. Bristow, of the State Department of Education.

Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education, presided at the general meeting Wednesday evening when Dr. V. T. Thayer, Dr. Doak S. Campbell, Dr. Pahl Hounchell, Dr. H. C. Pannell and Dr. B. R. Showalter were heard. M. Ziolkowski, professor of Piano at Alabama College, rendered the following selections: Polonaise in A flat, Chopin; Erkling, Schubert-Liszt; La Companella, Paganini-Liszt.

C. M. T. C. APPLICATIONS CLOSE JULY 15

The Citizens Military Training Camp Procurement campaign will close on July 15th. Three boys from Shelby county have been accepted for camp. They are: James M. Black, Montevallo, Ala., Perry Letson, Columbiana, Ala., and Luther Franklin McGiboney, Columbiana, Ala.

There are still three vacancies to be filled in Shelby County. Should these vacancies not be filled by July 15th, they will be transferred to other counties in this camp and from which applications have been received in excess of the county quota Applications must be received in the office of the Camp Area Commander at Fort McClellan before July 16th.

Magnolia's Daughter, Grown Up, Completes 'Show Boat' Cycle In 1936 Screen Version

In the Universal 1936 version of "Show Boat," which opens at the Strand Theatre on Sunday, the story of Kim, Magnolia's daughter, is presented, completing the cycle of Captain Andy Hawk's show boat family.

While the stage play revealed Kim only as a child, the film shows her as a grownup girl who has inherited her mother's talent for singing and dancing. Magnolia finds renewed happiness in the triumph scored by her daughter in a musical revue. Irene Dunne is starred as Magnolia and Sunnie O'Dea portrays the matured Kim.

The daughter makes her hit on the stage singing the same song, "Gallivantin' Around," that her mother did on the show boat. This film sequence emphasizes the contrast between the settings, customs and clothes of different generations.

The blossoming of Kim rounds out the career of her mother; makes the flame of Magnolia's existence burn brightly again. It wipes out the troubled memories the mother has of Ravenal who loved her once; permits her to think of her youth with a tinge of the gladness she knew in the days when the Mississippi seemed to flow with romance at flood tide.

There is a final meeting between Magnolia and Ravenal, while Kim dances to stardom in the show within a show. The wife still holds her beauty, glowing and tranquil. The husband is weary; worn threadbare from unrest and battering against the world. He is ready to lay down the struggle. Kim, vibrant and fresh, picks up the golden threads that weave the web of life.

Allan Jones, as Ravenal, sings three romantic duets with Irene Dunne in the earlier sequences of "Show Boat."

HERE COMES THE SHOW BOAT

"Show Boat," with the memorable romance and drama of Edna Ferber's novel . . . with the lingering melody and rhytham of Jerome Kern's music. "Show Boat," with the charming glamor and human appeal of Oscar Hammerstein's play. The 1936 Universal film version comes to the Strand theatre on Sunday and Monday.

The picture tells the life story of Magnolia and Ravenal on a Mississippi show boat. Irene Dunne, the star, and Allan Jones capture the imagination in these romantic singing roles. Charles Winninger plays Captain Andy, genial river showman. His straitlaced wife is portrayed by Helen Westley.

"Show Boat" is filled with music and dancing and heart throbs, as Julie, sings several delightful songs. Paul Robeson, noted baritone, gives resonant voice and robust life to his role, with a chorus of 200 singers providing magnificent musical effects in the background. A cast of 3,500 people gives reality and sweep to the production.

Besides the surefire songs that are inseparable from "Show Boat," there are three new Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammersetin tunes.

At the Strand theatre, you will be enchanted by "Show Boat" music. You will be enthralled by its drama. "Show Boat" will echo in your thoughts as the most glorious offering that ever floated on the river of memory. The opening date is Sunday, July 11. Be sure and see it.

Holiday Celebrations Take Heavy Toll

More than 400 persons paid with their lives for the 1936 Independence Day celebration, a state-by-state tabulation by the United Press showed.

The toll from fireworks was only seven but hot Summer weather sent many thousands to lakes and rivers where 107 drowned. Other scores of thousands crowded onto the highways and 205 of them died in traffic accidents.

Suicides, murders, holiday liquor, and even amusement park accidents contributed to the double-holiday death toll.

Although automobile accidents caused more than half the deaths, officials of the National Safety Council said the traffic toll was less than anticipated on the basis of previous years. Strenuous caution campaigns by newspapers were credited with the drop.

Baptists To Give A Picnic July 13

The executive committee of the Shelby County Baptist Association is sponsoring a picnic to be held at Shelby Springs next Monday afternoon, July 13, at 4:00 p.m. The picnic is being held in honor of Rev. and Mrs. D. Z. Woolley and their family, who are leaving the county to take up work at Eclectic. Members of all the churches in the assocation are invited to come with basket lunches We want to express our sincere appreciation to these friends who have meant so much to the associational work during the past few years.

Baptist Church

PALESTINE PICTURES

At the Baptist church Sunday evening at 7:45, Dr. Pearson will present stereopticon pictures of Palestine and the Life of Christ. The service will be a real worship service in which the Life of our Lord is presented through photographs of modern Palestine, art pictures, and appropriate hymns. Dr. Pearson has presented this program in a number of churches and some have asked that it be repeated. All have said that it was different and unusually interesting. It opens the eye gate as well as the ear gate of the soul. Everyone is invited to be present.

The Lord's Supper will be observed at the worship service Sunday morning. In this service we shall worship our Lord through one of the two ordinances which He gave to us as living pictures of the gospel. All the basic facts of the gospel are set forth in a pictorial way in these two symbolic rites. We would urge every member to come Sunday morning and join in this memorial supper.

Sunday school will meet at 9:45 Sunday morning. Every member of the church ought to be in Sunday school studying the Bible on Sunday morning. If there are any who have such adequate knowledge of the Bible that they do not need to attend Sunday school, we need them very badly for teachers and we invite them to volunteer for that service. Let us start a campaign to enlist every church member in Sunday school

The Womans Missionary Society will meet at the church at 3:00 o'clock Monday afternoon. The meeting is being held an hour earlier than usual because a number of the members want to attend the picnic to be held at Shelby Springs Monday afternoon in honor of Brother D. Z. Woolley and their family. All the ladies of the church are urged to be present at 3:00 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Dr. Hullfish Lectured At The College

Dr. H. Gordon Hullfish, professor of Education at Ohio State University, visited Alabama College campus Monday and Wednesday for special lectures in connection with the summer school program. In the past few years he has devoted much of his time to reorganizing and redirecting the program of the Dalton High School at New York City. He held seminars on redirecting the program of the secondary school, and the integration of the secondary school program with the life needs of the adolescent.

Dr. V. T. Thayer was the first special lecturer to appear here for such meetings, and others to be heard later are Dr. Laura Zirbes, of Ohio State University; Dr. Genevieve M. Leary, director of practice schools at New Haven, Conn.; and Mrs. Norma Smith Bristow, of the State Department of Education.

The Progressive Education work at Alabama College will continue until the close of the first term of summer school, July 22.

Student Career Conference Postponed

Short School Term Is More Expensive

A STATEMENT FROM MRS. JAMES FITTS HILL OF STATE P.-T. A.

Montgomery, July 2.—The cost of schools is greater when they close early than when they are allowed to run a normal term, Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, declared in a state-wide radio hookup from Montgomery Wednesday.

Mrs. Hill based her statement upon a study made by the federal government when the schools closed in 1932-33. Forty per cent of the students failed to complete their grades and had to repeat the year' work, increasing the expense for the state.

Since the school term the past year was shorter than any during the depression except 1932-33, Mrs. Hill predicted similar failures and extra cost for next year.

The federal study was made in 79 high schools in 14 Alabama counties. Fifteen per cent of the students failed to return to school at all in the fall of 1933, and the study showed 41 per cent of them idle, 25 per cent at work at low pay, 18 per cent on the road as drifters, 12 per cent married in their early teens, and two and a half per cent criminals.

Democracy depends upon equal educational opportunities and trained citizens. When schools do not have adequate funds the rural schools suffer most and rural students do not have equal opportunities. Since the depression the tendency in most states has been to improve the schools and spend more money on them. Alabama has not followed the tendency.

Mrs. Hill pointed out that in spite of rapid advancements made by Alabama schools in the twenties, we never did catch up with other states in length of term and quality of instruction. Now we are dropping further behind. At the same time our wealth and income remain low and our crime bills is above the average.

This talk was the second in a series being delivered by the P.-T. A. over the radio system of the state. In the first talk last week Mrs. Hill outlined a three-point program of governmental economy, complete earmarking of school funds, and enough taxes to support schools.

MRS. VERNON DIED LAST WEEK IN BIRMINGHAM

Mrs. Marvin Vernon, age about 50, died Tuesday of last week in a Birmingham hospital. Burial was at Randall Graveyard last Thursday. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. B. Canant.

Mrs. Vernon was a resident of the Enon community and a member of the Enon Baptist Church. She is survived by her husband and several brothers and sisters. Before her mariage Mrs. Vernon was a Miss Anderson.

Fear Spread of Infantile Paralysis Epidemic Is Cause of Action By Authorities

The third annual Student Career Conference, originally scheduled for July 8-10 at Alabama College, has been postponed indefinitely on advice of Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, on account of the prevalence of infantile paralysis in some sections of the State, according to announcemment of President A. F. Harman.

Young women who finished high schools of the State were invited to represent their schools at this meeting for discussion of vocational opportunities, the chief addresses to be made by Mrs. Eudora Ramsay Richardson, of Richmond, Va., and Superintendent H. G. Dowling, of Tuscaloosa.

In addition to the main meetings, round tables were to be held in a variety of fields open to trained women.

Meeting Of Business Women Not Affected By Postponement Order

Although the annual Student Career Conference at Alabama College has been indefinitely postponed due to the prevalence of infantile paralysis in some sections of the state, it has been announced that the conference of Business and professional women will be held as scheduled on Saturday, July 11.

Mrs. Eudora Ramsay Richardson, of Richmond, Va., will speak at the first general meeting Saturday at 10:30 in Palmer Hall following an expression of welcome by President A. F. Harman. Lunch will be served in the college dining hall at 12:35.

A second general meeting will be held at 2 o'clock that afternoon when Dean T. H. Napier will present the bulletin on Employability of Women which was prepared by the college in cooperation with the national and state Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Dr. Iva L. Peters will discuss The National Organzation and the Bulletin and Dr. Minnie L. Steckel will speak on What the Bulletin Means to Alabama. It is a volume of 85 pages constituting a special study on the employability of women.

The Montevallo business and professional women will entertain the visitors at tea at 4 o'clock that afternoon. Registration will be held from 8 to 10:30 Saturday morning. Music at the general meetings will be furnished by H. D. LeBaron, organist and York Kildea violinist, members of the School of Music faculty here.

Resolutions Adopted Opposing Federal Taxes On Gas and Motor Oils

The following resolutions were adopted by the Shelby County Petroleum Indutries Committee, at its meeting in Columbiana, Tuesday night of last week:

Whereas, the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes were enacted as "temporary" measures in 1932 and have been reenacted each year since that time, and

Whereas, the proceeds from these "special" taxes impose an unjustifiable and unreasonable added burden upon the motorist, who was already, and is now, sadly overburdened by State and "Local" gasoline taxes, and

Whereas, the federal government should withdraw from this tax field leaving it solely to the States, and

Whereas, H. R. 12161 by Congressman Boland now pending in Congress would levy a tax of 1c per gallon on all "fuel oil" and "distillate" for the purpose of benefitting another industry to the deteriment of consumers of these products and to the petroleum industry, and

Whereas, the petroleum industry is already paying 201 different taxes upon its properties, products and services,

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that this committee herewith places itself on record as opposing the continuance of the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes, and opposing the enactment of H. R. 12161, and

Be It Further Resolved, that our Congressman and two United States Senators be requested and urged to assist in the repeal of the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes, and to oppose the enactment of the "fuel oil" and "distillate" tax, H. R. 12161.

Whereas, the gasoline tax is a "special" road tax created for but one purpose, that of construction and maintenance of roads and bridges, and

Whereas, as such, there is positively no justifiable reason for the use of the funds derived therefrom for any other purpose, and

Whereas, the Alabama Legislature passed two "Local Acts", House Bill 203 and Senate Bill 45 through "Senatorial courtesy" at the last session, permitting the diversion of gasoline tax funds to other purposes, and

Whereas, these "Local Acts" may cause Alabama to lose several millions of dollars in Federal Aid road funds in future years, which will affect the entie State of Alabama, and

Whereas, Alabama has the highest "special motor vehicle" cost per vehicle and the lowest automobile registration per capita in the United States due to the State 6c, Federal 1c and average Local 1c gasoline taxes, in some localities the total being 10c per gallon, and

Whereas, the "local" county and municipal gasoline taxes are exceedingly destructive to the business of local dealers and merchants because they drive business out of the area affected,

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that this committee herewith places itself on record as being unalterably oppoed t othe diversion of gasoline taxes or other "special" motor vehicle taxes to purposes other than the construction and maintenance of roads and brides, and

Be it further resolved, that our State Representatives and Senator be requested and urged to lend their full cooperation in opposing any and all gasoline tax and other road fund "diversion" measures, both "local" and "general", introduced in the Alabama Legislature, and that they also lend their cooperation in passing whatever legislation is necessary to invalidate the two above "local" acts when the Legislature convenes agin, and

Be it further resolved, that our State Representatives and Senator be requested and urged to oppose any and all proposals which would increase the gasoline tax, and also to actively assist in bringing about a uniform gasoline tax rate through the elimination of all "local" gasoline taxes.

EARL M. HEARNE
Secretary,
Alabama Petroleum Industries Committee

Mr. Hearne attended the meeting at Columbiana last week when the Shelby County petroleum products dealers were organized and the accompanying resolutions adopted.

Mr. and Mrs. Barney Burnett, Mr. Johnnie Hardy and Miss Nellie Moore spent the past week end fishing on the Gulf of Mexico at Camp Bear Point, Caswell. They returned Monday with a fine catch of king mackerel and a sun tan which promised to reach the extent of a blistering.

Two Men Drown At Lay Dam

ALLEN PRICE HODGES AND THOMAS A. McLANE VICTIMS

Their boats capsized by the swirling waters suddenly released through a large turbine, two Birmingham men lost their lives at Lay Dam, near Clanton, early last Sunday morning.

Allen Price Hodges and Thomas A. McLane were drowned when turbines of the Alabama Power Company plant automatically opened, releasing tons of water which instantly capsized their boats throwing them into the surging torrent from whicr they were unable to rescue themselves.

McLane was drowned after attempting to save a girl, Mamie Rich, of Alabaster. She was saved.

The water, driving up through gates at the bottom of the dam, overturned two boats and endangered the lives of approximately fifteen persons in five other boats also below the dam.

"The boats began to tumble and roll just like a cycolne had hit them," declared Coroner J. Mell Martin, of Clanton, who investigated the tragedy and pronounced it accidental death.

"The people fishing below the dam had been warned repeatedly to get back—that they were in dangerous water.

"The plant was running a light load with all but one turbine idle. The water on the lower side of the dam was still. Then some development on another part of the power system added the load to this plant, which automatically and without warning started the idle machines. When this was done the waters below that were still suddenly began to pitch and heave, piling up in great swells and receding with a powerful suction into the depths at the bottom of the dam.

"The people who had been thrown into the water were helpless to extricate themselves, as the mad boiling current would pitch them to the surface and quickly suck them under again."

Employees of the plant shut down the machines as quickly as possible and rendered assistance in rescuing those who had been caught in the maelstrom.

Strand Theatre Will Install Cooling System

Mr. Eddie Watson announces an added comfort in store for attendants at the Strand Theatre, when a large and efficient air-cooling system will be ready for operation in the next few days.

The electrically-driven and water cooling device will draw fresh air from the outside of the building and after cooling it, will drive two currents, one on each side of the building, through the auditorium and out at the front. This will afford a greater degree of comfort to theatre goers during the hot weather, and will no doubt receive a unanimous vote of approval from the patrons.

Miss Mary Woolley Buys Nabors Property

The property of Mrs. Alice M. Nabors, including a large two-story home and an adjacent small cottoge, has been bought by Miss Mary Woolley. The property is located on Highland Avenue at the east end of the pavement.

The deal transferring the property was consumated last week, immediately after which Mrs. Nabors acated, moving to Mobile. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Reece Woolley have moved into the large house, occupying the lower floor.

One of the apartments in the home is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robin Hood. Miss Lorraine Peter and her mother live in the small cottage.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

On Sunday, July 12th, at the 11 o'clock worship service Rev. Augustus J. Cox, pastor, will speak on the topic, "Why the Righteous Suffer". In accordance with the custom of our church, the Sacrement of the Lord's Supper will be celebrated. The music for the service will be produced over the Hammond Electric Organ, with Prof. H. D. LeBaron at the console. Both members and friends are invited and urged to attend.

Remember! The church school which meets at 9:45 a.m. Sunday, under the able leadership of Prof. W. J. Kennerly, superintendent. Everybody is welcome.

Drouth Crisis Brings Federal Aid—Business Revival Continues in First Half of 1936—Steel Industry Fights Drive for Unionization.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FEARS that drouth may irretrievably destroy farm crops in North and South Dakota, eastern Montana and Wyoming prompted President Roosevelt to marshal $500,000,000 in relief funds to combat the damage and to develop further plans for fighting drouth.

Secretary Wallace

Secretary of Agriculture Henry W. Wallace, who left Washington for a personal survey of the stricken areas, declared that from all reports conditions had become as serious as they were in 1934, due to lack of sorely needed rains.

The secretary declared that unles rains descend in the sun-scorched regions the government will buy 30,000,000 head of cattle in the next month.

In St. Paul, Minn., the governors of the five drouth-stricken northwestern states met with Federal Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins and administrators from the various states. Mr. Hopkins ordered relief jobs made immediately available for from 25,000 to 50,000 farmers who have seen their sole source of livelihood destroyed. The jobs were to be made available on water conservation projects, farm-to-market roads, rural schools and recreational projects.

President Roosevelt, in Washington, appointed a special committee composed of Secretary Wallace, Budget Director Daniel Bell, Aubrey Williams, Assistant Works Progress Administrator and Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator. They will work in cooperation with a committee of department of agriculture officials. The President instructed Budget Director Bell to study government appropriations to determine what funds are available.

CONTINUING business recovery during the first six months of 1926 fulfilled the hopes of optimistic prognosticators and surpassed the expectations of conservative forecasters.

All the leading trade barometers registered fair business weather at the close of the first half of the year. The production of automobiles reached 2,400,000 units in the first six months of 1936, the best for the period since 1929.

Improvement was further reflected by the steel industry, the operations of which rose from 49.2 per cent of capacity at the start of the year to 71.2 per cent at the end of June. The output of electricity climbed steadily to reach an all time peak in June.

The steady recovery of the railroads was indicated by carloadings which worked up to approach their best levels since 1931. The figures for the first six months of 1936 were substantially better than those for the similar period of 1935.

A strong upsurge of home building gave impetus to the construction industry although it still remained at subnormal levels.

Another barometer of improved conditions was the stock market which extended the gains it made in 1935 and reached the highest ground it has held since 1931.

AN INCREASE of 90 per cent in the cash farm income on cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn and hogs from 1932 to 1935 was recorded under the Agricultural Adjustment act, invalidated by the Supreme court last January, according to the annual report of Chester C. Davis, former administrator, made public in Washington.

Chester Davis

Cash farm income from these five major farm products which came under production control, rental and benefit payments was $1,365,000,000 in 1932, the year before the AAA became operative. For 1935 it was $2,593,000,000.

The report pointed out that cash farm income from all other products increased in the same period from $3,012,000,000 to $4,307,000,000.

Mr. Davis, who was recently appointed by President Roosevelt to the Federal Reserve board, declared that cash available for living expenses, taxes and interest from farm cash income was the highest in 1935 since 1929, and two and one-half times greater than it was in 1932.

Under the AAA, the report sets forth, rental and benefit payments accounted for one-fourth of the increase in all cash farm income from $4,377,000,000 in 1932 to $6,900,000,000 in 1935. Mr. Davis' report concludes:

"Increased buying power among farmers has been translated into increased business activity, and as in the case of past depressions, that measure of business recovery already achieved has been preceded by an advance in farm income.

"Income circulates more freely as spending is made possible among those consumer groups whose need for goods is particularly great. For a period of years prior to the depression farmers had suffered a disparity of prices which returned them a relatively small share of the national income. During the depression this disparity increased. An enormous accumulation of farmer wants was dammed up. This deferred demand awaited an increased flow of income."

The agricultural administration, the report revealed, had disbursed $1,529,114,060 up to December 31, 1935.

DEFYING a drive to force unionization of its 500,000 workers, the steel industry in a strongly worded statement issued by the American Iron and Steel institute declared "it will oppose any attempt to compel its employees to join a union or pay tribute for the right to work."

Although the statement did not mention him by name, it was regarded by observers as the first official response to the recent announcement by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, of a campaign to unionize steel employees.

In order to prevent the "closed shop," the industry said it "will use its resources to the best of its ability to protect its employees and their families from intimidation, coercion and violence and to aid them in maintaining collective bargaining free from interference from any source."

The unionization attempt comes at the time when steel operations have set a new record for 1936.

Reasserting its belief in the principles of collective bargaining, the industry's statement pointed out that employees now pick their own representatives for collective bargaining by secret ballot.

IN ESTES PARK, Colo., Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, continued his vacation begun with his family the week before and made plans for reconvening of the Kansas legislature and for the acceptance speech he will deliver in Topeka on July 23.

Gov. Landon

Although Governor Landon was resting preparatory to the rigors of the campaign, affairs of his state and conferences with political advisers occupied considerable of his attention.

When the Kansas legislature reconvenes a proposed amendment to the state constitution will be introduced, giving the state broad power to provide far-reaching legislation for social welfare and to cooperate with the federal government. Governor Landon was quoted as describing the proposed amendment as "satisfactory."

The amendment, which may be the basis for similar action in other states. reads:

"Nothing contained in this constitution shall be construed to limit the power of the legislature to enact laws providing for financial assistance to aid infirm or dependent persons; for the public health; unemployment compensation and general social security and providing for the payment thereof by tax or otherwise and to receive aid from the federal government therefor."

Charles P. Taft and Ralph W. Robey, two members of his research and advisory staff, were scheduled to join the Republican Presidential nominee and to provide him with further data for the notification ceremony speech—the first major political statement since his Cleveland nomination.

In the meantime, John Hamilton, newly elected chairman of the Republican National committee, was on a tour of the East conferring with political leaders and laying lines for the party's strategy in the coming Presidential campaign.

RETIRING from the post of Comptroller General, J. R. McCarl announced that following the expiration of his term of office he would aid in the government reorganization study undertaken by the senate committee headed by Senator Byrd of Virginia.

General McCarl criticized New Deal emergency agencies as "loosely and extravagantly set up" and as "tax consuming in the extreme." He declared that a systematic reorganization of both regular and emergency agencies would improve government administration and reduce the cost to taxpayers.

BRECKINRIDGE LONG, American ambassador to Italy, submitted his resignation to President Roosevelt because of illness. The diplomat declared that he hopes to recuperate his health during the summer and to take an active part in the presidential campaign in the autumn.

Mr. Long's place will be taken by Undersecretary of State William Phillips. He will represent the United States government in Rome in an effort to solve Italo-American problems arising from Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia.

Mr. Phillips has had a distinguished career in the diplomatic service. He has held posts in Europe, the Far East and Canada and has three times been sub-secretary in the state department.

The most pressing problem facing Mr. Phillips in his new post is the regularizing of America's relations with Ethiopia, now claimed by Italy as a territory, but still recognized by this country as independent. The importance of this question, observers declare, is indicated by the selection of Mr. Phillips for the Italian post. Only on rare occasions in the past have active sub-cabinet officers been given diplomatic posts.

WHILE representatives of leading powers gathered in Geneva to lift League of Nations economic sanctions against Italy and the refugee emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia prepared to plead the cause of his nation's freedom, European statesmen considered the possibility of a reorganization and reformation of the League.

Haile Selassie

Observers agreed that while informal discussions on the League reformation would be held, it was probable that the question of reorganizing the international pact body would be postponed until the September assembly.

YIELDING to the urgings of party leaders, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York announced that he would run again for the office of governor. The governor had announced several months ago that he would not be a candidate again, giving as his reasons the press of personal business and a desire to retire to private life.

Democratic leaders declared the governor's decision will help the national ticket to carry New York in the election next November.

In a statement issued to newspapermen, Governor Lehman said he could "no longer resist" the appeals of national and state Democratic leaders. The statement said:

"Regardless of personal considerations, however compelling, I feel that I can no longer resist the pleas of my party both in the state and in the nation or of those with whom I have worked in closest association for many years and with whom I have waged the fight for equal opportunity and social security.

"Therefore if my party in this state chooses to nominate me again and if the people of the state again call on me for service I shall proudly accept the call and will devote myself wholeheartedly to the interest of the people of the state."

DESPITE his previous decision declaring unconstitutional the tax on railroads to permit pensions, Justice Jennings Bailey of the District of Columbia Supreme Court ruled in an oral opinion that the railroad retirement board could pay pensions to railroad workers.

The justice declared that his previous decision on the validity of the rail pension laws could not be construed to mean that the retirement act itself was unconstitutional. He ruled that the government could proceed to collect from rail workers a sum amounting to 3 1-2 per cent of their salaries and could use the money to pay retirement pensions to the workers when they reach 65 years of age or have worked 40 years.

He also ruled that the railroad retirement board could proceed to collect information on which to allot the pensions, provided it did so at its own expense and by recompensing the railroads for any clerical work involved.

Justice Bailey's original decision in the case had specifically enjoined the railroad retirement board from taking any steps to compel the railroads to furnish information. The decision ruled that the tax law adopted to finance the pensions was unconstitutional and ruled that the tax measure and retirement measure setting up means of paying the pensions were "inseparable."

FLOODS which followed a series of cloudbursts in south Texas caused property damage estimated at millions of dollars and cost the lives of 22 people.

Rains which fell at the rate of nine to ten inches a minute swelled the creeks and rivers of the afflicted areas into wild floods. It was reported that thousands of acres of farm land in Gonzales and adjoining counties were inundated.

As the flood waters receded they revealed a grave picture of destruction. The flood ripped through the settlement of Kyle, between Austin and San Antonio, washing out bridges and wrecking a train. It was here that the loss of life was greatest.

A King's Farewell
Good Soldier Obeys
An If or Two
40,000,000 Degrees

Paris.—To "last words of dying men" will be added those of the late King George of England — "I am sorry to keep you waiting like this." Typical of a good, modest king, always obedient to duty.

Arthur Brisbane

At the request of his ministers, including Sir John Simon, who waited upon him at the last moment, the king struggled pathetically to sign his name to a state paper, succeeded, then, turning to his advisers, spoke those last words, followed by a smile and nod with which he was accustomed to end an audience.

This was published in the Star of Johannesburg, South Africa, in a Reuter dispatch. Mr. Gunia sends the clipping from Gibsonia, Pa. Much obliged.

The Italian soldier Badoglio, in the striking uniform of an Italian marshal, returned to Rome and embraced Mussolini, who wore the uniform of a corporal of fascist militia. Napoleon also liked to be called the "little corporal."

Marshal Badoglio is an Italian soldier who obeys orders. When Mussolini's forces were marching on Rome, Badoglio, according to the story, said to the king: "What shall I do—wipe them out?" The king ordered: "No; no violence." Now, Mussolini rules, and on his orders Badoglio wipes out Haile Selassie and the government of Ethiopia.

Anything could happen in Europe, and one of the things considered quite possible, extremely disturbing to respectable old England and others, is an agreement between Mussolini and Hitler to make "a deal on Austria" profitable for both; not for Austria.

There is always, however, the memory of 1914, when Austria, Italy and the Kaiser had the triple alliance that did not "stand up." Such alliances usually go along racial lines, if they are to last. France and Italy are natural allies, both Latin; England and the United States would probably be found not far apart if a really big World war should ever come, with one or two other IFS.

Science proudly demonstrates for the Westinghouse company a new lamp that "rivals the beams of the sun." The demonstrator explained that the temperature at the sun's surface is about 11,732 degrees Fahrenheit, while the new lamp reaches 25,232 degrees Fahrenheit. That, however, as scientists know, is a long way from the sun's best temperature.

According to Sir James Jeans, there prevails in the depths of the sun temperature of "forty million degrees centigrade," which is considerably higher than any man-made temperature.

If you came within 1,000 miles of a 5 cent piece with a temperature of 40,000,000 degrees centigrade, you would be burned to a cinder; hard to believe, but true.

England protested against raising the elevation of guns on American warships because that would make our guns shoot too far. In case of war we might hit a British ship lined up against us.

Are animals capable of any thought?

A dog on Prince Edward island, whining and howling with its muzzle against a pile of clothing on the edge of a pool, attracted men who took from the water the bodies of two brothers, fifteen and seventeen years old. Could the dog have "thought out" a connection between the clothing and the disappearance of its young owners?

At Ur, ancient city of the Chaldeans, they show a gigantic brick temple, recently uncovered, where it has lain in the ground covered through the ages. It was constructed originally, like the tower of Babel, to enable the builders to get up into heaven and reach the gods. First they invented those pagan gods, and then they actually believed in them.

The United States navy has ordered 191 "bomber" airplanes; cheerful small news.

It is to be hoped that the government is trying to build bomber planes able to fly any ocean.

If war came, our bombing operations could be carried on in countries across the Atlantic or the Pacific. We should not want to do any bombing in America. After the first experiment, no country would send any ships within easy bombing or submarine range of these shores.

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Smith Bolt

Washington.—The arrival of the first robin does not guarantee the immediate arrival of spring but when the first robin is observed, folks generally consider that there is little left of winter. An out and out bolt by an individual in party politics likewise does not guarantee important defections, but, like the arrival of the early robin, an individual bolter, if he be a man of consequence, has a story of its own to tell. A bolt in party politics never attracts attention unless the bolting individual is of some consequence and, therefore, has a personal following. Thus it is that when we observe a bolt by a nationally known individual from his lifelong political affiliation, we immediately understand its significance. The scope of this significance, however, is the thing that concerns us.

Nearly everyone knows now that former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, has made known that he cannot support President Roosevelt for re-election. They know as well that the four other individuals who asked the Democratic National convention to push Mr. Roosevelt aside and nominate a Democrat can be classified as important individuals along with Governor Smith. No one dare say that former Sen. James A. Reed of Missouri, former Governor Ely of Massachusetts, Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state in Woodrow Wilson's administration and Daniel F. Cohalan, one time Tammany chieftain, are unimportant in politics. They have consistently figured in Democratic party councils and thus it becomes apparent that these five robins presage something more than just their own departure from the ranks of Roosevelt supporters.

I make this statement notwithstanding the declaration by James A. Farley that he would not dignify their statement with a reply. Of course, Mr. Farley as Postmaster General, Chairman of the Democratic National committee, Chairman of the New York State Democratic committee and delegate to the Democratic National convention, necessarily was a very busy man at the time the Smith statement, refusing support to President Roosevelt, was released for publication. Nevertheless, I am in a position to know that the Smith statement threw quite a scare into New Deal ranks. Frankly, they did not like it.

How much they do not like the Smith statement remains to be seen. I believe that no one can forecast exactly how much strength this group can pull away from Mr. Roosevelt in the November election. Much will depend upon their personal activities henceforth. If men like Smith and Jim Reed and Ely take the stump, if they go out onto the hustings and actually campaign for Governor Landon, the Republican nominee, it seems to me obvious that such campaigning will damage the Roosevelt cause materially.

* * *

Lemke Third Party

The Smith defection becomes the more important in my opinion because it occurred almost simultaneously with the development of a third party under the leadership of Rep. William Lemke, of North Dakota. This picture may not be entirely clear to everyone. It is substantially this: Lemke and his colleagues are attempting to draw together the extreme radicals, the leftist groups. The bulk of these will come from the Democratic party if the Lemke organization develops any particular strength. The Smith group represents the conservative, or rightist, element in the Democratic party. Thus we see detraction from the Roosevelt strength on two sides.

I do not mean to say here that the combination of these circumstances will insure President Roosevelt's defeat. Anyone who would make such a declaration at this time demonstrates his lack of knowledge of political maneuvers. What I am seeking to show, however, is that robins have arrived in the back yard and in the front yard of the New Deal party and if the leaders of the two obstreperous groups engage viciously in this campaign, the time may come when Mr. Farley will recognize their importance.

There already has been evidence of the influence of the Lemke radical segment. I think everyone agrees that the announcement of the third party's organization vitally affected the type of platform that was written in Washington and adopted by the Democratic convention at Philadelphia. From many sources comes information that the Democratic platform was made much more liberal—some critics describe it as more socialistic—than would have been the case had Representative Lemke stayed out of the political picture. He has the backing of Father Coughlin, the Detroit radio priest, and his national union for social justice and he has the backing of the remnants of the late Huey Long's share-the-wealth adherents. In addition, the Townsend $200-a-month pension followers will be found behind Lemke to some extent.

I have observed these third party movements many times before and usually they have failed to live up to expectations. They nearly always have developed fights among themselves because the very nature of and the very reason for their existence lies in their varied conceptions of what government ought to be or ought to do. Their sincerity precludes them usually from compromise and when politicians refuse to compromise, their organization, whatever it may be, naturally disintegrates.

Trouble in Europe

The European disturbances continue apace. It is a situation that is extremely interesting and one that probably will unfold, as the weeks go by, in curious ways. I say curious because to us in America, it has been rather difficult to understand the meaning of many of the maneuvers that followed the outright subjugation of Ethiopia by the power thirsty Mussolini of Italy.

Word that comes rather direct from inner councils in Europe indicates a tremendous fear on the part of Italy and France about German plans. The British likewise are displaying nervousness and the present alliances and combinations of power existing in Europe are none too stable. It is just possible that Germany's Hitler may, by his present activities, force a new cementing of these alliances and understandings among other powers but at this time there is no mistaking the fact that Europe, outside of Germany, is a bundle of nerves.

It seems that the basis for this nervousness is rooted in the clever scheming of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, who is something of an economic dictator under Hitler. Dr. Schacht is a brilliant negotiator. He understands economics, trade and finance as well as any man in Europe today and when you couple such knowledge with diplomatic keenness, you obviously have a man capable of accomplishing results.

Dr. Schacht is employing the methods he knows best, namely, economic understandings, in making new connections with central European power and the Balkan states. These countries always have looked to England and France for protection, especially since so many new states were created as a result of President Wilson's idealism. To see Dr. Schacht cleverly and cautiously gaining good will among those peoples causes France and Italy, and to a somewhat less extent, Great Britain, to wonder what is about to happen. Those nations always have been nervous about German plans. Probably the bulk of their fear was inspired by German silence and by the swift manner in which German moves have been consummated. However that may be, the fact remains that none of the important powers in Europe know what to expect as a result of the activities in which Dr. Schacht is now engaged.

* * *

Italy's Case

In the case of Italy, an economic weapon in the hands of Germany might easily prove disastrous because Italy virtually exhausted her gold reserve in the late war and her government cannot go on much longer in furnishing purchasing power for her people. France has been able to open certain markets to the little entente and to the Balkans and has, in addition, provided some financial aid. Thus, when Dr. Schacht pats the neighbors of Germany, France and Italy quickly develop cases of jitters.

It seems that Austria and Hungary cannot depend fully on Italian markets because of the low gold reserve in Italy. In the meantime as well, France has been losing millions in gold as her own domestic situation has been embroiled in a political whirlpool. The Austrians and the Hungarians and some of the other central Europeans recognize that unless France gets straightened out, there will not be purchasing power available there for their surplus produce. So, Dr. Schacht is cultivating what appears from this distance to be a fertile field.

There is no information from abroad at this time pointing conclusively to early conflict of arms. Yet, there are those in a position to understand European conditions and European psychology who think that a clash is not far off. They recall the antecedents of the World war and it must be admitted that there is a strange parallel evident today.

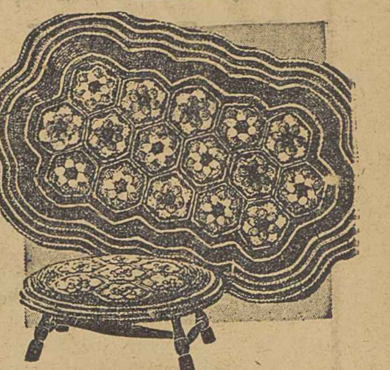
Crochet That Is New and Quite Simple to Do



Pattern 5544

"Can anyone do it?" Most assuredly! It is a lovely rug, a matching foot-stool top or pillow for quick crocheting. Easy, six-sided medallions are done one by one, each flower a different color with background uniform or not, as you please. Sew them together and you're ready to begin the border crochet, going round and round with stripes of color used to break the background. Rug wool, rags or candlewicking may be used.

In pattern 5544 you will find complete instructions for making the rug shown; an illustration of it and of all stitches needed; material requirements; color suggestions.

Gossip a Confession

GOSSIP is always a personal confession either of malice or imbecility, and the young should not only shun it, but by the most thorough culture relieve themselves from all temptation to indulge in it. It is a low, frivolous, and too often a dirty business. There are country neighborhoods in which it rages like a pest. Churches are split in pieces by it. Neighbors are made enemies by it for life. In many persons it degenerates into a chronic disease, which is practically incurable. Let the young cure it while they may. —J. G. Holland.

Saturday's money would just square the bank account. As for the hotel bill—"Well, I'll give them my clothes," Barry decided, "and I'll have something left in my jeans when I move out of here."

He phoned Peggy again, and then dined frugally and went back to his room. Step by step, he went over its details, seeing everything in the new light cast by the events of the past few hours. At midnight, for the fifth or sixth time, he re-read the story in the Globe. "Well, that's that," he said aloud, tossing the paper into the waste-basket and winding his silver wrist-watch. "Morano's dead, young Ridder'll be free tomorrow, old Ridder'll be home Saturday, and that's that. Wonder where I'll be a week from now."

It didn't matter much. "Nothing matters much," he told himself again, dwelling on Pat's phrase, "Not without Pat, it doesn't. She's a grand girl. Out of my class, though. A week from now, she'll be playing tennis and going over to dinner at the Ridders. Wonder if Peg'll be there. Wonder what's going to happen to those two young people?"

In Friday morning's paper, under "Personal Intelligence," he found a mention of the Winslows. "Mr. and Mrs. Peter Winslow are sailing on the Aquitania next Wednesday," the item read, "for an extended tour of the Continent." That was that, too. Barry's drama was ending with all its principal characters disposed of, as well-made drama should end.

Winslow's secretary called him just before noon. "Mr. Winslow wants me to tell you that Rogers will be free in an hour or two."

"How's Mrs. Winslow?"

"Much better. Mr. Winslow's still with her, though."

"And the Hambidges?"

"No; they went back to Southampton last night."

Once more, that was that, Barry thought, getting his hat and making tracks for the subway. He reached the Tombs well in advance of official orders for the release of "Jay Rogers." It was nearly five o'clock, indeed, when "Jay Rogers" appeared, looking very white and haggard, and the last train had left for Southampton. "You can talk to Peggy on the phone," Barry told him, "and then you'd better have dinner with me, and a good night's rest at my hotel. The Bremen gets in very early, and you'll want to be on the dock."

Jack looked at him quizzically.

"Will I?"

"Won't you?"

"I suppose so. I'd like to see my mother."

"I'd like to see her myself," Barry said. "She's been swell to you, all right."

"Yes."

At dinner, Jack declared, "I'll take that job on the paper now, if my father'll give it to me."

"Why not?"

"You started me thinking. I can see the old man's viewpoint. He's got to be decent to Peggy, though. It's both of us, or neither. . . . What's going to happen to you?"

"Search me!"

"Look here," Jack blurted. "I'm Ridder now. Who needs to know that I was ever Jay Rogers? I've been at Southampton all the time, writing letters to my mother, and everything. You've been Barry Gilbert, working on the Globe, and likely to go on working there. What's the matter with that?"

"Willetts is the matter with it," Barry answered — "Willetts, and Evans, and Winslow, and all the camera-clickers on the newspapers. There've been several pictures of you already. I can't understand why you weren't identified long ago."

"Maybe I was," Ridder admitted. "Your old college chums don't exactly run after you while you're in jail. They don't get to be college chums until you're in Who's Wifo."

"Anyway," Barry continued, "your scheme's out. I want to come clean. Don't ask me why. I was going to run away a week ago, and I could not make it. 'Gentlemen don't do that,' I said. I've got a new picture of myself as a gentleman."

"That's what does the trick, I guess," Jack speculated. "Most of us spend our lives trying to live up to the portraits of ourselves that hang over our mental mantel-pieces. Yours was of a reckless, devil-may-care young vagabond. Then you moved into a house, and company, where that picture didn't fit. You hung up a new one, and you've got to live up to that now. It was the same way with me. The picture of myself I liked was of an irresponsible, slightly dissipated young genius. The family portraits didn't appeal to me. Yours did—your new picture of yourself, I mean. I'm going to try to be like that the rest of my life."

They were lingering over cigars and coffee now.

"What is a gentleman?" Barry asked.

Jack smiled.

"The fellow who gets the right portrait."

"I suppose so," Barry said. "Family and clothes didn't make you one—not when you were getting drunk and forging checks. I wasn't one when I took another man's name, and money, and made up to a girl who thought I was somebody else. . . . Pictures over mantel-pieces. That's another word for tradition, I guess. The tradition that makes men defend women, and go down on sinking ships, and all that sort of thing. When that stops being our picture of ourselves, 'God help all of us,' I told Pat once . . . Come on; let's go to a movie!"

CHAPTER XII

THE next afternoon — around three o'clock—Harwood phoned.

"The old man wants to see you. Here at his office. I'd come quick if I were you."

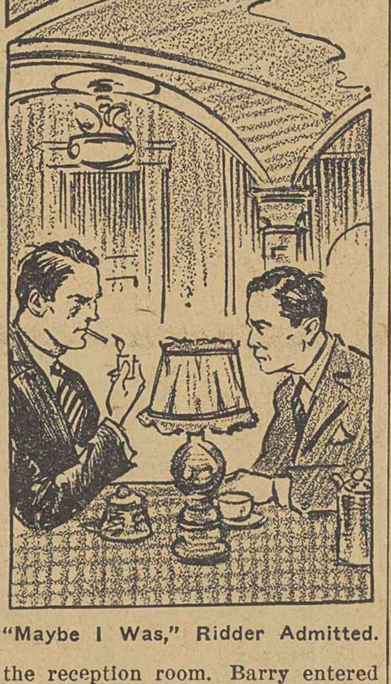
So Jack had told him.

Or Evans.

"I'd be glad if you'd tell Willetts, and the rest," Barry had said to the chauffeur. "It'll save me introducing the subject." It would, too. He had dreaded his first few moments with Ridder—beginning his story with a pair of cold, calm eyes boring into him. They would be cold eyes; he felt sure of that.

And they were.

"The big chief" sat at his big desk in a big, richly-furnished office with a big door and a little one. The big double door opened into the reception room. Barry entered through that, and found himself facing Ridder and the smaller single door behind him.



"Maybe I Was," Ridder Admitted.

Ridder was reading a radiogram, and he went on reading. A tall, thin man, with New England written all over him. A youngish man for his age, which might have been fifty. He wore gold-rimmed spectacles. His long, thin, absolutely straight mouth was higher at the right end, and his right eye was longer and narrower than his left. He had a sharp chin, and a thin nose, and a broad forehead, with thin, graying, sandyish hair. The kind of man who could say "Good morning" as though that ended the discussion.

"All right," Barry repeated to himself. "I'll take my medicine. It'll soon be over, anyway. He isn't going to give a damn what I did for his son. If I can say anything to make it easier for those two youngsters and Jacky — Wonder what's back of that little door."

He was still wondering when the big chief looked up.

"You're Gilbert?"

"Yes, sir."

"Alias Ridder, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

They were cold eyes. Very cold.

Mostly to end the silence, Barry said, "I suppose your son told you."

"Nobody told me. I've known all about you for two months."

"You've known—"

"I heard my wife's talk with my son the day before we sailed. Through the door to my bedroom. I heard her invite him to Southampton. Next morning, I arranged with Willetts to give me a full report of his doings there."

"And—?"

Barry was thinking in monosyllables.

"And, in his first letter, he mentioned your red hair."

Barry grinned.

"He also mentioned your taking a hundred dollar bill out of an envelope addressed to Mrs. Ridder."

The grin faded.

"You haven't made a move that I haven't known about."

He waited.

"Why didn't you have me arrested?"

"Because I knew that my son was in prison, accused of this murder. I read about that less than an hour after I'd satisfied myself that you weren't my son. Jay Rogers. I'd had a man following him all about Florida. The man's report agreed perfectly with the newspaper account of Jay Rogers."

"Still—"

"What was I to do? Sail? The doctor said that was out of the question. I wired Harwood 'Rogers didn't kill Kelly. Find out who did.' Twenty-four hours later, I knew you were on the Globe, and why, and that you'd succeeded in interesting Winslow."

He wiped his glasses, and went on.

"I'd written a cable ordering your arrest. There didn't seem much sense in sending it. I was stuck in Bad Nauheim. My son was locked up in the Tombs. You seemed bent on getting him out. It was a chance. I telegraphed Harwood to give you every possible aid. I told him to raise your salary, and I signed a check for my wife to send you. She didn't know that you weren't her boy, and she didn't know I knew anything. Nobody did. I kept my mouth shut, and the wires busy.

"Two weeks ago, I learned that you'd accomplished nothing and that the date of the trial was set. I went to my doctor, and he said I could make the trip. After I'd booked passage Harwood cabled about the Morano clew. Then I told my wife everything, and came home."

"To deal with me?"

"Yes."

Apparently that was all. Ridder had made his statement, coldly, calmly, as a judge might have spoken in charging a jury. The charge over, he waited again—so long that the pause became unendurable. Barry was standing—like a prisoner in the dock. After a moment, he said: "What are you going to do?"

"Listen to your explanation."

"I haven't any."

"There's a police officer in the next room."

"Yes," Barry answered. "I felt sure there would be."

"Is there any reason I shouldn't turn you over to him?"

"None that you don't know about."

He was as cold and as calm as Ridder. Two cold, calm men, looking at each other. Ridder knew everything. He knew what Barry had done for his son, and had "a police officer in the next room." Knowing everything, he waited until Barry could be of no further use and then sent for "the cops." A hard man and a mean one. That was that.

"I'm not going to beg off, if that's what you want," Barry blurted. "You know what I did—"

"I want to know why you did it."

"I don't know myself."

"No?"

"No."

"I think I do know," Ridder said. His glasses were still in his hand, and he was scrutinizing Barry through naked, narrow eyes. "Half a dozen people have been here to plead for you. One of 'em's still here. To listen to them, anybody'd suppose you broke into my house to do me a good turn. You didn't exactly do that, did you?"

"No," Barry answered. "I didn't."

"The obvious thing seems to be that you broke in to help yourself. The servants arrived and mistook you for my son. That enabled you to stay on. Then my son's wife appeared. You silenced her by undertaking to get the boy off. That's your story, isn't it?"

"Pretty nearly."

"And then you remained to face me because you thought you could bluff your way out. That was the game, wasn't it? Blackmail?"

Barry was getting angry. It was unbearable; this hard, mean old man twisting his motives, incapable of admitting that a single one of them might have been honest. Why should he remain silent? He was in for it, anyway.

"As a matter of fact," he found himself saying, "that isn't my game. The story you told isn't my story. It's merely what happened, with all the truth left out of it."

"Then why don't you tell me the truth?"

"You wouldn't believe me. You couldn't, because you couldn't understand. I broke into your house because I was cold, and wet, and hungry. I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl, and wanted to be near her. Then Peggy came — she's your daughter-in-law, you know—and told me her story. I was sorry for her. Terribly sorry. But, of course, you don't believe that."

"Why not?"

"Because you knew the story, too. You had 'em trailed all about Florida. You knew the fight he'd made, and she'd made for him, and you didn't give a damn. 'I haven't got a friend in the world,' she said. 'Just a sick kid, and a husband I'm strong for shut up in the Tombs.' That's why I stayed on in your house, using your name, to help her. At least, I think it is. You don't. You couldn't. You never felt sorry for anybody. You've got the truth now—the whole truth. Send for your cop, and let's have it over."

The old man sat watching him.

And then, suddenly, he thrust forward the paper he'd been reading when Barry entered.

"How do you explain that?" he asked.

"What is it?"

"The wireless you sent my wife two days after you broke into my house. To make her think that you were her son. When you wrote that, you'd never seen Peggy. You didn't know you could help anybody. You were perpetrating a cruel hoax to stay on in my house, and feather your nest. Is that true, or isn't it?"

"It isn't."

"Then why did you send that message?"

Barry didn't answer.

How could one answer—to that hard, mean old man—"I sent it because I never had a mother, and liked pretending that I had?" How could one say, "I felt sorry for her, too. I wanted her to believe that her boy loved her?" One simply couldn't, and so Barry remained silent.

The old man was waiting.

"Go on," Barry said. "Get your cop."

"If I have you arrested, the cat's out of the bag."

"I don't get you."

"Every one's going to know that the man in my house wasn't my son—that my son was in the Tombs."

Barry's eyes flashed.

"You would think of that. Well, go ahead; ring. My mouth's shut, too. I did this to give those two kids a break. I'm not likely to spoil it now, am I? Go on, ring, and let's have it over."

The old man's hand descended upon the button.

Then the big door opened, and a secretary entered.

He glanced at Barry, and whispered to Ridder.

"All right. We're finished."

The secretary glanced at Barry again and left the room.

With cold, calm eyes, Ridder indicated the door behind him.

"In there," he said, rising and walking away.

Barry looked after him.

"Tough guy," Barry muttered quite audibly, quoting Peggy. His hand was on the knob now. "Tough guy—that bird."

Then he braced himself and opened the door.

It was dark in the next room.

Quite dark, after the dazzling sunlight of Ridder's office.

Barry closed the door behind him and stood trying to accustom himself to the new dimness.

There was only one window here, and that heavily curtained. No way in or out, except that by which Barry had come. A smallish board room, this was, for staff meetings. Barry made out a long table, with chairs about it, and several file cabinets. Besides these, some one was waiting.

The "cop"?

Before Barry could answer his own question, the figure turned and came forward.

Patricia.

Patricia Hambidge, in a blue tailored ensemble.

Barry laughed.

"Pat!" he exclaimed. "I thought you were a policeman."

"No," she replied, grimly. "There's one outside, though. My father warned you about Mr. Ridder but I didn't think anybody could be as—as granite as that old man."

"You're tellin' me?" Barry grinned.

"We've been at him ever since he arrived—his son, Peggy, father and I, Peter Winslow, his own wife. We didn't expect friendship to count—not after the way his paper went after father. But we talked reason. Peter, with his wife sick at home—Peter said you couldn't've worked harder for your brother."

"What was Ridder's answer to that?"

"'He had to. This girl'—meaning Peggy — 'This girl wouldn't've kept her mouth shut if she hadn't thought he was her one chance.'

"'Yes,' Peter argued, 'but he was really working.'

"'He was getting a good salary for doing it. And good clothes, and a good home, and servants he wasn't paying for. I'd've worked in his place.'"

"So my mother pleaded, too," Barry reminded himself, swiftly, with curious satisfaction. Then he grinned again at having thought of that old man's wife as his mother.

"I'd like to meet Mrs. Ridder," he said aloud. "I'd like to thank her. And Winslow, of course, and all of you."

"It didn't do much good," Pat responded. "But Peter's going to take your case, and fight to a finish. He says he'll stay home from Europe, if necessary."

"I don't want to fight," Barry answered. "I'm not exactly eager to go to jail, but it looks as though I was booked for it. And I don't want to make any rumpus. That would only hurt Jack and Peggy. I want to wipe all this off the slate, and start fresh."

Pat nodded.

"I know. You kept saying, 'Let's have it over.'"

"You heard?"

"Of course. I listened shamelessly."

"Stomach Periscope" May Permit Early Cancer Diagnosis

Flexible New Tube "Sees" by Means of 46 Lenses

KANSAS CITY.—An instrument that might be called a stomach periscope may be the means of preventing many cases of stomach cancer. It was shown at the scientific exhibit of the American Medical association here.

The instrument, a flexible tube called a gastroscope, for looking inside the stomach, was designed by Dr. Rudolf Schindler of Chicago and his colleagues, Drs. Marie Ortmayer and John F. Renshaw.

The flexibility of the instrument gives it a tremendous advantage over the earlier style of rigid gastroscope. Made of flexible metal, covered with rubber, it contains 46 hand-ground lenses on the inside. At the end of the two and a half foot tube is a small light. The tube is no larger around than one's finger.

Sees in All Directions.

Because of its flexibility it can be bent backward and to the side or in any direction, thus enabling the physician to see every part of the stomach. This was not possible with the old model rigid gastroscope.

Doctor Schindler, in showing it to physicians, held a book at one end and turned the tube in all directions, but the person looking through the tube could read the printed page no matter how the tube was bent.

Advantage Over X-Ray.

The patient experiences no discomfort and there is no danger of injury with this instrument. The patient's throat is anesthetized, the tube is passed down it, and the examination of the stomach is made in a minute or two. This can be done in the doctor's office and the patient is able afterward to go on to his work. One patient had the tube passed into his stomach 65 times.

This instrument gives far more accurate information about the condition of the stomach than even the X-ray. With it the physician will be able to detect not only the presence of cancer, but the amount of cancer present and whether it is an operable type.

Electrical Hotbed Helps Truck Farmer Speed Plant Growth

MAGNOLIA, ARK. — Like many truck farmers Charles J. Gault near here worried about pre-season competition from the warmer Rio Grande area.

Now his problem is solved by the use of an electrical hotbed capable of growing 1,000,000 plants and having a total area of one-tenth of an acre.

Temperature Changes.

Eight thousand feet of soil-heating cable are used in eight covered beds. Temperatures of from 50 to 60 degrees Fahrenheit can be maintained in the ground when outside temperatures are as low as 15 or 20 degrees. The air temperature of the beds ranged from 40 to 60 degrees.

First planting in the beds occurred on last January 27.

Capacity of the heating cable is 50 kilowatts of electrical power.

Brain Injuries Change Methods of Learning

EVANSTON, ILL.—How injuries to the brain may interfere with learning is indicated by experiments with rats reported to the Midwestern Psychological association here by Dr. Krechevsky, of the University of Chicago.

The manner in which learning takes place in the injured animals was the subject of the study rather than their ability to solve any given problem.

The injured animals tend to do the same thing over and over and to lack versatility or variety in their response even though the injury may be a minor one.

Lose Mental Ability.

They also show a loss of ability to work out some general method of attack for a problem. According to an analysis of the normal learning process previously made by Drs. Krechevsky and E. C. Tolman, of the University of California, these two factors are all-important—first the ability to hit upon some generalized mode of attack for the problem and second a versatility or plasticity that will enable the individual to try first one possible solution and then another until the best answer is found.

Roaming Habits of Bats Being Closely Studied by Science

Old Fears of Vampires Being Rapidly Banished

LOOK out for bats!

No, that is not a warning. It is an invitation.

Naturalists have concluded that bats are entirely too mysterious. Until recently, nobody has followed their flight, trailing the flying mammals to learn where and how they roam. Nobody can say whether bats are faithful to the same home apartment year after.

So, the habits of an animal that naturalists find fascinating are being studied for science. And if the public in the region of the experiment can get over old spooky fears of vampires and other wild bat tales, it can help, too.

Bats Are Banded.

Nearly 3,000 bats of six species have been banded in Vermont and Massachusetts, and over 700 of these marked bats have been re-captured, Donald R. Griffin of Barnstable, Mass., has reported to the American Society of Mammalogists.

By fastening an aluminum band around the leg of over 600 bat inhabitants in two Vermont caves, Mr. Griffin identified the tenants. Returning the next winter, he proved that at least 37 per cent of these bats returned to their own winter cave. From this experiment and similar studies in Germany, he believes that most bats hibernating in these caves return successive winters, for many banded bats in the caves eluded capture, and many more undoubtedly failed to return because of death.

Have Homing Instinct.

It is not so certain that bats return as tenaciously to summer roosts. Mr. Griffin could re-capture only about 11.5 per cent of his banded bats at Cape Cod summer colonies, but catching bats is harder at roosts than in caves, he finds.

Bats have a homing instinct similar to that of birds, the naturalist reported. One returned when released from a ship at sea, 36 miles from its roost.

World Affairs to Be Handled by Continents, Geographer Predicts

WASHINGTON.—Four nations only—the Federation of the Americas, the Republic of Africa, the Dominion of Europe and the United States of Asia—may well be the names of the ultimate political make-up of the world of the future.

Looking into the world's future, a geographer has predicted that continents rather than nations, are destined to become the units of politics.

How present signs point to geographic alliances as more successful than racial bonds, was stressed by Dr. Luis Sanchez Ponton of Mexico, speaking before the Pan-American Institute of Geography and History meeting here.

The mingling of races in the United States, unified by the land they live in, was cited by Doctor Sanchez as an example of successful experiment. Furthermore, as neighbors on the great continent, Spanish-America and Anglo-Saxon America have found the geographic factor a bond that strengthens co-operation.

No bright future for such programs as Pan-Islamism, Pan-Germanism, and Pan-Slavism is seen by Doctor Sanchez.

"Recent history," he added, "indicates that the movements have not been successful."

The present trend toward a world organized by continents is traced to an origin in the industrial revolution. Since then trade and manufacture have bulked large in national friendships and alliances.

"Political frontiers are losing their significance to economic frontiers," stated Doctor Sanchez. "Competition in international markets is beginning to be displaced from the nation toward the continent."

Plant Breeder Crosses Quack Grass With Wheat

WASHINGTON. — Quack grass, hated in this country as a noxious weed, has been hybridized with wheat by a Russian plant breeder, Dr. H. B. Tzitsin, the Tass agency here has been informed.

The new grain grows perennially, like its quack-grass parent. This would presumably give it the double advantage of not having to be sown every year, and of covering and binding the soil against erosion with a continuous mat of roots.

Small-scale experiments with the hybrid grain indicate that it will yield more flour, bushel for bushel, than "straight" wheat. Bread baked from the hybrid grain flour is said to be of good quality and flavor.

Another of Doctor Tzitsin's hybrid wheats combines four wheat varieties in its pedigree, and is declared to be a phenomenally heavy yielder.

WANT MORE PAVED ROADS

Discussion and interest continues among citizens here concerning pavement on the road from Montevallo to the Bibb County line.

Indications are that there will soon be a concerted effort to enlist authorities of the county and the State Highway epartment in setting up this project.

For a long time Montevallo has pulled and pushed and talked and begged for pavement between here and Calera. It appears now that we shall have it in a short time. In fact, the base of crushed rock for a part of the distance has already been put down.

A rock-crushing plant has been set up between here and Calera to supply the base material. A convict camp is being placed near Calera to supply the labor.

With this source of material and labor so near at hand, it appears to be the proper time for Montevallo to press her claims for improvement of the roads connecting the town with adjacent communities.

With the pavement extending from Calera to Montevallo, it seems that it should be continued at least to the Bibb County line. It would thereby serve a great many people who live in the extreme western end of the county, giving them an outlet which they need and which they deserve.

CONVICT CAMP AT CALERA

A convict camp is being built on the airport property a short distance west of Calera. From this camp, it is understood, the highway department will employ laborers to perform the work of paving on the Calera - Montevallo highway; also widening the Birmingham - Montegomery highway through Shelby County. A rock-crushing plant has been established on the Bowdon property near the camp, from which base material will be supplied for the road jobs.

Rev. D. Z. Woolley has tendered his resignation as pastor of Columbiana Baptist church, to accept a call to the church at Eclectic in Elmore county. The church at Columbiana asked him to reconsider the matter and withdraw his resignation. Rev. Woolley expressed his appreciation for the splendid vote of confidence, but felt that he cocld not withdraw his acceptance at Eclectic.

Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Gilbert, Bernard Gilbert and Miss Dot Sumner, of Parrish, Ala., spent the Fourth of July holidays on a motor trip to Dothan, Panama City, and Pensacola, returning to Montevallo Sunday night.

Mr. Geo. B. Jackson, formerly a citizen of Montevallo, and employee of the Merchants and Planters Bank, was here last week on a visit to friends. Since leaving Montevallo Mr. Jackson has kept up with local events through The Montevallo Times. While here last week he renewed his subscription for another year.

A postcard fom Pete Jarman, Washington, D. C., to The Times last week said: "I am looking around in Washington, in preparation to make you a good Congressman. Kind regards—Pete."

The class was discussing safety methods and measures. The suggestion of J. A. Brown was that automobiles be equipped with radios which would automatically play "Nearer My God to Thee," when the car attains a speed of seventy miles per hour. Remember the Titanic. After the berg was struck and the ship had listed, the band played popular ragtime music for a while. When the tragic fate was imminent the musicians sounded "Nearer My God to Thee," the strains of which were drowned in the icy waters as the great ship took is last plunge and thousands of lives were lost.

Professor Luther E. Little, County Superintendent of Education of Chilton County, at Clanton, was a visitor in Montevallo Tuesday. He came to bring Mrs. Little and Miss Eloise Jones for registration as students at Alabama College for the next session beginning in September.

State Capitol News

Funds for the construction of a handsome $300,000 memorial building to house several state departments may soon be allocated by the Federal government out of public works appropriations, in the opinion of Gov. Bibb Graves.

Several conferences were held last week by the Governor with Thad Holt and Corrington Gill, assistants to Harry L. Hopkins, Federal WPA administrator, and virtual assurance that the project will be approved was received, the Governor explained.

Mrs. Marie Bankhead Owen, director of the Alabama Department of Archives and History, has been requested by the Governor to launch a drive to raise funds through various patriotic organizations as the state's share in the cost.

The Governor said the new building pobably would be erected near the Capitol in accordance with the Armistead architectural plan.

"The structure would not be just a memorial, but would serve as a useful addition to the state property to relieve the present congestion," he added.

President Roosevelt's veto of the Carmichael bill allowing "matching cedit" of Federal funds for 50 per cent of the amount Alabama will spend in freeing its 15 toll bridges precludes the possibility of the State obtaining an anticipated $2,000,000 grant for road building, Governor Graves explained.

"The veto was a great disappointment," the Governor said, "because we could have built the 15 bidges with Federal aid at the time they were constrcted. The Carmichael bill provided we now could realize the Federal aid available to us at that time. It would have meant, in a practical sense, that we would have received around $2,000,000 which we would not have had to match for new highway construction."

However, the President's veto of the measure will have no effect on the State's plan to free the bridges through refunding the $3,800,000 bridge bonds, it was pointed out.

Confederate pension warrants for the quarterly period beginning July 1 totaling $166,110 were mailed to all probate judges in the State last week by State Auditor Charles E. McCall.

Of the total, only 212 checks went to veterans of the War Between the States, as compared with checks for 246 during the April quarter, and 278 for the first three months of 1936.

Alabama's gasoline tax receipts will be increased by $200,000 a year as the result of the judicial opinion of the State's Supreme Court and an act of Congress signed by the President on June 16.

In a decision rendered last Tuesday the Supreme Court held that cities and counties must pay State tax on gasoline bought by them and stored by them in city and county storage tanks for withdrawal for governmental uses.

The State Tax Commission, it was learned, will thus collect between $50,000 and $75,000 of gasoline taxes, payment of which had been withheld by a few counties and municipalities pending the outcome of the case in the high court.

An act of Congress permitting states to levy and collect a tax on gasoline sold by post exchanges on U. S. government reservations is expected to yield $12,000 to $15,000 a year.

Alabama's new 1937 automobile license tags—purple on white background—are now being shipped to the probate judges of the State.

Early shipment of the plates was ordered because of limited warehouse facilities at Kilby Prison where they are manufactured. An act of the 1935 Legislature requires all cars after October 1, 1936 to bear front and rear license tags, thus doubling the tag factory output.

Wage increases of $4 to $5 a month for WPA workers in Alabama counties have been announced by Col. W. G. Henderson, district WPA director.

The new schedules not only raise the minimum wages, but simultaneously decrease the number of working hours among many of the classifications.

State Colleges Poorly Supported Unable To Carry On Proper Work

Montgomery, July 8.—The state colleges were described as poorly supported and not able to meet the demands of Alabama in a statewide radio hookup delivered by Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, this afternoon.

Alabama colleges are not able to do the proper research and cooperate closely enough with the economic forces of the state according to Mrs. Hill. They also fail to give training in a number of important fields, forcing students of ability to go to other states for training, where they often remain.

Before 1920 our colleges were described as comparing unfavorably with others in states of similar population. Between 1920 and 1930 they made rapid progress, but no more rapid progress than that made in other states. Since 1931. lack of money has caused them to fall behind.

In 1928, when support of our colleges was at its height, Auburn had land, buildings, and equipment valued at $2,169,785. Only the colleges in Nevada, New Mexico, Rhode Island, Porto Rico and Alaska were poorer, and they are all much smaller than Alabama. Alaska and Nevada have fewer people than Montgomery alone.

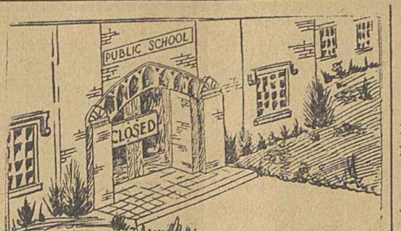
Only 16 of the 52 agricultural colleges had maller appropriations than Auburn in 1928. They were all in smaller states, and many had endowments in the form of securities and bonds. Only two had less money for library support than Auburn.

In spite of this unfavorable showing in 1928, the colleges are today receiving only about a fifth as much as they did then. All higher education, including the negro colleges and the Extension Service, get $718,000 this year compared to $3,372,360 in 1929-30. Kansas is this year paying as much for two teachers colleges as Alabama is allowing four teachers colleges, Auburn, the Univerity, and Montevallo.

Mrs. Hill declared we do not have too many teachers colleges. Our enrollment is smaller than that of other states the size of Alabama and if we insisted upon the amount of college training the average state demands we could not fill the demand for trained teachers.

Dallas Streets of Paris Thronged

BOAT CENTER OF FAIR FUN SPOT.—An exact reproduction of the liner Normandie forms the front center of "The Streets of Paris," gay fun spot of the $25,000,000 Texas Centennial Exposition which opened in Dallas June 6. Flanking the ship is a French Village forming an open-air court of concessions.



Do you know some states pay their teachers average salaries of $2,000 per year?

Do you know the average provided by the Alabama Minimum Program is only $75 per month, or $325 for a seven-month term?

Only five counties, Bullock, Lowndes, Jefferson, Dallas, and Montgomery, pay more than $100 per month.

Higher education received $718,000 from the state last year compared to $3,372,361.64 in 1929-30.

Do you know the colleges are not asking as much from the state as they got in 1929, in spite of heavy increases in students?

Do you know the colleges received only 28 per cent of their appropriations last year?

Kansas paid as much last year to run two teachers colleges as Alabama paid for four teachers colleges, Auburn, the University, and Montevallo combined.

Iowa paid seven times as much in 1928 to run her agricultural colleges as Alabama paid to Auburn—$671,834 compared to $4,140,472.

Do you know all the money paid to the colleges last year would have kept the schools open only seven days longer?

Do you know of all the 52 land er than Auburn in land, buildings and equipment in 1928?

Those five were in Alaska, Porto Rico, Rhode Island, New Mexico, and Nevada.

Nevada and Alaska each has fewer people than Montgomery.

Do you know the state paid $11,893,843 for public education in 1929-30 and only $8,828,993 in 1935-36?

Do you know this was in spite of heavier enrollments and a big drop in city and local property taxes?

Work For Youths In NYA Program

All youths desiring to make application to the work program will apply to the district directors in the office nearest their home. Application in person is preferable but where distance is too great to permit such, application can be made by letter. District offices are located in Decatur, Gadsden, Montgomery, Tuscaloosa, Birmingham and Mobile.

Members of WPA families certified by the District Director of Intake and Certification who have passed their eighteenth and not yet reached their twenty-fifth birthday will be eligible for the new work program. All youths now at work on the program will not have to be recertified.

Youths on the work program will be paid at prevailing hourly rates of pay as established by the WPA of the state and locality and will work approximately one-third the number of hours required for similar types of work on WPA Loafing will not be tolerated. Workers who are offered private employment at reasonable wages shall be removed from employment by the NYA upon refusal to accept such employment. Every effort will be made to plare the youth in jobs in private industry and business to supply the many demands made by private industry for workers. To date the numbers of workers supplied has been great and other workers will continue to be supplied.

No one has to make a political contribution or promise to support any candidate or party to get or keep an NYA job.

Applicants for high school or college aid must apply direct to the principal of the school or president of the college which they wish to attend.

Eligibility for school aid has not yet been definitely established but it will in all probality be much the same as last year, aid being offered to students regarded as needy by the heads of the various institutions.

No announcement can be made at this time about amounts to be paid on the school aid program.

STATE COTTON MILLS RUNNING AT CAPACITY

Montgomery, July 6.—Cotton mills are running full-time and prices are showing better margins of profit to the spinners, according to the semi-monthly crop letter issued here by Weil Brothers, cotton factors.

"Demand for goods continues active and heavy," the report shows. "The reopening of the 12-cent loan cotton will be of great help to mills which are still in need of cotton to run them over the summer."

Cotton crops improved somewhat over the entire belt of states during the latter part of June, but there is still an irregular condition, the report states.

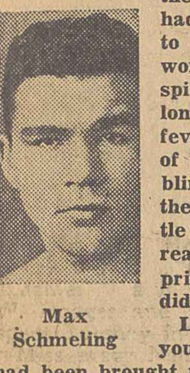
No Alibis Needed for Uhlan Gained Fame Hard Way

IT SEEMS that several of the boys were mistaken. All along they had insisted that—if he wanted to—the winner of the Louis-Schmeling fight festival could turn the trick with one hand tied behind his back. Yet, as most of the 60,000 who witnessed the twelve round entertainment at Yankee Stadium will agree, nothing of the sort occurred.

Indeed, even though the man who ultimately triumphed by a knockout might have left his southpaw at home for all the offensive use he made of it, that would have been impossible.

Max Schmelling is not one of the great fighters of all time. I mention this for the benefit of those who already have forgotten about second raters and who now will attempt to blow him up into a gaudy bubble. He merely, as was stated in this space, a well-conditioned experienced man who scorned to be scared by such childish things as newspaper headlines.

Such qualities, along with a right that kept exploding long after the Brown Bomber had been reduced to tossing duds, won for him. In spite of the quoted long odds and the feverish babblings of gents scrambling to get on the before-the-battle band wagon, it really is not surprising that they did.



Max Schmeling

Louis, a gifted young giant who had been brought to the top faster than any heavyweight of modern times, fought a good fight.

It merely happened that in his first real test against a man who could take it and hit back he did not have quite enough. Since such a possibility had been faintly hinted at by sports reporters, unwilling to further offend the better judgment of their editorial department comrades, his downfall need not therefore be considered a world catastrophe.

Joe, undoubtedly, was in the best of shape when he shuffled out for the first round. As usual, when not facing a Levinsky or a Retzlaff, he was somewhat slow in opening up his opponent. But, even though he is strictly a counter puncher and was thus handicapped when Schmeling made him lead far more than usual, he scored repeatedly with left jabs. So he won the first three rounds, even though they were close and far from thrilling.

Max Failed to Press 4th Round Advantage

He also was ahead in the fourth, having handed out some tidy two-handed punishment during the infighting, when disaster overtook him. Schmeling, who says that he became confident of victory during the third round, missed with a right. Louis came close. Schmeling slashed with a right.

The Bomber went down. While the audience was gasping, scarcely daring to believe, he was up. But from then on, even though the methodical Max was too shrewd or cautious to follow up as would a Dempsey, Louis was a beaten man.

Even though he fought back determinedly, even desperately at times, it is more than probable that Louis has little coherent memory of what happened while he was losing the rest of the rounds.

Coming out of his corner for the tenth his mouthpiece was awry. He fumbled at it, did not seem to know what to do.

As it was, what by now seemed inevitable did not occur until two minutes had elapsed in the twelfth. They had been in a clinch. Schmeling straightened up the Bomber with a left to the chin. Then the German, whose left eye had been closing tighter and tighter since it collided with a jab in the third round, shifted for a better view.

Having trained his sights, he landed with a right and then a succession of lefts and rights. Louis is backed up, was forced against the ropes. The bombardment of rights continued. Louis staggered. Another right. He reeled into the ropes, got tangled in them much as Paulino Uzcudun did at the Garden last December.

Schmeling stood there, his right hand poised for another shot. It was not needed.

WHEN Larry French went into the Giants' dugout recently carrying a bat he was not looking for trouble. Instead, the Chicago pitcher produced a fountain pen and the request that Mel Ott and Joe Moore autograph the club . . . Citizens who lament misfortunes which befell them in the betting ring shortly before Brevity and King Saxon were retired are preparing a plea for the State Racing commission. They will supplicate the racing rulers, who now use taxpayers' sugar for all sorts of interesting things, to appoint a few paddock inspectors capable of declaring lame horses out of stake engagements.

In St. Louis they broadcast the whisper that a big Brooklyn pitcher, who should be old enough and grateful enough to know better, really caused the Mungo rebellion. Kept giving the Dutch master phony holdout advice in the cool of the evening.

Red Lucas Effective Against Old Mates

Red Lucas of Pittsburgh has won 20 games since leaving the Reds. Eight of them have been from his former teammates . . . He has proved effective on numerous occasions for the Pirates . . . Carl Duane, the Bronx Steamroller who slapped down some of the best featherweights a few seasons back, now runs a billiard academy . . . Although a fingerprint expert might recognize many old friends on the slips at Aqueduct, the bookies say that their trouble does not come from the professional sinners. Instead, they aver that eminent business men are the worst risks and the most persistent welchers.

Red Lucas

Two of the most accomplished umpire baiters in the National league draw top salaries as members of the Cincinnati front office force. During a considerable portion of the afternoon they sit in the stands howling at the arbiters. Then if a Klem or some equally able umpire happens to be doing his duty they rush into the dressing room after the game to emit additional beefs. Strangely enough (in a world where even clam diggers rush to the rescue of their mates) the two gentlemen, McPhail and Lane, were football officials long before they got on the Reds' pay roll . . . One of the entrants in the final Olympic gymnastic tryouts on June 20 is Porter Johnson. He comes from Dallas, is a tumbler and is fifteen years old . . . Edward Hennig, the Cleveland club swinger who hopes to repeat his Olympic triumph of 1904, is fifty-five years old . . . The woman golfer least liked by caddies is Enid Wilson, the British star. The reason is that even though Diana Fishwick does very nicely with nine clubs they have to tote 28 around the course for Miss Wilson.

During the racing season in New York not one owner or trainer was suspended for "hopping" a horse—Alice Marble, third ranking woman tennis player in 1934, plans to make a come-back in the East this year. She is the sister of Dan Marble, a former handball champion. The trick cap which Joe Jacobs wears was presented to him in 1929 by Andre Routis . . . Although the Brooklyn playing field is probably the worst in the league, athletes do more complaining about the Phillies' park.

All score cards in the American league still misspell Rip Radcliff's name with a final "e." . . . He has been in the league only a year, so maybe there is some excuse, but the same score cards misspell Umpire George Moriarty with an "i" before the "ty," and George has been in the league most of the century . . . George Keogan, basketball coach at Notre Dame, found out that those aches and pains he attributed to senility were merely the machinations of some bad teeth, which have been yanked. . . . The amateur boxing season in China will be climaxed by an intercity match between Shanghai and Tientsin, patterned after the Chicago-New York series.

Harold Sueme, rookie catcher the Cubs farmed out to Birmingham, has been placed at first base by Manager Riggs Stephenson of the Barons . . . Ernie Lombardi is the oldest member in point of service on the Cincinnati club . . . He has been with the Reds since 1932 . . . Edward Hennig of Cleveland, who will represent the United States in the Olympic club swinging, is fifty-five years old and won the event in the 1904 Olympic games.

In answer to inquiries—Alabama Pitts is not out of baseball. The York club of the N. Y.-Pa. league merely has placed him on the suspended list for 15 days because an injured wrist will keep him out of lineup for that time . . . I do not know where Paulino Uzcudun is now. Why not inquire at the Hearst A. C. or at some of the Old Men's Homes? . . . Harry Weldon, long ago sports editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, is credited as being the first man to assemble all sports news on one page.

And That's That

"I don't want you to treat my friend Jones as coldly as you do," said Robinson to his daughter. "He may not have much style, but he's a diamond in the rough."

"I know he's a diamond in the rough," replied his daughter. "That's the reason I'm cutting him."

Education

"Your methods of cultivation are hopelessly out of date," said the youthful agricultural college-graduate to the old farmer. "Why, I'd be astonished if you got even 10 pounds of apples from that tree."

"So would I," replied the farmer. "It's a pear tree."

Variety

"Yes, I like to give my husband variety in his meals, especially at dinner time."

"Really, how do you manage it?"

"Well, I give him boiled ham, but I buy it from a different shop every day."

Eczema in Big Watery "Bumps"

Burning and Itching Relieved by Cuticura

The records abound with grateful letters of praise like the following. Name and full address are printed to show that Cuticura letters are genuine beyond question.

"My eczema began with an itching on my hands, arms and feet, and when I scratched, big, watery bumps came. They burned and itched so, that I scratched and irritated the affected parts. It worried me so I could not sleep.

"I had this eczema for five years before I started to use Cuticura. After using three cakes of Cuticura Soap and three tins of Cuticura Ointment the irritation was relieved." (Signed) Miss G. E. Reid, 850 Central Av., Hamilton, O.

Keep Young Pigs Free From Worms

Is Better Than Doctoring After They Have Become Infested.

By H. W. TAYLOR, Extension Swine Specialist, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Plow up that wormy old hog lot and plant it to some crop. Roundworms are very injurious to young pigs. It is better to keep them away from worms than to dose them with worm medicine after they have become infested.

A few days before farrowing time scrub the sow thoroughly with a brush, using soap and warm water to remove dirt and worm eggs. Then put the sow in a clean field containing a suitable forage crop where there have been no hogs for at least 12 months.

Keep other pigs and hogs away from the clean lot, and keep new born pigs away from old, dirty hog lots. Leave the pigs on pasture until they are at least four months old. If possible, leave them there until ready for market or until they can be turned into the corn fields.

For summer pasture, plant soy beans in rows, cultivate them twice, and turn in the pigs when the beans are about 12 inches high.

Pigs after being farrowed should be castrated, weaned, and started on full feed two months later. Fill the self-feeder with shelled corn and fish meal or tankage so the pigs can help themselves.

When cottonseed meal is cheap, it may be mixed with the fish meal or tankage in equal parts. Soy bean meal or peanut meal may be used in place of cottonseed meal in the mixture.

Corn should not be mixed with other feeds. Put it in a separate compartment in the feeder.

Plant a field of early maturing corn for the pigs to "hog down." Harvesting is one-seventh of the cost of producing a corn crop. Pigs will gather the corn and pay for the privilege.

All pigs and hogs should have access to a mineral mixture made up of ten pounds of sulphur phosphate, ten pounds of lime, and two pounds of salt.

30 to 40 Leaves Needed to Produce Good Peach

How many leaves are required to produce enough food to develop a good peach? Experiments by the United States Department of Agriculture indicate at least 30 to 40 leaves are necessary. Forty to fifty leaves are required to develop a good-sized apple, and about 50 for an orange.

Producers of large peaches provide larger leaf areas—more than 40 leaves per peach—by thinning the fruit closely. This permits the peaches left on the tree to get more food from the leaves. When the fruit set is light for the entire tree—but perhaps heavy on certain branches and the leaves plentiful—the fruit may be left unthinned.

After a damaging freeze fruit may set only at the base of the shoots. When this occurs the leaves on the bearing and nonbearing shoots will under favorable conditions produce peaches of good size and quality although the fruit may be only a few inches apart. Leaves far away from the fruit and those on the nonbearing shoots also help to manufacture food.

Change Color of Onions

Science has taken another stride forward in saving the farmer thousands of dollars a year by "painting" onions a golden-brown color. Minerals are used instead of ordinary paints and the onions grow golden brown in color with thick skins instead of a lemon yellow with thin skins. The painting is done with the application of copper sulphate on muck soil, according to Prof. J. E. Knott of Cornell university. Farmers, the professor said, found it difficult to sell their onions as long as they remained a lemon-yellow color with thin skins.

Cow Barn Fertilizer

The liquid from a cow barn can be applied as a stimulant to the garden, but it will not take the place of a complete fertilizer, according to an authority. Its composition will probably vary. It is applied to hurry growth. It should not be used when the ground is dry, as the roots might take it up so rapidly as to cause injury. Apply when the soil is moist, after a rain. It is usually given at intervals of two weeks; there should be rain or irrigation between applications.

Growth of Corn

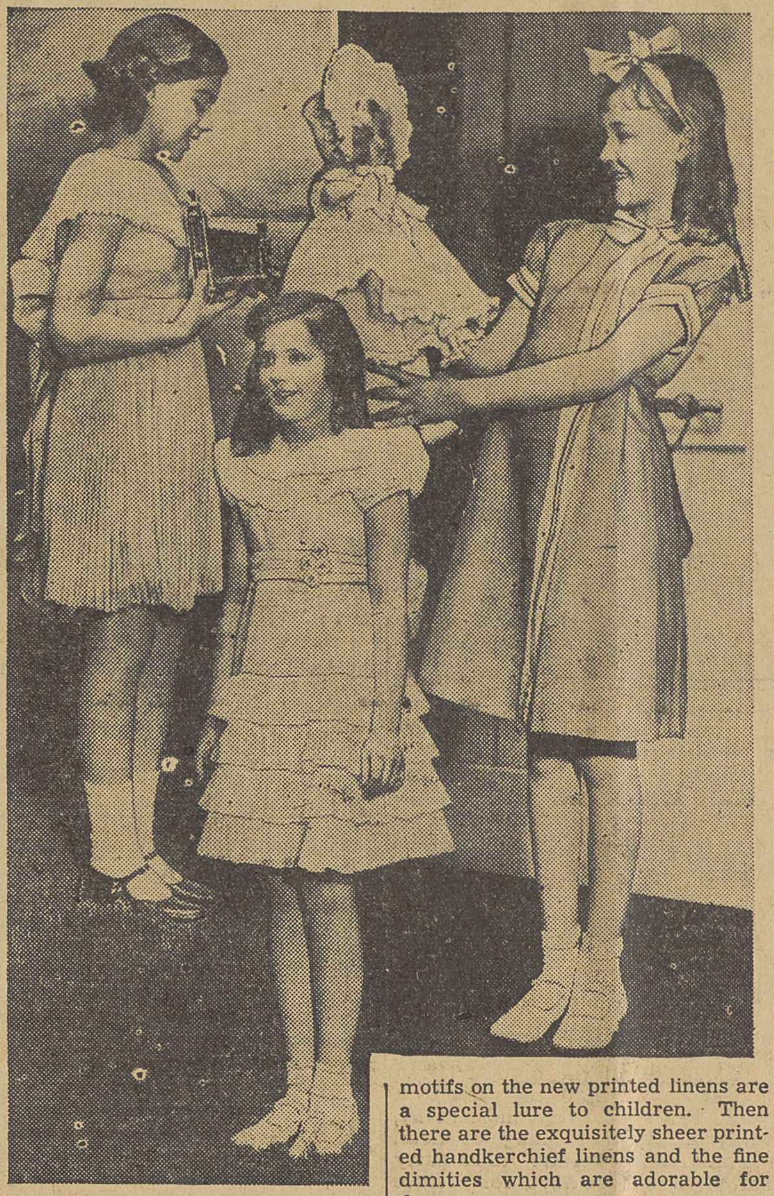
Corn probably grows most rapidly on warm nights. According to the United States bureau of plant industry, the rate of growth is influenced by many factors other than the formation of food materials through protosynthesis, and the protosynthetic products themselves may require further change before being utilized in growth. Some plants actually grow more rapidly at night under ordinary conditions than they do during the day.

Manure Aids Pasture

With proper care and judgment, the use of manure on pasture will result in more and better summer feed and leave an improved sod.

For Style-Conscious Little Girls

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



© Western Newspaper Union.

IT IS with ever increasing enthusiasm that designers are yielding to the urge of catering to the needs and fancies of style-conscious little girls.

The story of the modern child's wardrobe resolves itself into many chapters dealing with all phases of fashion. Beginning with simple, novel and amusing beach, swim and playtime togs and cunning sun suits, the plot carries on through thrilling adventures in the realm of smart school and dressy daytime clothes reaching a grand and glorious climax in a way of entrancing pretty-pretty party frocks that make every little girl look like a fairy princess of story book lore.

For practical daytime and playtime frocks the call is outstanding for cotton reps, gabardines, chambrays, crinkled seersuckers (no ironing required is their big appeal), ginghams, novelty cottons soft and spongy, piques and most important, new lines both plain and printed. Now that a sturdy noncrush type of linen is obtainable mothers are jubilant, for in it they have discovered the fabric ideal to withstand the vigorous test of the wear and tear of the thousand and one antics which little folks enjoy in a day's sport.

Perhaps the most exciting news is gay printed linens in bold patterns and colorings. Peasant designs in a blaze of daring colors abound and these rustic prints are especially good-looking when made up into separate little coats with hats to match. Florals in effective spacing, cunning animal, vegetable and fruit motifs on the new printed linens are a special lure to children. Then there are the exquisitely sheer printed handkerchief linens and the fine dimities which are adorable for dress-up wear.

Lace-trimmed organdie or georgette is a favorite theme this season with the designers of little-girl party dresses. Georgette made over taffeta is shown quite a little. A significant trend is the use of pastel colors which seem to have almost gained precedence over all white.

In the matter of styling, the princess silhouette is a great favorite while most sleeves are just short puffs. Note the dress worn by the little girl with the gorgeous doll in the picture. Her smart school and playtime dress is of firm linen cut on the new princess lines. Gay striped printed linen is used as a bordering. The style distinction of this charming dress will make instant appeal to both mother and little daughter.

The other two children are looking their prettiest in dainty party frocks or perhaps they took part in "last day of school" exercises. At any rate their little pleated sheer frocks are lovely and will be a joy the whole summer through. The wee maiden to the left is wearing an accordion pleated voile as charming in pastel colors as it is in white. A wide sash about her waist ties at the back in a huge butterfly bow.

Tiers of narrow pleatings animate the frock centered in the group. The vogue for pleating is as pronounced in children's fashions as in grown-up styles. The pleatings about the neckline extend over the short puff sleeves so as to achieve the new-vogue wide shoulder line.

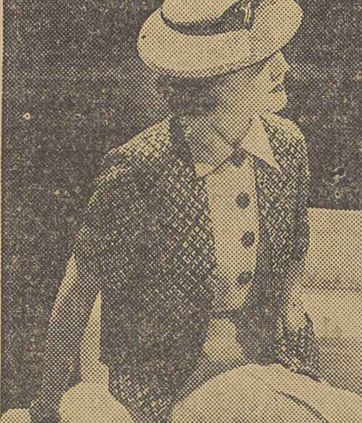
IT'S EMBROIDERED

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



The latest call of the mode is for frocks of monotone silk crepe with complementary jackets made of the identical silk crepe of the dress, the same handsomely allover embroidered in bright contrasting colors. In the instance of the model pictured the sport dress is of pink silk crepe with a short-sleeved box jacket of the same crepe embroidered with green and blue wool. Blue buttons are on the dress.

Short-Term Wigs

Wigs are proving popular among fashionable women in London, who use them to cover hair while it is regaining its natural color after a "blond" period.

Black Is Smart

Much black is shown for summer wear with tailored white jackets and white accessories.

DESIGNERS PRESENT SKIRT INNOVATIONS

Unusual color combinations and a strong Oriental influence characterize the new Alix collection. Some skirts are so full and flaring that they resemble parachutes or lamp shades, while others, are caught under at the hem like Turkish trousers.

The feminine silhouette is stressed at all times and clothes at Alix are fashioned to display a slender waistline and curving hip line. For day wear, bodices are skin tight and are usually made with a high neck trimmed with bows or loops of material. All clothes show a certain amount of fullness at the hip, and this is frequently stressed by the use of a full and flaring peplum.

Glamorous Apparel Wins Approval of Parisiennes

For the polo matches, the races and late afternoon occasions of summer in Paris, it is now the smartest fashion to wear frocks and hats of the glamorous variety. Sheer fabrics like organdie are altogether enchanting and feminine for frocks with wide and sweeping skirts and hats with wide and flattering brims.

These decorative full-skirted frocks, with little capes or puffed sleeves, have not by any means replaced the tailored evening costume with a jacket, an important fashion for parties from five o'clock on. Daylight dining will enhance this tailored idea.

Culottes More Popular

The fashion for culottes (divided skirts) is no longer confined to the active sports field, say stylists. They will be seen everywhere for all daytime occasions this summer. Last season saw them first spring into popularity for sailing, bicycling and beach wear.

STAR DUST

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

IF YOU are among the many who never fail to tune in on Major Bowes' broadcasts on Sunday evenings, you'll be interested in the discussion of money matters that's going on.

The genial Major's contract expires in September, and the same sponsors want him again. So do others. He asked $18,000 a broadcast, then cut it to $15,000—twice what his old contract brings in.

As for the amateurs who appear on the program, they get five dollars an appearance. If they get the gong it's doubled. If they are good enough to land with a unit, they draw real money.

As soon as "The Garden of Allah" is finished the stars are going to scatter like spilled quicksilver. Marlene Dietrich will go to London (she plans to put her little girl in school in Europe next year, which will mean their first separation for any length of time); Basil Rathbone will head for London also, Charles Boyer leaves for Paris, and Joseph Schildkraut for Austria. And as soon as they arrive, no doubt, they'll probably be summoned back to Hollywood for more pictures. The wise picture star, when starting for a vacation, leaves no address.

The head of the Make-up department at Metro, Jack Dawn, mixed up a dressing that would give the effect of shaved heads—and by having the actors use it, the company saved a lot of money. You see, had the actors had to become bald for the picture, they'd have had to be paid till their hair grew again!

Ginger Rogers has been in pictures for six years. She celebrated the anniversary just the other day. She still likes them. But the girl has unlimited energy; after working all day with Fred Astaire on dance routines for their next picture, she goes out dancing in the evening.

Ben Lyons and Bebe Daniels sailed for England the other day with their daughter Barbara, aged four and cute as she can be. Ben and Bebe will make personal appearances (they've been coining money doing it over here), and then take a vacation on the Riviera. They have more fun than almost any other married couple in Hollywood.

Fred Allen could journey to Hollywood and make pictures this summer if he wanted to; the offers have been rolling in thick and fast. But he has turned them all down. When he is broadcasting he works all week on each broadcast, and he feels that he's entitled to a rest when he goes off the air for the summer. So he'll vacation in his home town in Massachusetts—and probably pick up new material for his next series of programs.

Katharine Hepburn is taking no chances on her next theatrical appearance. Signed with the Theater Guild to do "Jane Eyre" next fall, she insists on a preliminary out-of-town tour lasting six weeks, just to get her hand in.

It's rumored that Margaret Sullavan will also have a try at the New York stage, where she was doing very well indeed when the movies captured her, and she became a favorite of screen fans.

Robert Taylor's New York vacation remained hectic to the very end. Leaving a broadcasting studio after he'd been on the air, he was mobbed by a crowd that took 15 policemen to handle—and then one of the fans got away with his handkerchief, and another took one of Taylor's shoes, to remember him by!

ODDS AND ENDS . . . "The Rivals," the famous play by Richard Brinsley Sheridan which has been delighting theater-goers for some two hundred years, will reach the screen before long . . . Imagine Shirley Temple in a picture called "The Bowery Princess" . . . Rudy Vallee was given an honorary degree at Suffolk Law school recently . . . Richard Barthelmess will appear in "The Spy of Napoleon," an English picture . . . George Raft traveled East for the Louis-Schmeling fight . . . The French government made Harry Warner, of Warner Brothers, a Chevalier of Honor for producing "The Story of Louis Pasteur."

FOUR TEASPOONFULS OF MILK OF MAGNESIA IN ONE TASTY WAFER

DOLLARS & HEALTH
The successful person is a healthy person. Don't let yourself be handicapped by sick headaches, a sluggish condition, stomach "nerves" and other dangerous signs of over-acidity.

TAKE MILNESIAS
Milnesia, the original milk of magnesia in wafer form, neutralizes stomach acid. Each wafer equals 4 teaspoonfuls of milk of magnesia. Thin, crunchy, mint-flavor, tasty. 20c, 35c & 60c at drug stores.

HEARTBURN?
Its surprising how many have heart burn. Hurried eating, overeating, heavy smoking, excessive drinking all lead to heartburn. When it comes, heed the warning. Your stomach is on a strike.

SLEEP SOUNDLY
Lack of exercise and injudicious eating make stomachs acid. You must neutralize stomach acids if you would sleep soundly all night and wake up feeling refreshed and really fit.

First Casualty at Exposition

RANGERETTE QUITS OPENING DAY—Helen Stamps, Texas Centennial Exposition Rangerette, flew 10-gallon hats to Washington for President Roosevelt's party to wear to Dallas June 12. Opening day she wired Exposition officials she had been hired as a New York model.

Revolts In Political Parties Began 128 Years Ago.

New York.—A new "third" party stirs the political air again. It is one of an ancient line of revolts which began 128 years ago.

Representative William Lemke's recently-formed Union party follows an old tradition, too, in that it is based principally on a demand for monetary change, an issue that has been warm to the political touch for several lifetimes anl has brought about several independent political organizations.

Not even Lemke's backing by a priest, Father Charles E. Coughlin, is unprecedented. Father Edward McGlynn, of New York, helped organize the United Labor party, which wanted the single tax back in 1888.

First "Third" Party

The first "third" party in this country was called the "Quids" and was organized in 1808. The Quids bolted Madison in a vain effort to defeat him. They offered no candidate of their own, but formed a regular organization, which dissenters have been doing ever since.

Despite the fact this is the only major democracy where two oldline parties usually fight it out—to all practical purposes — strictly among themselves, striking out with new organizations seems to have come as an English inheritance.

In that country, people have been taking "walks" from existing parties to form their own since 1688. And while they still are vastly more mobile, in shifting political alliances, the voters here have set some pretty high marks in that regard.

The bumper year for party designations was in 1896, when 17 entered the lists. In 1900 there were 14; in 1904, 12; in 1908, 13; in 1912, 11; in 1916, 11; in 1920, 15; in 1924, 12; in 1928, 15; in 1932, 11. Most of these were local, statewide or sectional.

Prohibition Party Oldest

Of today's so-called "third" parties—it is customary to call them that although they be fifth or sixth in order of formation—the Prohibition party is the oldest. It got its start in 1872, and despite the fact the candidate, James Black, polled only 5,608 votes to U. S. Grant's 3,597,132, it has kept going ever since, save for a period of relative inactivity during prohibition.

The Populists, who were angry on the money question as so many other groups have been down through the political ages, first entered a national election in 1892, and gave the regular parties a scare by running up 1,040,886 votes for their candidate, James B. Weaver. Grover Cleveland got 5,556,543 and Benjamin Harrison, Republican, 5,175,582.

It was one of the biggest showings ever made up to that time by a "third" party—a party, incidentally, which wanted free coinage of silver.

The really titantic third-party battles, however, have come since the turn of the century.

Progressive Party

Theodore Roosevelt formed in 1912 the "Progressive" party which pulled down the Republicans' temple on their heads.

He got 4,119,507 votes to President William Howard Taft's 3,484,956—and Woodrow Wilson won the election with 6,293,019. Taft had not been liberal enough to satisfy the rough rider.

The late Senator Robert M. La-Follette, the elder, got the biggest "third party" vote for president in modern political history. In 1924, running under the Progressive label as Roosevelt had done, he polled 4,667,312 to 15,749,030 for Calvin Coolidge and 8,760,555 for John W. Davis. He formed the party because he believed the Republicans too "standpat."

The new party device is not always used in the hope of actually winning an election; frequently it's utilized principally as a sounding board, costly and difficult to fashion though it may be, for agitating change, either in party or governmental policy.

Picturesque Terms

These revolts, incidentally, have brought into use some of the most picturesque terms in the American language — "mugwump," "know-nothing," and the like.

The mugwumps, bolting Republicans and independents who would not acknowledge that James G. Blaine really deserved that "white plume" his friends placed symbolically above his head, organized in 1884. They put forward no candidate, but concentrated on beating Blaine. Grover Cleveland, the Democrat, was elected. Somebody in the opposition once called the bolters "pharisees, hypocrites, transcendentalists—or mugwumps," and the name stuck.

Members of the "Know-Nothing," or "Native American," party they got to where they didn't mind the name. They started in 1856, making anti-Catholicism an issue, their candidate, Millard Fillmore, getting 874,534 votes to 1,838,169 for James Buchanan, Democrat, and 1,341,264 for John C. Fremont, Republican.

Other Parties In Past

Here are some of the other third parties of the past, along with the names of presidential candidates and how they came out:

Liberal Republicans, 1872, Horace Greeley, 2,834,125; Grant, 3,597,132, winner.

United Labor, 1888, A. J. Streeter, 146,935; Cleveland, 5,540,329, winner.

Rev. Cox Promoting Summer Camp

To hte People of Montevallo and Vicinity:

This is to inform you of the Young People's Camp, being promoted by Rev. A. J. Cox, pastor of the Montevallo Presbyterian Church, that will occur at the Point Clear Hotel Down Mobile Bay during the week beginning August 24th. The camp is especially for the boys and girls of high school and college age. Extremely low rates have been secured, making possible a large gathering. The nature of the camp is to be three-fourths recreational and one-fourth religious. If you are interested in having a jolly good time communicate with Mr. Cox at once. Reservations are limited.

Prof. I. J. Quinn, Mrs. Quinn, and their children are spending several days with Mrs. Quinn's mothers, Mrs. Henry Thomas, at her home at Thomas Mill near Ashby. Mrs. Quinn was formerly Miss Edith Thomas, a student at Alabama College. At present the Quinns are living at Potts Camp, Miss., where Mr. Quinn is an instructor in a CCC Camp.

"Red Tape" Has Been Removed From Works Progress Projects

City and county officials in Shelby county and other sponsors may designate the projects of their choice for employment of works program labor without any further "red tape" under terms of the new program beginning July 1, if the projects have received Presidential and Comptroller-General approval, Ray Crow, State W. P. A. Administrator, announced today.

Projects approved by Washington for Alabama total $56,807,348 in Federal funds. Of this amount, approximately $15,500,000 was expended by June 30th, for labor and material on projects completed or under way. The majority of projects for the current fiscal year have been completed or nearly so.

The effect of this ruling, Mr. Crow said, is that projects which received approval last year or early this year and have never been released for operation in the respective counties, will not have to be resubmitted. All that is necessary is for the local authorities to agree upon the approved project they desire to put into operation and work can be started on the project the following day. The project, however, must be of a type the available work progam labor can execute. In other words, he said, it would be somewhat difficult to construct a new building where no carpenters are on W. P. A. rolls, unless the county or city chose to employ the carpenters as has been done in numerous instances.

The current work program which closed on June 30 has added materially to the wealth of the State while providing employment for thousands of workers at a living wage. Among the permanent improvements are 154 new public buildings, 7 miles of bridges, of which 2 miles are concrete and reinforced steel structures; 450 miles of "three-way" paved farm-to-market roads; more than 500 miles of newly cut and unpaved roads; 68 miles of new ditches that drain 2,430 acres of malaria breeding ponds; paved 653 blocks in small towns and cities removing main street residents from clouds of dust and from mud; repaired, repainted and otherwise improved a majority of the public buildings; laid miles of sewers and water mains, improved and installed new water reservoirs and supply systems in more than a dozen towns, and constructed numerous parks and swimming pools.

Extended Drouth Damages Crops

COMMISSIONER R. J. GOODE SUMMARIZES THE FARM DAMAGES IN STATE

Montgomery, Ala.—Hot dry weather has damaged feed crops and pastures 30 per cent, vegetable crops 69 per cent and has permitted farmers of the state to plant and grow only 36 per cent of their soil compliance crops, reports R. J. Goode, State Commissioner of Agriculture, after making an intensive survey of drouth damages preparatory to requesting federal aid for drouth-stricken farmers of the state.

In a comparison of July condition of corn, hay and pasture with that of July 1 last year, the report says:

"We find that nine counties, including Autauga, Coffee, Coosa, Dallas, Geneva, Henry, Pickens, Houston and Pike, have suffered less than 10 per cent damage.

"Six counties, including Barbour, Bullock, Cherokee, Dale, Lamar, and Macon have suffered from 10 to 19 per cent damage.

"Thirteen counties, including Bibb, Clarke, Covington, Crenshaw, Escambia, Fayette, Lowndes, Marengo, Marion, Montgomery, St. Clair and Washington, have suffered from 20 to 29 per cent damage.

"Twenty-one counties, including Butler, Calhoun, Chilton, Choctaw, Cleburne, Conecuh, DeKalb, Elmore, Etowah, Greene, Hale, Jackson, Lawrence, Lee, Madison, Randolph, Shelby, Sumter, Talladega, Wilcox and Winston, have suffered from 30 to 39 per cent damage.

"Fourteen counties, including Baldiwn, Blount, Limestone and Tuscaloosa have suffered more than 50 per cent."

Detailed analysis of the 69 per cent damage sustained by gardens and truck crops follow by districts:

North West Section 60 per cent; Tennessee Valley 75 per cent; Mineral Section 71 per cent; North East Section 81 per cent; Western Black Belt 65 per cent; Eastern Black Belt 65 per cent; The Piedmont 79 per cent; South West Section 62 per cent; South Central 73 per cent; South East Section 65 per cent.

By districts in the state, farmers have been able to plant and grow soil improvement compliance crops under the Agricultural Conservation program as follows:

Northwestern section 46 per cent; Tennessee Valley 36 per cent; Mineral section 39 per cent; northeastern section 25 per cent; Western Blackbelt 36 per cent; Eastern Blackbelt 42 per cent; Piedmont 37 per cent; Southwestern section 37 per cent; South Central section 33 per cent and Southeastern section 38 per cent.

Local B. and P. Women Entertain

Saturday afternoon, at the conclusion of the day's program at Alabama College, the out of town guests from other parts of the state were entertained at tea by the Montevallo Branch of the Business and Professional Women in West Main Parlor. This is the first time the local branch has had the privilege of entertaining representatives of the branches, and the members considered this occasion one to be proud of. This social hour completed quite adequately the stimulating programs of the morning and afternoon sessions. We are looking forward with keen anticipation to the next year's meeting when again the same hospitality may be extended to our visiting state members. Such an occasion gives us all the chance to greet our old friends and to make new ones. Forty-eight guests were present; coming from Birmingham, Montgomery, Tuscaloosa, Greenville, Northport, Auburn and Mobile.

The members of the local branch who participated actively in the preparation of the tea were Mrs. Bessie Merle Elliott, Mrs. Charlotte Peterson, Mrs. Mahan, Mrs. J. A. Brown and Mrs. Ida Hendrick.

Mrs. James Fitts Hill Replies To Secretary Apperson

Montgomery, July 10.—The Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers stands ready to join hands with any organization or group which is making an honest effort to secure a square deal for education in Alabama, Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president, declared in a letter today to B. C. Apperson, secretary of the Anti-Sales Tax Association.

The letter was written in answer to a published statement from Mr. Apperson last week in which he asked six questions and complained of not receiving a reply to a letter mailed while Mrs. Hill was in the hospital. Mrs. Hill, in answering repeated her urge for economy in state government, but insisted that anyone claiming state economies would provide the $4,000,000 needed by education is either ignorant of the facts or deliberately wrecking the school system.

The questions asked by Mr. Apperson and answered by Mrs. Hill follow:

Q.—1. Should "earmarking" of eduational funds be adopted, are there now sufficient funds being collected for school purposes to operate the schools on a full time basis and to pay the teachers?

A—1. No.

Q.—2. How much is the total amount of revenue now voted for educational purposes?

A.—2. The total amount of state revenue earmarked for education for 1935-36 is approximately $6,535,000. The total amount of local property taxes collected and anticipated is approximately $6,700,000.

Q.—3. Would "earmarking" all the funds for education purposes, now supposed to go toward education, solve the school problem?

A.—3. No; neither would parity without additional revenue.

Q.—4. If not, how much additional revenue would be needed?

A.—4. Approximately $4,000,000.

Q.—5. Should all funds for educational purposes be "earmarked" what would be the percentage received by the elementary and high schools in comparison to Auburn, University and the other institutons of higher learning?

A.—5. If all appropriations to public education were earmarked and paid in full, 84 per cent of the state appropriations to education would be paid to elementary and high schools and 16 per cent to institutions of higher learning.

Q.—6. What was the amount received by the state during 1935 from funds voted for educational purposes?

A.—6. The total receipts of state taxes earmarked for public education for 1934-36 amounted to $6,140,291.57. The same figure for 1935-36 is $6,535,000, or an increase of approximately $400,000. However, approximately $100,000 of this increase was due to an increase in poll tax collections because of election year. This will not be a permanent increase.

The local property taxes collected for school purposes for the year 1934-35 amounted to $7,571,408. In addition $1,556,000, or 28 per cent of the amount voted, was received from the General Fund.

A Bulletin of Interest To Women Read At College

The special bulletin, "A Study of the Employability of Women in Alabama" was presented Saturday at the conference of business women at Alabama College, having been published by the institution in cooperation with the national and state business and professional Women's clubs.

The preface is by President Ethel E. Ramage, of the Alabama Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs and the foreword is by President A. F. Harman, of the College.

Contributors of articles to the volume include Dr. Iva L. Peters and Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, while numerous club members in the State have participated in the study. Within the next few weeks copies will be distributed from the college.

Mrs. Eudora Ramsay Richardson, of Richmond, Virginia, addressed the club women at their general meeting Saturday which was scheduled as a part of the Student Career Conference. The gathering of students, however, was indefintely postponed due to the prevalence of infantile paralysis in some sections of the State.

Dean T. H. Napier presented the bulletin to the group at the general assembly Saturday afternoon, Dr. Peters and Dr. Steckel responding.

Business Women Hold Conference

The conference of business women at Alabama College opened with a general meeting Saturday morning at which Mrs. Eudora Ramsay Richardson, of Richmond, Va., spoke. Thursday evening she addressed the faculty and student body on the subject "Is This a Woman's World?"

In addition to speaking to the group of business women assembled here, Mrs. Richardson was to lead the Student Career Conference, which was originally scheduled July 8-10, but which was indefinitely postponed on account of the prevalence of infantile paralysis in some sections of the State. This was purely a precautionary measure, according to President A. F. Harman, and no plans have been announced for holding the meeting at a later date during the summer. Due to the crowded schedule on the campus between now and the opening of the next session it appears that the career meeting may not be held.

At the general meeting of business women at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education; Dean T. H. Napier, Dr. Iva L. Peters and Dr. Minnie L. Steckel were the speakers. At this time the special booklet on the Employability of Women, which was prepared by Alabama College in cooperation with the national and state Business and Professional Women's Clubs, was presented to the group.

Tea was served at 4 o'clock following the general discussion after the meeting.

Mr. Howard Rowe of Six Mile visited in Dogwood Sunday.

Mr. Carl Harrison has gone to Birmingham where he has accepted a position.

Mr. Ross Pearson, of Atlanta, is visiting his brother, Dr. F. B. Pearson, this week.

Capra's "Mr. Deeds" Comes To Town; To Open At The Strand

Frank Capra is coming to town. Well, not actually, though one of his productions, always eagerly awaited, is scheduled to open on Thursday at the Strand Theatre. It's title is "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," and it stands a very good chance, according to reports that have preceded it, of rivaling "It Happened One Night," which Capra also directed for Columbia Pictures.

To the extraordinary array of star names, including Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert, Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, May Robson, Walter Connolly, and earlier, Barbara Stanwyck, over whom this director has exercised his magic touch, must be added those of Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur, who are seen in the leading roles of "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town."

All-Star Supporting Cast

Also present and, probably going out of their way to please the meticulous Capra, are such players as George Bancroft, making his second screen appearance after a prolonged absence; Lionel Stander, raspy-voiced comic who was seen lately in "If you Could only Cook" and "The Music Goes 'Round;" Douglas Dumbrille, villain extraordinary; Raymond Walburn, whom Capra brought to he fore in "Broad way Bill"; Mme. Margaret Matzenauer, the famous opera star; H. B. Warner; Warren Hymer, and many others of like calibre.

$20,000,000 Fun Fest

Gary Cooper, one of Hollywood's top ranking male stars, is seen in the role of Longfellow Deeds, a simple, small-town boy with, nevertheless, lots of common sense, who inherits the tidy sum of $20,000,000 from an eccentric uncle. His descent upon New York City is the signal for newspapers and grafters to come snapping at his heels. He outwits the chiselers by the mere expedient of using his old-fashioned horse-sense.

But he has more difficulty with the Fourth Estate, which is represented by Jean Arthur in the role of a sob-sister who knows her way around. Miss Arthur, who now to be pretty near the summit of a climb that started some months ago with her pert characterization in "The Whole Town's Talkng" and continued unabated through "Public Hero Number One," "Diamond Jim," "The Public Menace" and "If You Could Only Cook," wriggles herself into the good graces of the rural minnionaire and succeeds in getting some priceless stories

FARMERS UNION WILL HOLD PICNIC AT CAMP BRANCH

The Shelby County Division Farmers Union will hold an old fashion basket picnic at Camp Branch, Saginaw school, on Thursday, July 30th, beginning at 10:00 a.m. The public is invited and especially all crafts of organized labor. National President, E. H. Everson, of St. Charles, South Dakota, and other prominent speakers will be on the program.—M. R. Douglas, County Secretary.

Second Term Of Summer School Begins July 23

The second term of summer school at Alabama College will begin July 23 and will continue until August 26. Classes will be conducted six days per week during this term.

The attendance during the first term, now in session, is the largest in several years for this period.

The School of Instruction for Vocational Home Economics teachers, the sixth major assembly scheduled on the campus during the summer, has been announced for July 27-August 15.

The summer school has been an annual phase of the program of work here since the summer school was established in 1916. It is directed by Dean T. H. Napier, assisted by Dr. M. L. Orr.

The Progressive Education Demonstration School will close July 22 with the first term of summer school, having been in session for six weeks. It has drawn a large number of students, visitors and teachers from all sections of the South both for the regular classes and for the meetings of the Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Association.

NOTICE LEGION MEMBERS

Don't forget the meeting at the Hut tonight (Thursday) at 7:30 o'clock.

The State Convention, which was to meet in Huntsville on the 19th has been postponed by Dr. Inge, State Commander, on account of the infantile paralysis epidemic in North Alabama.

Those attending the picnic given by the county association of W. M. U. at Shelby Springs in honor of Rev. Woolley of Columbiana, Mesdames, F. H. Frost, C. L. Meroney, Edwin Allen, Mary L. Hare, and Dr. F. B. Pearson.

Mrs. George Horn of Columbiana was the guest of Mrs. R. A. Reid last week.

Thirty-Three Of Filmdom's Fairest Seen With Cooper

Virtually every important film actress worth her salt in celluloid has appeared at some time or other during the past decade opposite the gangling Gary Cooper. Numbering thirty-three in all, the Cooper clan of screen charmers includes Eileen Sedgewick, Clara Bow, Esther Ralston, Vilma Banky, Betty Jewel, Thelma Tood, Evelyn Brent, Fay Wray, Florence Vidor, Colleen Moore, Nancy Carroll, Lupe Velez, Mary Brian, Beryl Mercer, June Collyer, Kay Johnson, Lily Damita, Sylvia Sidney, Carole Lombard, Claudette Colbert, Tallulah Bankhead, Helen Hayes, Juliette Compton, Joan Crawford, Frances Fuller, Miriam Hopkins, Ann Harding, Charlotte Henry, Marion Davies, Kathleen Burke, Anna Sten and Marlene Dietrich.

That's thirty-two, if you care to count them. The thirty-third is the pert Jean Arthur, who appears with Gary in Columbia's Frank Capra comedy romance, "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town," which will be showing at the Strand Theatre starting Thursday.

Among this distinguished array of feminine charm are two who have shared top roles with Cooper in three productions. They are the Milles Bow and Wray, better known off the screen as Mrs. Rex Bell and Mrs. Monk Saunders, respectively.

Four others, Mary Brian, Esther Ralston, Carole Lombard and Marlene Dietrich, have each played the Cooper enamorata on two occasions.

Others in the cast of "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town" are George Bancroft, Lionel Stander, Douglass Dumbrille, H. B. Warner and Raymond Walburn. The story, by Clarence Budington Kelland, was adapted to the screen by Robert Riskin.

Misses Jacques Battles, Warene Jones and Mrs. Zula Worrell and son, Mr. Melford, spent the past week end in Columbus, Georgia.

Mrs. M. H. Killingsworth and little son, Marvin, Jr., of Montgomery are the guests of Mrs. Killingsworth's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Horn.

Instruction School Here July 27

VOCATIONAL HOME ECONOMICS TEACHERS AT ALABAMA COLLEGE

The School of Instruction for Vocational Home Economics Teachers will be held at Alabama College July 27-August 15. The purpose of the special three weeks course is to give specific aid in organizing the year's program, in setting up standards and in applying modern methods to home economic instruction. The general meetings will center around the use of the new manual of Homemaking Education.

Two sections will devote their attention to setting up a vocational program with special attention to objectives, planning of a unit, making a calendar of work, checking progress and measuring results.

Another will deal with the teaching of adults, including organization, needs of the group, methods of instruction and the contribution to a vocational program.

The course in Home and Community Surveys will be a contiuation of that of last summer. Another will devote attention to Out-of-School Use of Home Economics. This will include recognizing jobs at home, securing increased independence in finding problems, measuring results and setting up standards for the home project program.

Other courses will be based on Instructional Methods, Business Management and Consumer Problems. Regular work in home economics will be held during the second term, July 23-August 26.

Drouth Damage Estimated at $300,000,000—Steel Fight Brings Union Labor Crisis—Landon Reconvenes Kansas Legislature.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

WHILE relentless heat drove the nation's farm losses from drouth toward the $300,000,000 mark and sent grain prices soaring, long needed rains in scattered regions of the drouth belt brought temporary relief. In sections of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and Ohio which faced the prospect of the disaster already confronting the Northwest, the rains were a Godsend to sun-parched corn fields, pastures, and crops of spring wheat. Rains in the Northwest revived portions of North and South Dakota, Montana and Nebraska.

But a heat wave lasting nearly a week had brought temperatures ranging from 90 to 114 in the Great Plains territory.

Twenty-three states, eight of them in the South, were listed as suffering in some degree from the drouth. Ten of them—North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Minnesota, Missouri, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Virginia and South Carolina—were already in a critical stage. Five others — Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina and West Virginia—were borderline cases. Eight others where the full severity of the drouth had not yet been felt were: Nebraska, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Indiana and Ohio.

The sweltering heat and drouth spread into Canada. The prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—Canada's bread basket—had begun to suffer like their neighbors in the United States. Except for scattered local showers, there had been no rain from Ontario westward to the Canadian Rockies since June 16.

With the full extent of the damage in the "dust bowl" area of the Northwest not yet known, the federal government made plans to deal with a long-range disaster. President Roosevelt, taking personal command of the relief program in Washington, announced that he would make a personal tour of the drouth-stricken areas within the next few weeks.

The President announced that the federal government had prepared a comprehensive plan whereby 170,000 out of 204,000 farm families impoverished by the drouth in the Northwest would be given immediate cash assistance. He declared that he will make his trip after the relief program has had an opportunity to get under way, to see for himself exactly how much damage was caused by the drouth and whether financially-ruined families are receiving the proper assistance.

Ruth Bryan Owen

ROMANCE outmaneuvered diplomacy in the life of Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, American minister to Denmark, and former member of congress. The engagement of the daughter of William Jennings Bryan to Captain Boerge Rohde, an officer of the Danish army, was announced in Denmark by the latter's mother. Captain Rohde is a member of King Christian's personal bodyguard.

Captain Rohde arrived in America on the liner Drottningholm a day or two after his fiancee had reached the country. The couple were married at an estate on Long Island.

In political circles the opinion was expressed that Mrs. Owen will probably resign her diplomatic post in a short time. While there are no formal regulations which compel an American woman minister to resign when she weds, it has been customary for women in minor positions in the American foreign service to retire when they marry.

Mrs. Owen was the first American woman ever to be made minister to a foreign country. She will retain her American citizenship in spite of her marriage.

GOVERNOR Alf M. Landon returned to Topeka, Kas., after a vacation in the Colorado mountains, for the reconvening of the state legislature and to prepare for the acceptance speech he will deliver at the Republican notification ceremonies July 23.

The Republican presidential nominee appeared before a joint session of the legislature and urged passage of amendments to the state constitution to provide adequate social security measures. Governor Landon declared that care of the needy aged and others, suffering misfortunes is a "public obligation."

Following his address, the Kansas senate adopted a constitutional amendment by a vote of 35 to 1, empowering the legislature to enact a uniform system of direct aid for needy aged persons, indigent infirm persons and others suffering misfortunes which give them a claim on society for aid. It likewise passed by a unanimous vote another proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the state to levy taxes on employers and employees for systems of old age pensions and unemployment insurance to which the beneficiary must contribute.

Meanwhile, Governor Landon opened a series of major conferences with farm leaders for the purpose of drafting a farm relief program for inclusion in his acceptance speech. He conferred with former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, and former Senator Otis F. Glenn, Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, Representative Clifford Hope of Kansas and R. K. Laubengayer, a Kansas farm publisher.

William Green

AS THE long-awaited campaign to unionize the nation's steel industry was under way, one of the most serious crises in the history of the American labor movement arose when strife broke out between William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, who has promoted the unionization drive in the steel industry.

Meeting in Washington, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor considered the matter of suspending eight national and international unions on the ground that these eight unions have begun the formation of a rival, or duel labor federation.

John L. Lewis announced that he would not respond to a summons of the executive council to answer charges that he had violated the federation's policy by trying to organize 500,000 steel workers into one big industrial union instead of into several unions divided by crafts.

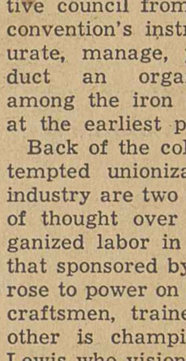
Should the rift widen and a break occur, observers believe it would split the organized labor movement and affect its prestige and power at a critical time.

Denouncing the action of the Lewis group, President Green declared:

"It is sincerely to be regretted that the committee for industrial organization thwarted the purpose of the American Federation of Labor to inaugurate an organizing campaign in the steel industry.

"A very serious if not a fatal mistake was made when it flouted the decision of the last convention of the American Federation of Labor . . . and prevented the executive council from carrying out the convention's instructions 'to inaugurate, manage, promote and conduct an organizing campaign among the iron and steel workers at the earliest possible date.'"

Back of the collision over the attempted unionization of the steel industry are two contending schools of thought over the future of organized labor in America. One is that sponsored by Mr. Green which rose to power on a policy of trained craftsmen, trained by crafts. The other is championed by John L. Lewis who visions a powerful labor machine organized regardless of crafts, which includes the semi-skilled and unskilled workers as well as the trained craftsmen. The success of either Green or Lewis, it is believed, will herald a turning point in the history of American labor.



Senator Borah

SENATOR William E. Borah, about whose future political plans considerable doubt existed, formally announced that he would be a candidate for re-election to the senate.

Several days before making his announcement the Idaho statesman had pledged allegiance to the Republican ticket and platform, thus removing the expressed doubts of many political leaders throughout the country regarding his stand in the presidential campaign. Previously Senator Borah had commented favorably on both the Republican and Democratic platforms, praising both for the stand they had taken on the question of monopolies.

The seventy-one-year-old senator in clarifying his position on the Republican platform said:

"I have no intention of bolting the ticket.

"I am supporting the platform and I have been supporting the platform from the beginning."

SOON after returning to his desk from a three-day pilgrimage to Virginia, President Roosevelt announced that he had granted Postmaster General James A. Farley leave of absence without pay from August 1 to November 5, the day after the presidential elections.

Thus Mr. Farley will be freed from official duties to devote himself during the next three months to the direction of the President's campaign for re-election. The announcement did not come as a surprise to those in informed political circles in Washington, but it had been rumored in some quarters that Mr. Farley would resign his cabinet post and retain his job as chairman of the Democratic National committee.

Mr. Farley announced that Representative Sam Rayburn of Texas would be chairman of the Democratic speakers' bureau. The campaign, he said, would be in full swing by Labor Day, with cabinet members, ambassadors and senators taking the stump.

President Roosevelt's sojourn in Virginia took him to the dedication of Shenandoah National park, to Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson and to Williamsburg, capital of the Old Dominion from 1699 to 1779. In an address at Jefferson's home, the President called on the nation to rekindle the "sacred fire" of "true freedom" which had lighted the "golden age" of American history. He declared the present emergency required the same leadership as that displayed by Thomas Jefferson, founder of the Democratic party.

DEFYING the threats of Communist members of the chamber of deputies, the French government decided to use armed force "with care" to oust French strikers who refuse to evacuate their places of business.

The announcement of this new policy was made by Minister of the Interior Roger Salengro, following the outbreak of fresh "folded arm" strikes in Paris and the provinces. It was estimated that 80,000 workers were still on strike in various industries throughout France.

In the meantime the government's project to nationalize France's arms industry was approved by the army committee of the chamber of deputies.

CUTTING a big cake to celebrate his ninety-seventh birthday, John D. Rockefeller predicted that he would live to be one hundred. Despite temperature of 92 in the shade, the famous nonagenarian donned a sun helmet and went outdoors on his summer estate near Lakewood, N. J.

The multimillionaire oil man and philanthropist did not let the celebration of his birthday interfere with his daily nap or his daily afternoon automobile ride.

Mr. Rockefeller long since has given up all forms of athletic activities, including golf, formerly his favorite pastime. A few years ago he was down to a few holes of golf a day, but now he has given it up entirely. It has been his custom to spend his winters at Ormond Beach, Fla., and his summers either at Lakewood or at his other estate at Pocantico Hills near Tarrytown, N. Y.

Adolf Hitler

WAR-WORRIED Europe shifted its anxiety from the Italo-Ethiopian sanctions problem to the newer and baffling question of what to do about the Free City of Danzig now seeking to free itself from the bonds of the League of Nations.

The league disposed of the sanctions problem by voting to abolish them, thus to all practical intents and purposes removing Ethiopia from the family of sovereign states. Appearing personally before the league assembly, the refugee emperor, Haile Selassie, made a last moving bid for Ethiopia's freedom.

The "king of kings" denounced France and Great Britain without mentioning their names. To the generally expressed desire to reform the league, he said the weakness was not the league covenant itself, but a lack of international morality. The Negus' request for a loan of $50,000,000 to Ethiopia was voted down. Previously Haile had informed Capt. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, that he would return to Ethiopia immediately to join his loyal tribesmen and fight for Ethiopian independence.

With Mussolini given satisfaction, the Danzig situation brought into the foreground the figure of Adolf Hitler, chancellor of Nazi Germany. It was a Nazi follower of Hitler, Dr. Arthur Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, who demanded independence for the former German city now surrounded by Polish territory and who denounced the league and Sean Lester, league high commissioner for the port.

Observers were of the opinion that Greiser was acting under orders from Chancellor Hitler. In view of Germany's expansionist program and its rearmament, they feel that Danzig will be the next Nazi objective now that the Rhineland is remilitarized. By the elimination of Commissioner Lester or by the curtailment of his authority over the international affairs of the city, it is believed the Nazi would be able to crush the opposition party.

In Ancient Nile Mud
England Keeps Ready
Let the Dead Sleep
Murder Starts Early

Arthur Brisbane

Paris.—Reclining on her side, her body covered with gold, gold necklaces on her neck and on the ground nearby, archaeologists discover the well-preserved body of an Egyptian princess whose father, the Pharoah Chephren, built the second biggest pyramid; it was his brother, Cheops, who built the largest.

Those pyramids were tombs for kings, and searchers found the princess in one of them. The Nile mud seeping into the tomb had helped to preserve her.

That princess, living 5,000 years ago, could tell an interesting story for the movies. She "built herself a small pyramid with stones given to her by her many lovers." Where do you suppose she is now? In some strange Egyptian heaven, perhaps, with all those admirers around her.

England, alarmed by European war threats, issues an official "white paper" explaining why—

"The relation of our own armed forces to those of other great powers should be maintained at a figure high enough to enable us to exercise our influence and authority in international affairs."

Unfortunately for all plans, the airplane in the hands of a desperate nation might upset all national "authority," just as a pistol in the hands of a desperate man upsets individual and police authority.

One bullet will stretch individual authority in the dust; 1,000 airplanes, attacking the heart of a great city, might cause national "authority" to end in demoralization.

England's new defense increase will be largely in her air force; that wise nation knows that the real "ocean" in future wars will be the ocean of the air.

In a desert of southeastern Utah, men and women, belonging to the cult of "truth seekers," were gathered around the body of Mrs. Edith Dakhal, who died more than a year ago. You read about it, perhaps.

Mrs. Ogden, leader of the "truth seekers," prayed over the body, which appeared marvelously preserved. The "truth seekers" believe they will bring the woman back to life, but the pathetic fact is that it would not in the least matter if they did.

The important thing is to improve the condition of 1,800,000,000 actually living on the earth. For one safely out of it to be brought back would be unimportant, in these days, and perhaps cruel.

America holds the world's "murder championship" for all kinds of murder, at all ages—quantity, quality, variety, volume.

A New Jersey boy, 16 years old, was sentenced to death.

In Wisconsin, a coroner reports that little David Holl, two months old, was killed by two boys four and three years of age.

They each held one hand of the younger one, and dropped it on the floor. It cried and would not stop. Then, one of the small boys explained, "We pounded him." These youngest "killers" puzzle the law. You can't "try" a four-year-old child.

Railroads tell the interstate commerce commission they would like fares reduced to two and a half cents a mile, instead of two cents. The railroads should have all possible consideration, for they have built up this country, but at two and a half cents a mile they will not compete successfully with automobiles carrying passengers for one-quarter of a cent a mile.

New York proposes to fingerprint everybody, new babies included. The baby of the future will be busy, with finger-printing, tonsil and appendix removal, vaccination for smallpox and a half dozen other diseases.

The new treaty with France, reducing the duty on French wines and liquors by 50 per cent, interests California and other wine growing states. It should persuade them to stabilize the production of wines, establish official guarantees of purity, freedom from adulterations, mixtures, and especially "fortifying" with alcohol.

In Europe, notably in France, adulteration of wines is an offense against the law. With us, it is a business.

For advertising reasons, a group of men made a long distance hike on a diet of broken grain to prove the superiority of that diet. They were surprised when 53 hikers showed a total loss of 211 pounds in weight, while one, 66 years old, showed a gain of three pounds.

Two Platforms

Washington.—As the full meaning of the platforms of the two major party conventions sinks in, certain very definite conclusions cannot be avoided. In each instance, the two old political organizations have moved into virgin territory, entirely new fields.

In the case of the Republicans, their Cleveland convention completely reorganized their party leadership and placed the responsibility in the hands of younger men, casting onto the ash heap along with the old guard leaders, many of the old time conservative ideas.

In the case of the Democrats, their Philadelphia convention virtually created a new party. They went further toward the radical side than they have ever gone before. In no spirit of criticism, it must be said that the Philadelphia convention really gave birth to a New Deal party, as such. The one thing they kept was the Democratic label.

The theme song of the Republican platform was molded out of the fabric that is part and parcel of the younger generations as distinguished from the attitude given birth and promoted and protected by the Penroses, the Lodges, the Smoots and others of that texture. This is to say that the Republican convention, for the first time in many years, has moved its campaign pronouncements out onto something approximating a moral plan, or at least the evidence is they have attempted to do so.

The Democrats, having had ten days between the Republican convention and their own in which to study the Republican document and improve upon it, went considerably beyond their opponents in the language they used. They have made an appeal to the voters of the nation that surely will attract many thousands of voters to the support of Mr. Roosevelt.

On the other hand, the Philadelphia convention proceeded to cast aside many traditions, many principles, which old line Democrats, who love the Jeffersonian theory, regard as their political bible, and they may antagonize that segment of the old party by so doing.

To state the proposition in another way, many observers and political analysts hold that while the Democratic platform contains fewer contradictions than does the Republican pronouncement and that, on the whole, it is a much better written platform, they have leaned so far to the radical side that they are leaving conservative Democrats and old guard Republicans only one place to go—to the Republican candidate. This develops because, in the first instance, the old guard Republicans obviously cannot embrace a Democratic platform which they regard as too liberal and they have no choice but the Republicans. The conservative Democrats will have the choice to make. They can go to the New Deal party or they can remain as old line Democrats and swallow their pride of party affiliation long enough to support the Republican, Governor Landon.

Under Orders

One may look back over the doings at Philadelphia and recognize that the meeting was thoroughly controlled from Washington. That was natural because the party in power obviously has all of the important federal offices filled with its own men. The convention included among its delegates about 64 per cent of federal office holder-delegates. Naturally, then, the meeting was going to perform as ordered.

That explains better than any way I know how the 104-year-old two-thirds rule was so easily abrogated. That rule has been a sore spot in conventions for years. It has many times been the direct cause of bitter convention battles and has bred scores of bitter personal animosities. It was none the less interesting, however, to see the Philadelphia delegates toss out principles of the Democratic party with such utter abandon.

I am convinced that the Democrats have not seen the end of the two-thirds rule yet. There is every indication that it will arise again when the next quadrennial meeting is held. There are plenty of Democrats who believe that the requirement of a vote of two-thirds of all delegates shall be recorded for the man selected as the party's Presidential nominee is a protective measure. But when the convention voted out the two-thirds rule, it took the Democratic party out of the hands of the South.

It seems to me that the Southerners cannot be blamed for desiring to maintain that two-thirds rule. This is their position: through all of the recent elections, the Democratic nominee has begun his campaign with the assurance that 11, 12 or 13 states in the South would give him their electoral vote. He could concentrate, therefore, on the North and the West. The old line southerners have held that since they always supplied from 100 to 140 electoral votes upon which the Democratic nominee could build, they ought to have something to say about his nomination, about the type of man selected. The two-thirds rule gave them a veto power and they have used it many times.

Now, unless the old line Democrats again gain control of the party, the South will no longer be able to sit as the umpire in deciding the type of character of the man who will bear their party label in campaigns.

The question may arise in many minds as to how the rule came to be discarded so easily. Earlier in this report to you, I mentioned that 64 per cent of the delegates to Philadelphia were federal office holders or party leaders selected by the Roosevelt patronage dispensers. The presence of those office holders and party leaders who have been bound to the Roosevelt administration in one way or another constitutes the answer. There were enough of them in the Southern delegations to constitute a balance of power on close votes in state delegation caucuses. Hence we witnessed a good many Southern states voting to abrogate the two-thirds rule over protests of some of their own numbers.

Quote Jefferson

There is another circumstance about the Philadelphia convention that I believe warrants mention. It may have gone unnoticed generally but just 160 years after Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence, the Philadelphia convention of the Democratic party copied from the immortal Declaration the famous phrase: "We hold these truths to be self-evident."

It was a bold move on the part of the New Dealers to lift that Jeffersonian expression and to place it among the many new theories and new ideals which they advance under the banner of what was the Jeffersonian party. Some observers point out that this action may invite comparison between the political ideals of Thomas Jefferson and Franklin D. Roosevelt because surely there is much more in the Declaration of Independence than the simple expression that certain truths are self-evident.

Talk About Peace

In these days when the world, as well as the American nation, is sorely troubled and disturbed, those Americans who are convinced that isolation may ruin our country, can find little satisfaction either in the Democratic or Republican platforms. This may not seem important until one looks back over the last two decades. Examination of what has happened in that time is sufficient to demonstrate the significance of this isolationist trend by both major political parties.

The Republican plank on foreign affairs has little to say and what it says is chiefly negative. The plank drafted by the Roosevelt administration and adopted by the Philadelphia convention is as nebulous as the milky way. Each platform talks about peace but it is decidedly doubtful that either platform has offered a genuine way to obtain or maintain peace.

It was only natural that the Republicans should restate their opposition to the League of Nations. It was likewise only natural that the Democratic plank on foreign affairs should be full of glittering generalities because it is yet to be remembered that the late Woodrow Wilson has countless followers in the New Deal party who hold the conviction that the League of Nations, with American support, would solve most world problems. It is obvious, therefore, that the Democrats could not commit the party either to League adherence or non-adherence.

Except for the party split over the old Wilsonian policies which ideals stood as a ghost in the background in the Philadelphia convention, one might have expected more definite declarations from the Philadelphia conclave. For example, the Roosevelt administration has sponsored reciprocal trade agreements. It has broadened American foreign policy in many other ways but some leader in the group that drafted the 1936 platform was smart enough to realize that a declaration on internationalism that was too strong would have brought about a vicious outburst at Philadelphia. In consequence, almost nothing of a tangible character was forthcoming.

Therefore, in summing up, I think it must be concluded that both platforms have been drawn to appeal to Americans as isolationists. Likewise, it occurs to me that the interpretation of their promises and plans and foreign policies by the two contending candidates will be the more interesting as the campaigns proceed.

—16—

"Did it matter so much to you?"

And then was sorry he'd said it.

"We've all been long on eavesdropping," he added, quickly. "Old Ridder, your father—"

"We've all had good reason."

She was standing beside the long table.

"You asked if it mattered to me," she said. "Don't you know?"

"Why should it matter?"

"Don't you know that?"

"We've been good pals—" he began.

She was staring at him fixedly.

"Don't talk nonsense," she commanded.

Barry sat next to her.

"Listen," he said. "You're a lady—"

She laid her hand on his arm.

"I've only one question to ask," she declared, "and I count on your answering that honestly."

"You can."

"You said—to Ridder—'I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl.'"

"Yes."

"Was that true?"

"Yes."

"Who was she?"

"I told you a month ago."

"Under considerable stress. And you never repeated it. Are you still nuts about her?"

She used the absurd colloquialism as gravely as though it were Shakespearian English.

An invisible hand clutched at Barry's throat.

There was a lump there—something that had to be swallowed immediately. He felt an hysterical desire to laugh, or to cry. Then, "We won't talk about that now," he said, calmly.

"Why not?"

He couldn't answer.

"Was that pretense, too?"

Suddenly, he couldn't bear it.

"You know damned well it wasn't," he burst forth, inexcusably. "You know exactly how I feel. You've always known. Everybody's always known everything about me, it seems. I'm as much a failure at faking as I am at everything else. What's the sense of discussing it now?"

"This may be our last chance to discuss it."

They were both standing. Looking straight at each other.

Then, Pat said, "I love you."

"For God's sake—listen—I'm the son of a ne'er-do-well."

"I love you."

"I'm a bum and a vagabond."

"I love you."

"Before night, I'll be a jail-bird."

"I love you."

"Pat—"

"I'll wait for you," Pat said. "And then we'll both start fresh."

She was smiling now.

"Will you marry me, Mr. Gilbert?"

For answer, he caught her up in his arms.

He was still holding her when the old man came through the door.

"Will you step in here, please?" the old man asked, as unemotionally as though he had seen people embracing one another in this board room every day of his life.

Without replying, Barry released Pat.

Then he pressed her shoulder, reassuringly, and followed Ridder.

At the big desk, Mrs. Ridder was standing. He recognized her at once, though she was younger—and prettier — than he had expected. "Forty," Barry guessed, glancing at her wavy, dark hair, and then realized that she must be more than that. She looked very much like her son, Barry thought. Curious. That was the stronger strain, then, even though she seemed as soft and gentle as her husband was hard and domineering.

She was a small woman, with plump arms, and tiny wrists and ankles. She had large, brown eyes, with shadows under them. They had shown suffering, those eyes, though they were bright enough now. "Snappy," Barry described them.

"My wife," Ridder nodded toward her, curtly.

She came forward, her hand extended to Barry.

"I want to thank you," she said.

Before Barry could answer, Ridder asked, "Why didn't you tell me you'd left all this at Southampton?"

"All what?"

"Your accounts," Mrs. Ridder explained. "Evans gave them to me this morning, but I didn't open the envelope until just now. Then I brought it straight to Mr. Ridder."

"What's this mummery about paying your board? . . . Come in, Miss Hambidge."

Miss Hambidge was "in."

"Mummery?"

"Play acting," Ridder snapped. "I observed that you'd feathered your nest. I was wrong. Why didn't you say so?"

"I did."

The old man was looking at Barry's check.

"Can you write?" he asked.

"I don't know."

"Harwood thinks you can. He just left here. He says you earned what we paid you. Well, you'd better go on earning it."

"You mean I'm hired—"

"Hired?" Ridder repeated. "You were hired two months ago. Who ever fired you?"

There didn't seem to be any answer to that.

"Mr. Ridder wants you to work with Jack," Mrs. Ridder remarked. "Keep an eye on him."

"You're going to take Jack—"

"We're taking him home tonight. And Peggy. We hope you'll come out sometimes."

"I want Jack to carry on," Ridder declared, "when I'm through."

He was back at his desk now, and he looked up, almost smiling.

"You said I was a tough bird," he told Barry. "I heard you. Don't apologize. The world needs tough birds. You don't win battles with pigeons. Somebody's got to do a little clear thinking. Somebody's got to know what he's about. We're a soft race. Coddled. Self-indulgent. We need hard going and discipline."

His voice was crisp and sure.

"What's the matter with this young generation? It's fathers had too much money. I was a tough bird because I knew the fight Jack had made, and I didn't help him. I'd tried that, hadn't I? The other way was my only chance to make a man of my son."

There was no lack of emotion in his tone now.

"And you. How did I know you weren't just a cheap swindler? By listening to a lot of warm-hearted generalities? How did I know you weren't a blackmailer—until I saw you were going to give yourself up without squealing?"

"Then you were play-acting?"

"Not on your life. I was watching you like a hawk, but there was a cop out there, and I thought you had a date with him, until I saw your face when I asked you why you sent that wireless to Mrs. Ridder."

Again, he almost smiled.

"There was a cop waiting behind that door, and a girl behind that one. A nice girl. I had to be sure I wasn't messing things up for her."

He glanced at his watch.

"Four o'clock. You people have got to get out of here. I can't spend the day being a sentimental idiot."

Then, Pat Said, "I Love You."

"You're neither," Mrs. Ridder said.

"Neither what?"

"Neither sentimetal nor an idiot. You're a 'tough bird,' but I like 'em that way."

She was holding on to his arm when Barry closed the big door behind them.

Barry thought she was crying.

"She is my mother, after all!" Barry thought. "She's all the mother I ever had."

He told Winslow most of it, late that same afternoon.

Peter sat at his desk, looking restless and tired, but happier than he had seemed in some time.

"Pat said she was going to propose to you," he smiled. "Meant it, too; we knew that. Women are funny. Snooted you while things were going right, didn't she?"

Barry laughed.

"I was coming back for her when I got out of jail."

"Your dope on the old man was all wrong," Winslow commented. "He has been cold and hungry. Trucked on a dock once. And as to being 'nuts about anybody,' can't you see that's why he went into reverse when the boy disappointed him?"

He opened the right top drawer of his desk, probing its inscrutable jumble for something to play with

"You had a close call, though. Ridder knew what he owed you. People forgive what you do to them, but rarely what you do for them."

"You've done an awful lot for me, all right."

"Nonsense!"

The top drawer hadn't yielded anything promising and Peter picked up his little red magnet.

"It's all ended well," he remarked; "even for Luis Morano. He cheated the chair, and that's what he wanted to do."

"I thought you were so sure of his innocence."

"His innocence of this crime, yes," Peter answered.

Then he rose and touched the magnet to his thermometer.

"When are you sailing?"

"Wednesday."

"Good luck," Barry said, extending his hand across the desk.

Peter turned to take it, freeing his own hand by trying to slip the magnet over the hook from which the thermometer hung.

The magnet promptly fell into the open desk drawer.

"Damn!" Peter exclaimed, probing again.

He retrieved, it at last, from somewhere near the bottom of that astounding accumulation of rubber bands, pen-wipers, and what not.

Clinging to the metal, held by its magnetic attraction, was another bit of metal

As Peter dropped the magnet onto his desk, that other bit of metal detached itself, and fell almost at Barry's feet.

Barry picked it up, looked at it, looked again, and then looked at Peter.

Peter was staring at him.

"A 66152," he said. "Yes, that's Kelly's latch-key."

Peter nodded.

"I must have thrown it here weeks ago and forgotten it."

"I'd throw it somewhere else now," Barry advised. "Somewhere just a little bit safer. Well, good luck, again, and good-by."

He had reached the door when Peter said: "Wait a minute."

Barry waited.

"How long have you known?"

"That you killed Mike Kelly?" Barry asked. "Since last Thursday. I was on the train coming in from Southampton, and I'd just read of Morano's death. 'One of my suspects was guilty,' I thought. 'Peter Winslow can't laugh that off.'"

He was back in the room now.

"I remembered," he went on, "how you did laugh when I suggested Morano. And how sure you were that I was wrong about every one else. But you never said anything that might've started me on the right track. On the contrary, when I asked you if there was a Mrs. Kelly, you answered, 'Yes. She sued for divorce recently and withdrew the case.' You'd just read that in the Herald Tribune, and the same sentence revealed that, at the time of the murder, Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem. But you didn't mention that. Why? Only one explanation occurred to me, and that was your willingness to keep me on the trail of some one who couldn't possibly be convicted."

Barry sat down again, the other side of the desk.

"Go on," Peter urged. "I'm very much interested."

He was sitting, too, now.

"My interest," he continued, "is strangely impersonal. Almost wholly professional. I think it is. That's very curious. I'm just a criminal lawyer interested in a crime."

His weariness explained that, Barry thought. As Hambidge had been, and Morano, and Barry himself when talking with Ridder, Peter Winslow was "glad it's over."

"As a criminal lawyer," Barry said, "and a shrewd one, you'd be surprised to know how much you overlooked. Bits of evidence that fitted like a jig-saw puzzle the moment suspicion started anyone putting them together."

"As, for instance?"

Barry smiled.

"You told me Morano phoned you at one o'clock the morning of the murder 'to say that one of his girls was in jail,' and would you 'take the case.' But Peggy wasn't in jail, at one o'clock. She'd been released hours before, and Morano knew it. I knew that he did phone you. What about? Why, about Kelly's visit to the Cocoanut Bar, of course, and the threat of something in his pocket that was not only a menace to Morano but Kelly's hold over Judge Hambidge. A paper every one seemed to want, and that had disappeared when the body was found.

"What had that paper to do with you?

"If this were a detective story, and you read it, you'd find twenty answers to that question. Judge Hambidge said he couldn't tell the truth because of a woman. Pat said the woman was her dead mother. And plainly, that had something to do with Morano."

He leaned forward across the desk.

"I couldn't see any link between the two. And then I remembered that Pat's mother was your wife's sister. Pat told me her mother was 'brought up in a little town called Warrenton.' That meant your wife came from Warrenton, too. And Morano had told me he came from Fauquier county. I went to my atlas. Warrenton's in Fauquier county. There used to be a military school there. Mrs. Winslow ran away with her first husband while he was a cadet in a military school."

Peter leaned forward, too.

"And Morano—" he began tensely.

"I don't know whether Morano went to a military school or not.

"But George Selby did.

"Morano and George Selby were the same man, weren't they?"

"Yes, the same," Peter said.

"I was sure of it," Barry resumed. "The papers reported that Selby was drowned in Philadelphia. But the body they identified had been in the water two weeks. Fresh water. So that identification didn't amount to much. Violet Fane had told me Morano bought the house down town because he was 'married onct,' and he and his wife lived there. The sob-story I dug out of the tabloids said Selby was 'blissfully happy' with his bride in a house he'd rented down town. Obviously, the same house. Sentimental? Yes, but Morano was a sentimental cuss. So sentimental that he might have died rather than have it discovered that your wife was really his wife."

"I Doped That Out, Too."

Barry saw Peter wince, but went on.

"Of course, he had another reason for resisting arrest—that 'hot spot' with which Kelly threatened him. If Morano had been arrested, and finger-printed, they'd've learned that he was George Selby, and wanted for murder. Morano made certain of that. The 2:12 train he caught at the Penn station went to Philadelphia. That's where he was all the next day—checking up on the finger-prints taken when Selby was sent to the State penitentiary, and, perhaps, trying through underground channels, to have them removed from the files.

"I had the motive for the murder now.

"Kelly knew Morano was Selby, and so that your wife was technically a bigamist. That was the threat he held over Morano, and Judge Hambidge. The threat that persuaded the Judge to write a 'crooked decision.' The paper Kelly had in his pocket was a marriage certificate, or something of the sort, he'd found somewhere."

"In an old trunk," Peter said; "in the house he bought at 24 Jefferson street."

Barry nodded.

"I doped that out, too. Both Morano and Hambidge had plenty of reason to kill Kelly.

"But neither had as much reason as you had.

"If you knew of the existence of that paper.

"And you did, didn't you? That's where Morano's telephone message came in. That's why he called you up from the Cocoanut Bar. To tell you he'd seen the paper, and Kelly had it."

"Right," Winslow said, simply.

"My inquiry was narrowing down to you and Morano. But how did either of you get in to Kelly? And then I remembered that, the day I first saw Mrs. Kelly, she came into that house and left her key in the door. I did the same thing this week. Anybody might. Especially a drunken man. That would explain why the key wasn't on Kelly's body. It would explain how our third caller entered while Kelly was talking to Judge Hambidge."

"Right," Winslow repeated.

"Was the third caller you or Morano? And then I remembered two things. Morano took the 2:12 to Philadelphia to check on those finger-prints. He wouldn't've done that if he'd known Kelly was dead. The house was dark and silent when Morano got to Sixteenth street. He thought Kelly'd gone to bed, and so he went to Philadelphia. I was sure of that. And I was sure that the man who killed Kelly wore gloves.

An Old Belief

To have a crow fly over the house is a sign of death.

Beach Togs Tell Fabric Trends

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IT IS not enough that beach outfits and active sports clothes be stylish and pleasing to the eye. It is not enough that they be merely practical and utilitarian. To qualify 100 per cent to the good your sun, sand and surf and your general outdoor play-ground togs must be every whit as practical as they are chic and eye-appealing.

The cunning bathing and beach suit of gay print shown to the right in the picture is just that—thoroughly as practical as it is charming to look upon. Its claim to practicality is due to the fact that the sanforized-shrunk cotton of which it is made carries the promise of non-shrinking no matter how often it may happen to be water soaked. This very modern way of processing cottons and linens so that they cannot skin and linens so that they cannot shrink insures your bathing wardrobe all season long, which, of course, means no-end satisfaction in the final analysis of clothes logic.

Practical from another point of view, too, is this charming beach and swim ensemble, in that it is one of the very new and goodlooking halter bathing suits with wrap-around skirts to tie on when you go meandering down the beach as fair maidens are wont to do.

Another story of achievement in the way of combining the practical with the highly chic and attractive in sports clothes is told in the new weight-controlling ensemble that allows one to lounge about the house, play ping-pong and go about home duties while accomplishing the magic of shelving the extra poundage one longs to discard preparatory to getting one's self into shape for that svelte lithe appearance in one's bathing and beach suit. This miracle-working avoirdupois reducer is pictured in the foreground. A smart gym gob suit it is, made of an exceedingly good-looking crepe-texture rubber that keeps the pores of the body open and encourages a healthy perspiration. When that happens you can start making your swimming dates for to your glee and satisfaction the pounds will begin to roll off until normal weight is reached. These crepe-textured rubber gym gobs are styled in three comfortable pieces—slacks, shorts and shirt.

Big news and no doubt about it, is the beach and swimming suit in the new and startling front page newspaper print cotton. See it pictured to the left in the group. Prints this season are noted for novelty and certainly this newspaper-print cotton captures first honors in that respect. The fitted halter top which is lined with white wool jersey for extra comfort and proper contour, buttons at the front to the waistband of the one-piece wool-lined skirt and maillot. The separate cape has an attached hood and is lined with terry cloth throughout.

Very smart beach outfits of white pique are among the season's latest models. A stylish ensemble includes shorts, worn under a one-piece tunic that fastens all the way down the front (may be left open at will) with pique-covered buttons. A big floppy white fabric hat is worn.

Another interesting item is the hat made of pique that is nothing more than a brim which ties at the back. It is without crown and can be untied and flattened out to be washed and ironed.

CHIC FOR SUMMER

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

According to the modern way of thinking a costume is only as smart and correct and goodlooking as the accessories worn with it. In other words it is the accessories that make the costume and this is the challenge that fashionables must meet these times. In the matter of observing the little niceties of accessory details the lady in the picture is costumed to perfection. Her exquisitely ladylike straw hat is an exponent of smartest millinery fashion. The fur that borders the sleeves of her jewel-clasped crepe frock carries a convincing message in regard to the importance of "summer furs" in the mode. Her long simple slip-on suede gloves are eminently correct. As to the handsome bag she carries it is the accent supreme of chic.

Polka Dots in Style.

FEATHERS IN STYLE FOR HAT TRIMMING

Feathers are becoming more and more important as trimming for hats, according to Erik Braagaard, the young Danish milliner whose recently established Paris house has had unusual success.

Braagaard even makes entire hats and headdresses of feathers. He takes a single yellow bird of paradise and curves it cleverly about the head, holding it in position with double bands of black velvet that cross the back of the head. This hat designer is building crowns higher and higher for morning and sports wear. The conical or thimble crowns, likewise are featured on some of the afternoon hats while others are trimmed with bunches of fruit or flowers.

Late Offerings of Prints Copy Design of Wall Paper

Some of the new prints look like wallpaper designs. Vertical stripes of flowers, massed together, are printed on pastel colored backgrounds. Other materials are printed with enormous sprays of flowers or vines in conventional wallpaper patterns. One house has applied a leaf and vine design in black organdy on a dinner dress of white organdy. The veins in the black organdy leaves are etched in shiny black beads.

Bracelets Combine Both Real Beauty and Utility

Since costume jewelry has come rushing back into style, there are all sorts of new bracelets on the market. For evening wear there are wide bands of gold or silver set with large, square precious stones. The largest center stone opens up to reveal a miniature powder compact and puff, while the stones on either side open to show paste rouge and eye shadow. The clasps of the new bracelets are small lipsticks.

All Around the House

Cut out old canes in raspberry bushes when they are through bearing fruit. These canes will never bear fruit again.

Cloths saturated with polishing liquids if stored away in a closet often cause spontaneous combustion. Keep these cloths in a covered tin container.

Use the purest of cider vinegar for pickles and pickled preserves. Do not mix two different kinds of vinegar.

Oil or oily substances should never be used on waxed floors. They soften the wax, sink into wood and eventually darken it.

A pinch of baking soda added to the water in which a fowl is cooked will make it more tender.

"Spiritual Paralysis" will be the theme of Dr. Pearson's sermon at the morning service next Sunday. In the evening he will speak on the question, "Where Are The Dead?" These themes should be of interest to all.

The Sunday School hour is 9:45 a.m. The Baptist Training Union meets at 7:00 p.m.

The Quarterly Meeting of the W. M. U. of the Shelby County Baptist Association will be held at Vincent on Tuesday of next week, July 21.

The Shelby County Baptist Sunday School Convention will be held with the Antioch Church, near Columbiana on Friday of next week, July 24. All the Baptist Sunday Schools in the county are expected to send representatives.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The services in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday, July 19th, will be as usual.

At 9:45 a.m. the Church School will meet in the annex of the church, under the direction of Prof. W. J. Kennerly.

At 11:00 a.m. the Rev. Augustus J. Cox, Pastor, will conduct the worship service. The sermon title will be "Christ or What?" using St. John 6:67-68 as the text. This was certainly a critical time in Jesus's career and this fundamental question needed to be put to His Disciples. In these turbulent days, the Church needs to repeat the question and find an answer. Be assured of a most interesting service and come, worship with us.

State Capitol News

Protracted drought has destroyed 69 per cent of Alabama's food crops thus far with the northeastern counties suffering the worst blight, according to an intensive survey completed by F. W. Gist, expert agricultural statistician of the State Department of Agriculture and Industries.

Commenting on the actual length of continuous drought prior to July, the report showed that Anniston and Gadsden went 38 days without appreciable rain.

Mayor L. P. Burns, of Selma, president of the Alabama League of Municipalities, threatens to carry the gasoline tax test case to the U. S. Supreme court, acording to a statement credited to the Central City mayor last week.

The validity of the act has already been sustained by the state Supreme Court and a motion, it is understood, will be made for a rehearing. Should this be denied, appeal will be made to the U. S. Supreme Court, it was stated.

Prior to Oct. 1, 1935, the gasoline tax law did not apply to cities and counties which bought gasoline in interstate commerce, stored and withdrawn as needed. About a dozen of the 242 incorporated cities and towns evaded the tax this way, while the remaining 230 bought gasoline from local dealers, thus indirectly contirbuting to the general public road fund to the extent of six cents per a gallon.

These tax evading towns shared in the benefits derived from the expenditure of the gasoline tax money, while contributing nothing thereto.

All of the gasoline tax money, less a very low administrative cost, is used to build and maintain public roads and bridges. Part of it is to be used in freeing the 15 toll bridges when the plans for freeing them are completed.

Half of the gasoline tax money is expended under the direction of the County Boards of Revenue or like governing bodies. The other half is expended under direction of the State Highway Department, after setting aside funds necessary to retire highway bonds issued in 1927 for road construction.

Under the present law, all incorporated towns and cities are placed on a parity, along with the State Highway Department and all other state governmental agencies. Sponsors of this plan claim that it will, to a marked degree, eliminate "irregularities" and at the same time not work undue hardship upon any agency of the State or a political subdivision thereof,

Henry S. Long, chairman, of the State Tax Commission, was the honor guest of more than a score of tax commission officials and employees at a dinner at the Exchange Hotel last Monday night.

David E. Dunn, head of the tobacco tax division, presided as toastmaster, staging a unique stunt program.

Mr. Long had just returned from an absence of several weeks on a Carribean cruise. He stopped over at Gulf Shores enroute to Montgomery to confer with Gov. Bibb Graves.

Each county of the State received a check this week for $7,252.74 as its share of June gasoline tax collections, according to announcement by Henry S. Long, chairman of the State Tax Commission.

The collections were almost 12 per cent more than during the corresponding month last year, and 20 per cent more than for June, 1934.

On the basis of present receipts, each county is expected to receive more than $80,000 for the 12-months period, Long said.

Surrender here last Thursday of Col. Joseph H. Ward, negro regular army surgeon of Indianapolis, and former medical officer in charge of the Veterans Hospital for negroes at Tuskegee, revealed that he, with 13 others, had been indicted by the Federal grand jury here on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government through wholesale diversion of hospital supplies. He posted bond of $3,000 and was released.

Others indicted in the case were Willie Reid, Walter S. Burke, George Williams, Nellie Frazier, William and Geneva Bogan Peterson, Dr. H. O. Matthews, P. H. Roney, Esther Bullock, Amelia Gears, all of Tuskegee, and H. F. Mason, of Armstrong.

The hospital in which approximately 1,000 negro patients are treated is now operated under the name of Veterans Administration Facility.

Enrollment of 1,275 CCC boys from all sections of the State has just been completed. Dr. A. H. Collins, commissioner of the State Department of Public Welfare, has been advised that an additional quota of 225 Alabama enrollees may be selected at once from the Birmingham recruiting area.

Mayor Lucien P. Burns, of Selma, new president of the Alabama League of Municipalities has appointed standing committees to serve for one year, according to an announcement issued from League headquarters py Ed E. Reid, executive secretary.

City Attorney Boden W. Simmons of Opp, will head up the legislative committee. He succeeds Commissioner President George S. Vann, of Gadsden, who became vice president of the League at the elections at the recent state convention in Birminghom. Besides Simmons, the committee is composed of:

Commission President J. M. Jones, of Birmingham; Mayor Earle Williams, Linden; Mayor G. B. Edwards, Tuskegee; Commission President W. L. Baker, Talladega; Mayor A. B. Hooper, Albertivlle; Mayor N. B. Mason, Marion; Mayor James McDonald, Winfield, and Mayor James A. Neolson, Decatur.

BUY the New Firestone STANDARD TIRE and SAVE the Difference

Firestone
$6.95
4.40-21

HOW YOU SAVE MONEY—Firestone saves money by careful buying of high grade materials—manufacturing in large volume in the most efficient factories in the world—and delivering to you by the quickest and most economical distribution system. These savings are passed on to car owners.

FIRST LINE QUALITY—The new Firestone Standard Tire is a first quality tire, built of high grade materials, by skilled workmen, embodying Firestone patented construction features—used in no other tire.

THE FIRESTONE NAME AND GUARANTEE—Every Firestone Standard Tire bears the Firestone name, your guarantee of greater safety, dependability and economy.

GUM-DIPPED CORD BODY—Every cotton fibre in every cord in every ply is soaked in liquid rubber. This is the only process known that prevents internal friction and heat, providing greater strength, blowout protection and longer life.

TWO EXTRA LAYERS OF GUM-DIPPED CORDS UNDER THE TREAD—This patented Firestone feature binds the whole tire into one unit of greater strength, cushions road shocks, gives extra protection against punctures.

LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE—The new scientifically designed non-skid tread is wider, flatter, with more and tougher rubber on the road, giving long even wear and thousands of extra miles.

WE have painted up a "Scottie Car" simply to demonstrate the increased mileage of this new 1936 Ford V-8. It is not a "special" Ford car. It is a regular 1936 stock model Ford V-8 with distinctive exterior decoration and a glass gallon jug connected with a Zenith tester. No adjustments have been made to make it perform differently from any new stock car. The jug is added so that you can see a measured amount of gasoline used with your own eyes, instead of having it come from the tank at the rear.

Take a ride in a "Scottie Car." See for yourself that a Ford V-8 is just as economical on gasoline as smaller, less powerful cars. You can arrange it without cost or obligation by calling—YOUR FORD DEALER

Walker an' Bartell Have Own Opinions of Squawks, Hexes

IT IS long past midnight at the sign of the Toy Bulldog. The boys who have been cutting up old touches get around to the twin subjects of squawks and alibis. Since this is a prize fight crowd the debate is loud and long. Mickey Walker, who has been listening quietly, now grins and saunters over to the table.

"Maybe there's a time and place for everything," suggests the squat little man who used to ask nothing of giants save that they keep on swinging. "For instance, did I ever tell you about the time I fought Dundee?" He grins again at the memory of the night.

"Well, anyhow, Joe smacks me so hard over one eye that I lose the duke and have to go to the hospital.

Mickey Walker

"Naturally I'm weighing in with some man-sized beefing because it hurts plenty. All the while, too, I hear a guy on the next table sort of growling, but I don't figure he's got any cause to be sore at me and so I don't pay much attention to him. Instead I just lay there and every time the Doc purls one on the next row I let out another yelp.

"All of a sudden the guy on the next table bounces up so's they've got to stop operations on him. Then he starts shaking his fist in my face.

" 'Say you,' he says to me. 'You know what I'm in here for. Well somebody bounced a bottle off my conk and I've been stretched out here for almost an hour while they've been digging glassware outta my dandruff. That's what they've been doing. Here I was out for a bit of fun and wasn't harming nobody an——.' The guy leans over as if he's gonna take a belt outta me.

" '——an' you,' he says. 'Getting hit is your racket, ain't it. An' you got paid 10 G's for tonight, didn't you? Well, then, what right've you got to squawk?"

* * *

It is almost time for a doubleheader to start. Adolfo Luque stands in front of the Giants' dugout shaking an excited finger at Dick Bartell.

"You oughta done it," he says. "You—."

"Yeah," says the shortstop. "But I didn't have time. I was——."

"It makes no difference," the veteran coach abandons such feeble medium as a long finger and spreads both arms in eloquent gesture. "How we gonna win? How we——."

"Well, I got warmed up anyhow, didn't I?" Bartell's life is built on the theory that a good attack is the best defense.

Bartell

"You warm up! Hunh!" Luque sputters feebly with the English idiom for a moment, relieves himself with rippling Spanish phrases and then returns to the language by which he may be understood. "Three weeks you warm up with me, hey. Three weeks you get hits. You warm up with me today. No. Well, then how you expect to——." He shrugs his shoulders that speak volumes. Then sinks down on the bench overcome by the futility of it all. He becomes as silent as he had been loquacious.

Bartell is not a superstitious lad. He knows that a bat is of considerable more assistance than a rabbit's foot when you are up there cutting for base hits. So he grins at this notion.

The first game starts. Magicians pop up from nowhere to snare hard-hit line drives. The Giants lose that one. The second game starts. A sturdy little fellow continues to slap line drives that should be good for extra bases. They continue to be caught. The Giants lose that one.

When old man Luque comes down the clubhouse steps the next afternoon a blond little fellow is waiting there, ball and glove in hand.

"Hey, Adolf, catch," he calls.

That afternoon Dick Bartell gets his basehit and the Giants win.

ROWING people, who hate louder and longer even than fight managers, have topped the Hatfields and McCoys again. This time the feud is between the Cornell and Navy coaches . . . Incidentally, the National League again heads the baseball squabbling list with the Frankie Frisch-Umpire Babe Pinelli vendetta . . . Ralph Mondt, brother of the famous Toots, succeeds Rudy Dusek as matchmaker for Jack Curley's wrestlers. . . . Unless Andy Kerr does something about his guards, Colgate may have football trouble next fall . . . Mad John Leon, who goes in for statistics when not promoting fights or playing the Aqueduct end book, reports that Schmeling's right hand landed on Louis 57 times.

* * *

Lou Little still limps as the result of the illness that has troubled him for several seasons, but his physicians report he will be in top shape before Columbia takes to the gridiron in September . . . Sam Rosoff, the eminent contractor, makes more noise than any six fans at a prize fight . . . Gabby Hartnett, who usually hits better than any of them, is the only Cub who does not use a Billy Herman model bat . . . Mrs. Ken Smith, wife of the very good baseball writer, now is emoting for the Players' Guild of Manhattan. Rated numerous stars in the role of a murderess recently . . . Jimmy Walker will do the foreword to the book about Jim Braddock now being penned by Lud, the Hudson Dispatch sports ace.

* * *

Van Mungo is willing, but very few Dodgers pass the time of day with the moody fireballer. The boys just cannot forget his rude remarks during the recent one-man strike . . . Howard Braddock is having his tonsils removed—because he wants to grow up and be a heavyweight champion, too . . St. Louis' fairest flowers say that Joe Medwick is a swell singer and that you should hear him croon about "Minnie the Moocher" . . . Pete Reilly, who for the first time in numerous years is not managing the world's featherweight champion, still has some claim to fame. He held Joe Jacob's cigar during the fight . . . Does any one know why the State Amen Commission permits Pedro Montanez to go chasing welterweights when there are so many capable boys of his own size begging for a crack at his big gates?

Jim Braddock Is Pep Martin's Hero

Braddock

Jim Braddock is Pepper Martin's sports hero. An autographed picture of the heavyweight champion adorns the Iron Man's St. Louis locker . . . Matty Geis, Princeton track coach, tabs Lou Burns as the future star miler. Says the Manhattan sophomore will move up next year to succeed Bonthron, Cunningham, Venzke and Mangan, all of whom will hang up their shoes after the Berlin finale . . . Billy McCarney, the celebrated fight manager, changes to a different colored bow tie three times a day . . . Casey Stengel slapped the first home run ever achieved at Ebbets Field. That was during an exhibition game with the Yankees, who had Hal Chase at second base and Frank Chance at first, in the spring of 1913.

If you wish to believe the rumormongers, the Dodgers have been sold to Cap Huston for delivery in the fall . . . Also a local group of celebrated citizens are determined to form a stock company and purchase the Giants . . . Those fight weighing-in pictures you see so often in the papers are never the McCoy. That is because the boys must doff their panties for the real scales test.

Cornell will beat several good football teams this fall, but the Big Red eleven will not be quite as nifty as the experts have been suggesting. The athletes are very young and will need a season or two to become accustomed to the big-time grind . . . The Giants have the smallest representation of any major league club in the Association of Professional Ballplayers, the organization which provides for unfortunate old-timers. Yet the dues are only $10 a year.

Ed Kelleher, who did a very good basketball coaching job at Fordham, now is being touted to succeed Buck Freeman at St. John's, where he was head man 15 years ago . . . Joe Reddy, who won the quarter at the first rejuvenation of the Olympic Games at Paris in 1892, returned to Princeton this spring for the forty-fifth reunion of his class. He was one of the men who had an audience with the King of Greece, which resulted in the first official renewal of the Games at Athens in 1892.

Frankie Frisch holds the shortest clubhouse meetings of any manager. They usually last just one-half minute flat—or just long enough for Frankie to yelp, "Go out and beat those bums" . . . The Junie Freys have ordered a small Frey . . . Mike Jacobs did the best of his many good jobs in handling the crowd at the Stadium the other night.

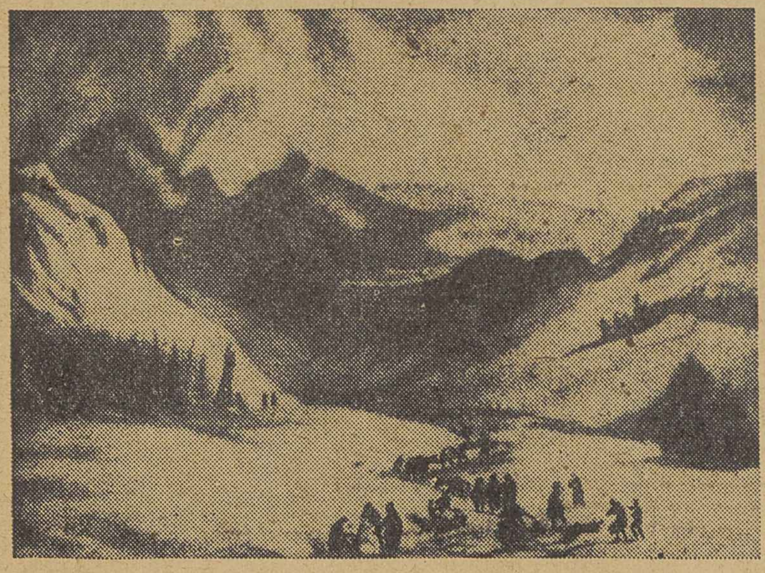
Old Bill Williams, Master Trapper

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ALTHOUGH Jedediah Strong Smith is commonly regarded as the best claimant to the title of "American Ulysses," there was once another who, in many respects, was a better prototype of the legendary Greek hero. "Red-Headed Shooter" the Osages named him. "Parson Williams" he became when, as a youth of seventeen, he left his home in Missouri to ride the circuit as a Baptist preacher, threatening hell-fire and brimstone to the unrepentant. "Old Solitaire" his fellow trappers called him. But frontier history has written him down as "Old Bill Williams," one of the most picturesque figures that ever galloped across the stage of the Great West in an era when strong individuality and picturesqueness were the rule rather than the exception.

Along with history, legend has also marked him for its own, as witness a quotation from a book published recently by the University of North Carolina Press. It is "Old Bill Williams, Mountain Man," written by Alpheus H. Favour, who says:

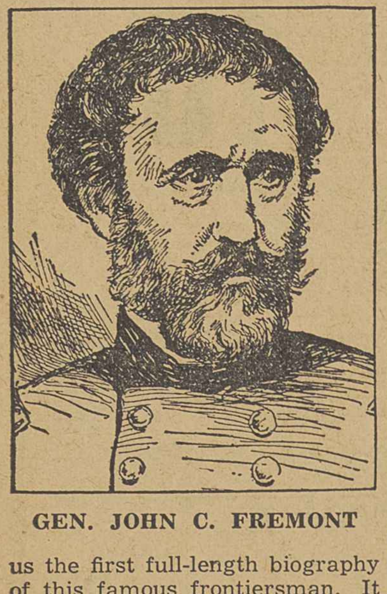
"Fiction and fact have been so mixed in the fragmentary account we have of the life of Bill Williams on the plains and in the western mountains that, although he stands out in most of them as a prominent mountain man and master trapper, in many ways he has come to be regarded as a legendary character. Certain of his characteristics are always emphasized in the records of his doings: his early calling as an itinerant preacher in Missouri; his efforts as a missionary among the Osages; his eccentric habits; his drinking of quantities of strong liquor; his ability to speak many different Indian tongues; and finally his capability as a hunter and his peculiar method of Indian fighting.



FREMONT'S PARTY SNOW-BOUND IN THE SAN JUAN MOUNTAINS

"Search the records as you may, Old Bill Williams never seems to have had any youth, for he is usually referred to as a trapper who had been many years in the West. A number of different versions of his death have been given, ranging from a ceremonial execution as a medicine man of the Utes in the Southwest to a violent death at the hands of the Blackfeet in the Northwest. The stories told of Williams are more varied than those of any other man of his time, and leave the casual reader in uncertainty as to the real man, or in doubt, indeed, if there ever did exist such a character outside of fiction."

However, Mr. Favour's researches into the available source material has set at rest any such doubts and has given us the first full-length biography of this famous frontiersman. It traces his career from his birth on January 3, 1787, on Horse creek in Rutherford county, North Carolina, to his death at the hands of the Utes on the Upper Rio Grande in southern Colorado on March 14, 1849, and reports in as much detail as can possibily be done the Odyssey of Old Bill Williams.



GEN. JOHN C. FREMONT

Interesting as an individual, William Sherley Williams—such was Old Bill's full name—is more important as a type, as a symbol of an era in American history, the like of which can never be duplicated. For, says his biographer:

> His life coincides with and touches upon many phases of our national growth from the time of the Revolutionary war to the end of the westward expansion. His parents lived in a part of the country where doubt and misunderstanding of the leaders of our country had become the common attitude of the people toward the government. His kinfolk were among the Regulators of North Carolina, and his father, although a Revolutionary soldier with years of service, emigrated into what was then a foreign land.
>
> Born in the early days of the American republic, he lived under Spanish authority as a boy, and started his own career at the time Jefferson, Livingston and Monroe effected the Louisiana Purchase. In manhood he became a part of the life of the plains and mountains. He saw the Indians pushed back, the New Mexicans dispossessed, and California taken—all in one lifetime. . . .
>
> As we follow him through life we find him a member of an average early American family, then a trapper and hunter, finally emerging into one of the most noted of the mountain men. Likewise we can follow in his career the changes and developments of the West from a wilderness of the Louisiana Purchase of 1803 into a compact section of our country at the time of his death.

The wanderings of this American Ulysses becomes more understandable when we consider his ancestry. He came of a line of Welshmen, restless and independent, who migrated to Virginia, then moved to South Carolina and, failing to find the prosperity hoped for there, crossed the mountains to the western part of North Carolina. When William Sherley was seven years old the urge to move struck his father again and the Williams family started west — through Tennessee, Kentucky, southern Illinois, finally arriving in the Spanish country west of the Mississippi and settling in a village of less than 1,000 inhabitants called St. Louis. There on September 23, 1795, another son, John W., was born to Joseph and Sarah Williams—the first American white child born in that city.

Even at that early period St. Louis was the center of the fur trade and young Williams saw "French voyageurs with their keel boats and barges going up and down the river, within sight of the Williams home. The coureurs de bois traveled over the old Trace past the Williams cabin, going into the trapping country and returning to St. Louis laden with their packs of furs. All this became part of young Bill Williams' life. He grew up, from his first remembrance in the atmosphere of that trade."

He also grew up in a religious atmosphere, for Sarah Williams was a recognized authority on the Bible among the American settlers. Although restrictions were placed upon freedom of religion by the Spanish rulers of the country, they were removed when the Upper Province of Louisiana, including St. Louis, passed from the control of Spain to France and immediately to the United States in 1804. A religious revival, then sweeping across the Middle West, helped foster more interest in spiritual matters. So it was not so unusual that young Bill Williams, with his religious training and his gift for speech (he is described at the time as "a ready talker, witty and quick at repartee") should begin to preach. Within a short time he was riding a regular circuit and Williams once said of himself that he was so well known that even the chickens at the farms which he visited knew him and would exclaim: "Here comes Parson Williams! One of us must be ready for dinner."

After five years, however, Williams gave up his circuit riding and settled among his boyhood friends, the Osage Indians, as a missionary.

For the next 15 years he lived among the Indians. He married a girl of the Big Hill band of the Osages and she bore him two daughters. During these 15 years he became a changed man.

When the United States government established the "factory" system of trading with the Indians, the first trading post west of the Mississippi was located at Belle Fontaine. It was succeeded by one at Arrow Rock and in 1808 Fort Osage was established east of the present town of Independence, Mo. Williams first began serving the government as a messenger between these trading posts and St. Louis. In 1817 he was employed as interpreter at Fort Osage and four years later he was made official interpreter at the factory at Marais des Cygnes.

After this service there is a hiatus in Williams' life for which his biographer cannot account satisfactorily. This is a tantalizing fact because, as he says, these years, between 1825 and 1841, "were the years he made a reputation for himself, the years in which his exploits made him famous as a mountain man. Much has been written about his doings; some of it is authentic, much is fiction.

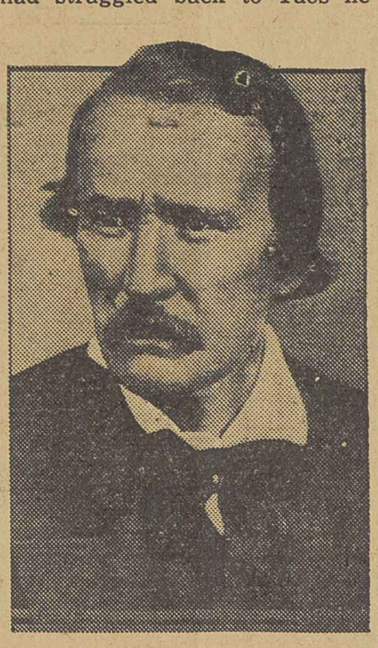
Like the others of that restless breed of mountain men during these 16 years he wandered through all parts of the Great West, trapping along the headwaters of its rivers, stealing horses from the Californians and Mexicans, trading with the various Indian tribes, living with them, fighting against them, coming to know every mountain range with its passes and its canons, every river and every trail.

When the fur trade era ended "Bill Williams, Master Trapper," as he signed himself, had to look around for new fields of adventure. He found them in the role of guide for the military and exploring expeditions which began to penetrate the West in the forties. In 1845 Williams served for a time with the third exploring expedition of Capt. John C. Fremont, marked for future fame as "The Pathfinder" even though he deserved that title much less than did some of the mountain men who guided him, notably Kit Carson.

In the early summer of 1848 Old Bill served as a scout with the Missouri Volunteers against the hostile Apaches and Utes and was the hero of the Battle of Cumbres Pass. Although he was "shot in the arm, shattering it most horribly, he managed to use it so as to keep his rifle hot during the engagement" and won from the commander of the troops, in his report of the battle, this accolade: "Williams, a celebrated mountaineer, though wounded badly, behaved himself gallantly in the engagement."

Williams went back to Taos to recover from his wounds and late that fall went up to Pueblo, Colo., to spend the winter there with some old comrades. To Pueblo in November came Fremont on his fourth expedition and although all the mountain men advised the army officer against trying to cross the snow-filled passes in the winter, Fremont prevailed upon Williams to undertake the job of guiding. "Little did he expect that in a few short weeks he was to become a principal in one of the greatest disasters in exploration that ever befell any guide engaged during the history of the Rockies—a disaster which was to be the contributing cause of his death, where his ability as a scout and guide would be brought into controversy, and in the final chapter, result in the perpetuation of his name in Arizona by the naming of a river and a mountain for him."

But that is exactly what happened. For Williams almost froze to death, almost starved to death and after Fremont and the remnants of his expedition had straggled back to Taos he accused Williams of stupidity, treachery, even cannibalism. These charges, according to Favour, grew partly out of Fremont's desire to shift responsibility for the failure of the expedition with its loss of life from his own shoulders to some convenient scapegoat and partly, several years later, out of the necessity of grooming a tarnished hero for a Presidential candidacy. Old Bill didn't live to defend himself but other members of the Fremont expedition came to the support of the mountain man to clear his reputation and historians of today, including Old Bill's biographer, have accepted their verdict rather than that of Fremont.



KIT CARSON

Two months after Williams reached Taos he started out, accompanied by Dr. B. J. Kern, who had been the physician with Fremont's expedition, and a few Mexicans, to regain the instruments and baggage which the expedition had been forced to leave behind during the retreat from the mountains. On March 14, 1849, their camp was attacked by a party of Utes and both Kern and Williams were killed at the first fire. Afterwards when the Indians discovered whom they had killed, they gave the old trapper a chief's burial.

His grave is unmarked but he has an enduring monument. Down in Arizona there is a "beautiful green, wooded mountain, a towering solitary peak above the foothills at its base, characteristic of Bill Williams —Old Solitaire—and not far distant is the mountain stream, quiet and peaceful, or, after a storm, a rushing torrent, emblematic of the human career, whose life as a mountain man helped to save the plains and mountains of the Louisiana Purchase to this country." Both that mountain peak and that stream bear the name of Bill Williams.

Contour Furrows Control Erosion

Level Base Does Not Allow Water to Wash Down the Hillside.

By W. G. KINCANNON, Soil Conservationist, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Contour furrowing to control erosion is highly recommended by specialists of the soil conservation service and the North Carolina State college agricultural extension service.

When the plow is run along the contours of the land, the furrows are level and will aid greatly in checking the run-off of rain water.

A furrow with a level base does not allow the water to wash down the hillside, but holds and distributes it regularly over the field. The water is given a chance to soak into the ground.

Contour furrowing is especially recommended for pastures or fields where erosion has reached serious proportions.

If the land is badly cut up with gullies, the furrows should be closed at the edges of the gullies. But if the field has only shallow depressions, the furrows may extend across them, provided the furrows are curved so as to keep their bases on a level.

By taking the water out of gullies, farmers can give grass and other erosion-resisting crops a chance to grow. As time goes on, the land will again become tillable. It will also produce valuable pasturage.

In erosion-control demonstration areas, contour furrowing has proved to be an effective method of stopping soil-washing and conserving moisture.

Profit in Woodland if Only Big Trees Are Cut

There is a great deal more profit in lumber from farm woodlands when only the large, mature trees are cut and the small trees left to grow into another crop. The United States Forest Service has found that maple trees less than 12 to 14 inches in diameter actually do not pay their way through a band sawmill.

There is about 19 times as much lumber in a tree 26 inches in diameter as in a 9-inch tree. But since the lumber in the larger tree is worth about twice as much per foot, the total value is 36 times as great.

Selective cutting removes the greatest value with the least volume. It leaves small trees as a windbreak and allows them to grow faster because they no longer need to compete with big trees for moisture, sunlight, and space to spread their crowns. A farmer in doubt as to how to cut his woodland for lumber is advised to get in touch with a state forester, his state college of agriculture, or his county agricultural agent.

Feeding Grain Mixture

The amount of grain mixture fed to cows when on pasture depends, to a great extent, upon the individual production, but where a cow is producing more than 7 pounds of milk a day, one pound of grain for each five to seven pounds of milk produced will be sufficient, according to an authority at the North Carolina State college. This amount, in addition to the pasturage will usually maintain the animal in good flesh and permit maximum milk production. An average cow eats enough grass in a day to maintain her body and produce about two gallons of milk. If she is capable of producing more milk, the grass must be supplemented with the grain mixture in such quantity as to secure the maximum production.

Feed for Idle Mares

Mares not required to work should stay in good condition if plenty of good roughage and occasionally a little grain are given them, says an authority. Wheat bran is one of the best additions to any kind of a ration for a heavy mare in foal because it is laxative, not too heavy, and yet nutritious. For mares at work, a ration of two parts good oats, two parts corn, and one part wheat bran, fed with timothy hay or a mixture of timothy and a little clover or alfalfa, is satisfactory. For mares doing ordinary work, one to one and a quarter pounds grain, and one to one and one-half pounds of hay should keep them in good condition.

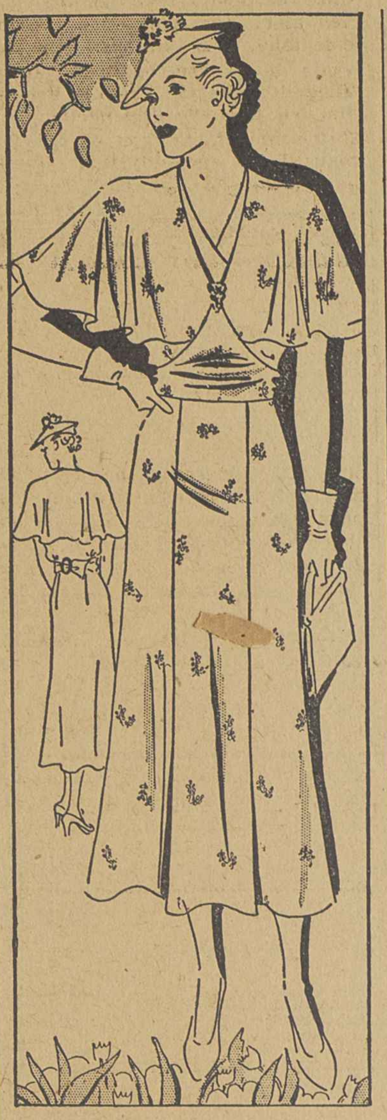
Matron's Dress with Vestee



Pattern No. 1907-B

This dress designed with soft capelet sleeves and a contrasting vestee is one of those perennial styles. It is always a pleasure to show by popular request. They're so universally becoming to larger and more mature women, and so adaptable to conventional occasions.

The model shown is a clever street frock which takes into consideration the fitting problem encountered by many women whose tastes incline toward conservative rather than complicated dressmaking. The lines are studied to give slenderness without sacrificing a trim and neat appearance, exemplified in the beautiful pointed up bodice, expecially graceful and smart. Sheer cotton, prints and chiffons are delightful for town or country.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1907-B is available for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Precaution Urged By Health Officer

FOUR SUGGESTIONS MADE FOR GUIDANCE OF THE PUBLIC

In view of the development of two cases of infantile paralysis in Shelby County, Dr. H. C. Nickson, County Health Officer, announced Tuesday that the County Board of Health has requested the observance of the following precautionary measures against the spread of the disease:

1. All picture shows in the county are requested to refuse admission to persons under 15 years of age.
2. Parents are requested to keep children under 15 years of age from attending church, Sunday school, or any gathering of any kind.
3. Everybody, both young and old, are urged to take the nasal spray as a preventive.
4. It is recommended that everybody remain at home (in the immediate vicinity) as nearly so as possible, until danger of spread of the disease is past.

Dr. Nickson stated that the nasal spray is being administered by all doctors in the county, and he insists upon the importance of everybody taking the same.

After the order of Dr. Nickson was issued, an interview with Mr. Eddie Watson, manager of the Strand Theatre, revealed that the management of the Strand will cheerfully co-operate with the County Board of Health in carrying out its restrictions, and has posted notice at the box office that no persons under 15 years of age will be permitted to buy tickets to the shows until the ban is lifted by the health authorities.

C. M. T. C. Called Off Due To Polio

The Citizens' Military Training Camp which was scheduled to be held at Fort McClellan, Alabama, commencing July 29th, has been cancelled due to the infantile paralysis epidemic which is prevalent in some sections of Alabama.

The Commanding Officer of the 4th C. M. T. Camp Area at Fort McClellan, Alabama desires to call this fact to the attention of all accepted applicants, alternates, and other young men who have been interested in applying to attend the camp. He has also announced, as a protective measue, that no Alabama young man presiding in his camp area will be accepted for any Citizen's Military Training Camp that may be held at other Army posts in this vicinity, this summer.

W. H. ALEXANDER APPOINTED WATKINS DEALER

Mr. W. H. Alexander, of Calera Route 1, Valley Grove community, has made a contract with The J. R. Watkins Company to distribute the well known Watkins Line of Spices, Extracts, Food Products, Medicines, and Stock Remedies in Shelby County. He will cover his territory in car on a regular schedule about every four or five weeks.

The Watkins Company is a large, national organization which has been in business since 1868. It has large manufacturing and distributing branches at Winona, Minnesota, Newark, Memphis, Columbus, Kansas City, Chicago, Milwaukee Denver, Los Angeles, Oakland and other points. There is a sales force of over 9,000 dealers serving farm and city communities in every state in the Union.

Receipts From 1935 Seal Sale

Total receipts of the 1935 tuberculosis seal sale for Shelby county amounted to $170.04.

Of this amount, Columbiana sale proceeds were $34.75, Montevallo $49.05, and Alabama College $86.24.

There were 233 individual responses.

The expense of the campaign amounted to $20.53 for supplies and postage.

A percentage, twenty-four per cent, was sent to the Alabama Tuberculosis Association for state and national maintenance.

One request from the County Health Nurse for sputum cups and holders has been received and same supplied.

It has been the policy of those in charge of Shelby County seal sale to cooperate with the County Health Department in spending of the funds derived from this sale.

The program as recommended by the National organization for spending such funds are listed below:

1. Health education. 2. Nursing. 3. Clinics. 4 Institutions. 5. Legislation . 6. After-care and rehabilitation of patients through vocational training, etc. 7. Relief. The latter only in extreme emergencies.—Marie S. Appleton, Treasurer, Shelby County Tuberculois Seal Fund.

School Funds Are Analyzed

Montgomery, July 22.—Nine suggested sources of public school revenue were analyzed by Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, in a state-wide radio hookup here this afternoon.

While giving estimates, advantages, and objections to each revenue suggestion, Mrs. Hill declared the P.-T. A. is neither supporting nor opposing any revenue measure. It is asking responsible citizens to study the possibilities and make recommendations to their legislators.

Mrs. Hill said that suggested economy measures, if adopted, might save $400,000, while possible transfers of the burden from the General Fund to other departments or to the counties might save another $400,000. It might also be possible next year to divert seven or eight hundred thousands of income tax money to education.

Sources of new revenue mentioned and their estimated yields were: liquor, $2,000,000; personal property tax, $2,000,000; bottled drinks $1,500,000; increase in local school tax, $2,200,000; sales tax, $3,000,000 for each one per cent of levy; and utility taxes, $750,000. Since these total nineteen millions and education needs only $4,000,000, there is much room to choose.

Mrs. Hill pointed out that every one of these taxes, if levied, would have to be paid by the great mass of Alabama citizens. The money education must have amounts to only $1.43 for each person in Alabama.

Cream Standards Are Established

Montgomery, Ala.—Regulations establishing grades for cream sold in Alabama for the manufacture of butter were passed by the State Board of Agriculture in quarterly meeting here Friday. The grades, to become effective January next year, follows:

(a) "Sweet Cream" shall consist of fresh, clean cream of good taste and odor, and the acidity shall not exceed 1-2 of one per cent; calculated as lactic acid.

(b) "Grade One Sour Cream" consist of cream that is clean and free from objectionable odors and flavors, and that has at the time and place of purchase an acidity not exceeding .8 of one per cent, calculated as lactic acid. All grade one sour cream shall be delivered to the purchaser within four days, and shall be delivered to the butter manufacturing plant within-twenty-four hours after purchased, unless suitable facilities are maintained for holding this cream at 50 Farenheit or below.

(c) "Grade Two Sour Cream" shall consist of cream that has objectionable flavor or odors, or that is too acid (or sour) to grade as grade one sour cream.

(d) "Unlawful Cream" shall consist of cream that contains dirt, filth or other foreign matter which renders it unfit for human consumption, and that is stale, cheesy, rancid, putrid, decomposed or actively foaming.

"All places where cream is received for purchase or resale shall be so arranged that the premises and utensils can be kept clean at all times and the cream be protected against contamination" said another resolution.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The services in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday, July 26th, will be as usual.

At 9:45 a.m. the Church School will meet in the annex of the church, under the able leadership of Prof. W. J. Kennerly.

At 11:00 a.m. the Rev. Augustus J. Cox, pastor, will conduct the worship service. The sermon topic will be "Jesus and the Church". In cooperation with the health authorities and to prevent the spread of paralysis, everyone, except children under 15 pears of age, are invited and urged to attend this service. A very codial welcome awaits you.

Dr. Vaughan Names Civic Club Chairmen

At the last meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club, the new president, Dr. H. W. Vaughan, outlined a proposed organization for activity of the club for the next six months that is fully comprehensive of the opportunities of the Club to render a constructive and worth-while service to the community.

After he had presented the outline of the proposals as recommended by a prior meeting of the Board of Control the club voted to accept and adopt the recommendations in full. Dr. Vaughan announced the appointment of chairmen of the various committees that are to form the new set-up for the club.

The committees so announced, and the chairman of each, was as follows:

Program and Publicity, W. M. Wyatt, chairman; Membership and Attendance, Luther E. Shaw, chairman; Hospitality, J. Alex Moore, chairman; Roads, Dr. T. H. Napier, chairman; Commercial Development, R. A. Reid, chairman; Town Building. Dr, J. I. Reid, chairman.

The president stated that he would hold conferences with each of the chairmen, and after studying with them the fields of activity for each committee, he will announce the other members of each group.

Dr. Riddle Going To North Carolina

Dr. J. I. Riddle, of the Alabama College faculty, will go to Ridgecrest, North Carolina, next week to attend the Southern Baptist Sunday School Assembly. He will deliver lectures in Religious Education and will conduct classes in demonstration Bible teaching. The assembly will be attended by Sunday school leaders of the entire South. This will be the third year Dr. Riddle has appeared on the program.

Mr. Thomas Park of New York City, who is spending his vacation in Alabama, visited his friends, Mr. J. R. Simpson and Mrs. Simpson.

Mr. Park is in the real estate business and is employed by Vincent Astor. Accompaning him to Montevallo were Mr. Simpson's mother and Miss Allyene Holmes of Talladega. Friday evening a buffet supper was served by the hostess and her mother, Mrs. F. W. Rogan.

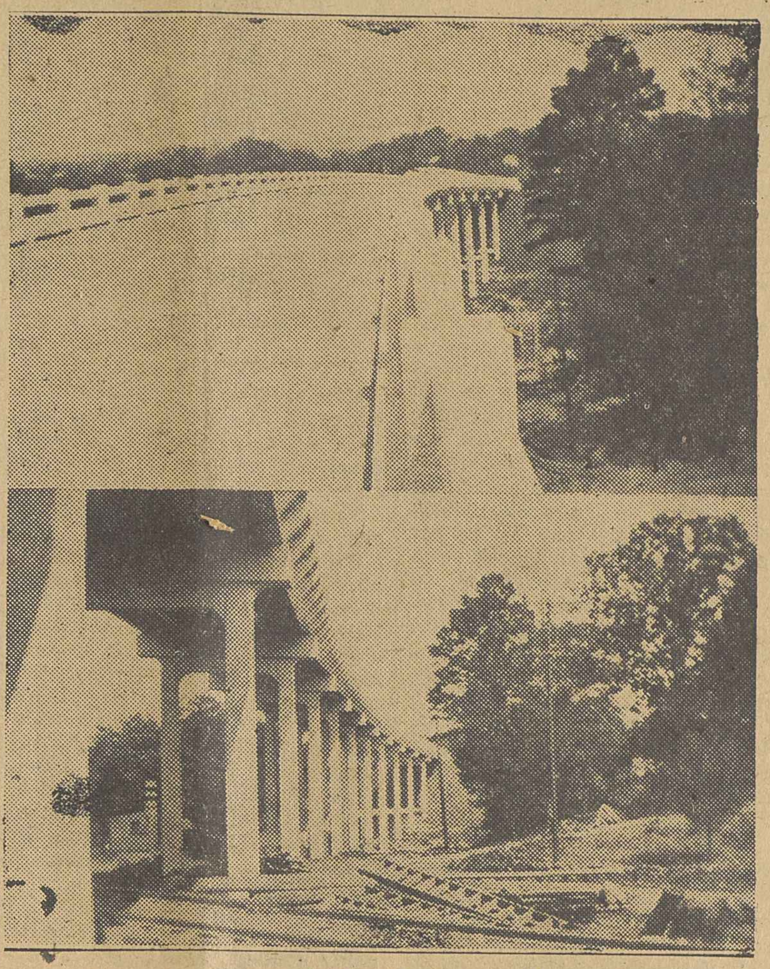
Our New Gateway



Through courtesy of The Birmingham News, we are permitted to present to our readers the above views of the new bridge at Montevallo, recently completed under the Works Progress Administration. The pictures were made by Mr. Jack Burleson, resident engineer of the State Highway Department, on the job.

Montevallo's New $87,000 Bridge Will Be Open In A Few Days

A new, beautiful and impressive entrance to Montevallo is provided over the new bridge across Shoal Creek and the Southern Railway tracks. When opened to traffic about the first of August this bridge will form a very important part of the newly paved highway connecting Montevallo with the Birmingham - Montgomery Highway at Calera.

The new bridge pictured above bears the distinction of being the first project begun in the United States under the Works Program Grade Separation plan.

The contract for its erection was awarded August 26, 1935, to the C. G. Kershaw Contracting Company, of Birmingham. It was completed May 28, 1936. The fill approaches to the structure were built by Wade & Company, of Prattville.

Mr. R. F. Malcolm was general superintendent of construction.

Mr. Jack Burleson, resident engineer of the State Highway Department on the project, furnishes us the following very interesting facts and figures relative to the construction work:

Man-hours of work used in building the bridge was 80,815. Total spent for labor, $36,021.87. Materials used, 1,845 barrels of cement; 945 cubic yards of slag; 704 cubic yards of sand; 390,000 pounds of structural steel; 187,059 pounds of reinforcing steel; 150,253 feet of lumber for concrete forms. Total spent for materials, $30,954,71.

Six hundred and fifty cubic yards of rock and dirt were moved for the foundations. Thirty - seven thousand cubic yards of dirt were used in building the fill approaches.

Length of the bridge is 620 feet. It clears the Southern Railway tracks at a height of 22 feet, while it is 52 feet clear in height above the waters of Shoal Creek.

Barbara Stanwyck and Fine Cast Frolic in "The Bride Walks Out"

Lovely Barbara Stanwyck makes her latest screen appearance at the Strand Sunday and Monday in "The Bride Walks Out," a racy, fast-moving, smart comedy, surrounded by one of the more auspicious supporting casts to be seen in a feature this season. Veritably, the cream of talent in the respective branches of histrionics is represented in "The Bride Walks Out."

Miss Stanwyck appears as a young bride whose proud young husband insists that she give up her job as a model, at which she makes more money than he does as a $35 per week suveyor.

Gene Raymond takes the part of the husband. He not only has trouble convincing his bride that she should become a housewife, but a gay young wag with lots of money in the person of Robert Young becomes an annoying pal of the couple.

Ned Sparks, who plays the part of Raymond's co-worker, finds his match as a "dead-pan" in Helen Broderick, seen as his wife. This team of players is one of the funniest yet brought to the screen.

The locale of "The Bride Walks Out" is New York, but more than thirty different settings were used in filming the picture. Some of the scenes show New York streets; a fashionable dress shop, with beautiful girls modeling the latest creations of Bernard Newman, noted fashion designer; a Coney Island boat; various city hall offices; the interior of a jail; a gay night club on New Year's Eve; several apartment interiors, and a magnificent Long Island estate and a steamer pier .

Miss Stanwyck and Miss Broderick appear in attractive new styles, reflecting Newman's latest ideas for milady's summer attire.

Miss Stanwyck's vibrant personality and dramatic ability dovetail into the gay and breezy stellar role in "The Bride Walks Out," the first of its kind which she has ever played on the screen. As the gorgeous creature accustomed to the finer things in life who is talked into the job of kitchen mechanic by a glib-tongued husband, the Titian-haired beauty displays a pleasant flair for sophisticated comedy.

No Trade Day Prizes Given Next Saturday

On account of the request of the public health authorities that people refrain from attending large gatherings, in order to curb the spread of infantile paralysis, the Trade Day Committee of the merchants of Montevallo announce that there will be no drawing held next Saturday.

They urge all who trade in Montevallo to continue to get tickets from your merchants and hold them for the next big event day, the time of which will be announced after the ban on gatherings is lifted by the health authorities.

Second Session of Summer School

ENROLLMENT IS LARGEST RECORDED IN MANY YEARS

The second term of summer school at Alabama College began July 23. The first term of six weeks closed the preceding day when final examinations were held.

The Progressive Education Demonstration School, held on both elementary and high school levels, was also concluded July 22, coinciding with the first term of the summer school. This special feature has proved of interest throughout the South, drawing students, teachers and visitors from a number of states.

The summer school enrollment to date is the largest in several years at the college and it is promising for the second term, consisting of five weeks, which will continue until August 26. Each of the terms is a separate unit on which credit may be secured.

The summer school, which has been held annually on the campus since 1916, seeks among its service to meet the needs of those wishing to obtain, renew or extend certificates; those wishing credit toward degrees; of public school teachers wishing to study progressive methods of teaching; those desiring special work in home economics, music, art, speech, physical education, social service and other special fields; those wishing thorough courses in public school music or to prepare for the State examination in piano or public school music; those wishing general physical education courses preparatory to teaching that subject or to coaching athletics; those interested in violin, piano and organ.

$15,000,000 Spent On Schools

Montgomery, July 20.—For the school year of 1934-35, Alabama spent $15,000,000 on her elementary and high schools. During that same year Alabama citizens spent $17,000,000 on tobacco, as shown by tobacco tax receipts for the fiscal year of 1934-35.

More than one million spent on schools in 1934-35 came from the federal government, so Alabama tax payers really contributed less than $14,000,000.

Ability of a state to finance its public schools can be determined by expenditures for other purposes, and by the effort made in comparison to other states. Alabama citizens spent 2.76 per cent of their income on schools and 6.64 per cent on local and state taxes. The national average is 3.64 per cent for schools and 8.72 per cent in local and state taxes.

Mr. J. B. Gallagher has returned home after visiting in Andalusia, Alabama and Florida.

Health Authorities Advise Spraying

GET SPRAYED. DON'T MIGRATE. DON'T CONGREGATE IS ORDER

Dr. Charles T. Acker, chairman of the Shelby County Board of Censors (medical), and city health officer of Montevallo, was interviewed by The Times Tuesday, concerning activities of the health authorities in efforts to prevent further spread of the infantile paralysis epidemic.

The following statement was given by Dr. Acker:

"The health authorities request that not only children, but all grown people as well, have their noses sprayed without delay. In order that it be done properly, and not overdone, it is urged that people go to their physician for treatment.

"The doctors have no desire to capitalize on this emergency. They only want to see the treatment administered correctly, so that it may afford as much protection possible to the public.

"We have two cases of infantile paralysis close to Montevallo, and further delay in securing preventive-treatment by everybody is an unnecessary risk.

"The nasal spray is all the protection we have against this terrible malady. After one contracts the disease, there is nothing that can be done about it, other than to try to avoid the paralysis that finally follows.

"The management of the Strand Theatre has announced that admission to the picture shows will be refused to all persons under fifteen years of age. The healtr authorities urge that all people refrain from engaging in any gatherings or group meetings of any kind until danger of the spread of infantile paralysis is over."

Dogwood News

Miss Mamie Yeager of Marvel spent a few days last week with Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Yeager.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Freeman of Selma and Mr. and Mrs. Freeman of Randolph were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Harrison, Sunday.

Mrs. B. F. Carr and sons, Carson and Nick, and daughter, Martha, are visiting in Childersburg.

Mr. Cecil Vernon has returned to Mt. Berry, Ga., after a weeks visit with his parents here.

Miss Elizabeth Harrison of Montevallo was the week end guest of Miss Gladys Harrison.

Miss Annie Jewel Powers of Pleasant Hill is the guest of Miss Reba Carr this week.

Mr. Paschal Underwood and Mr. Chetz Blake left last week for West Virginia.

Mr. Ed Harrison has returned to Mt. Berry School, Mt. Berry, Ga.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Butler visited in Elliottsville Sunday.

Baptist Church

At the Sunday morning worship hour the pastor's theme will be "The Continued Work of Jesus." Dr. Pearson will leave Sunday afternoon for a series of meetings at Deatsville, Alabama, and there will be no evening service. Sunday school will be held at 9:45 a.m.

Next Sunday is the last Sunday in our associational year. Let everyone do his best to pay up all pledges to the church and to denominational work by the end of this month.

The Missionary Society will meet at the church at 4:00 p.m. Monday. All the women of the church are urged to come.

The Sunbeams will meet with Mrs. Doris Jeter at 4:00 p.m. Monday. All mothers are urged to send their children of Sunbeam age (4-9) to this meeting.

Home Demonstration Club Met Friday

The Home Demonstration Club of Shelby met at the club-room on Friday, July 10th, for their regular all-day meeting. Each member carried lunch and work to do. Miss Nolen came at the noon hour for lunch with the club. After an enjoyable hour we spent we went to the home of Mrs. W. H. Brymer, where we enjoyed a canning demonstration, using the pressure cooker in canning carrots, okra, and squash. The cooker was signed for by the members and it was left with the club for community canning.

Miss Nolen gave a very impressive talk on the vital need of preserving all food available and in planting fall gardens, if possible, to meet the demands for food for the winter. This being important, due to the shortage of food caused by the drouth.

Plans were made to attend the club rally day in Columbiana on Wednesday, July 15th. There were 13 members present.—Reporter.

Crop Damage From Drouth Mounts—Assassin Tries to Kill Edward VIII—Townsend and Coughlin Form Alliance.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

THE nation's drouth worries continued unabated after scattered showers in widely separated areas of the Midwest and the Northwest failed to eliminate the heat. Regions bordering the Great Lakes enjoyed cool breezes brought by a high pressure area from Hudson Bay.

Dr. Tugwell

But the meager rainfall in the drouth-stricken belt did little toward bringing relief and crop deterioration continued on a vast scale throughout the parched states.

Loss of life throughout the United States from the unprecedented heat wave exceeded 3,850, an all-time high.

Agronomists in Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio expressed apprehension over the outlook for the corn crop unless general rains should develop rapidly.

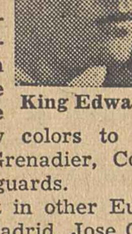
In principal cities the price of milk was advanced one cent a quart as the result of drouth conditions. Prices of meat, however, dropped with the influx to market of drouth cattle. The possibility of an upward trend later on was seen, however.

Completing a tour of the drouth areas, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace declared the nation need have no fears of a food shortage, and assailed those "who have tried for their own purposes to scare the consumers about food scarcity." He added: "There is no excuse for substantial increases in food prices now."

Arriving at Bismarck, North Dakota, to help co-ordinate drouth relief enterprises, Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, was informed that approximately 60,000 farm families in the state were among the needy. A conference of state and federal officials in Bismarck developed a three-fold plan for the relief of dwellers in the desolated areas of the Dakotas, western Minnesota, eastern Montana and Wyoming. These included:

Immediate advancement of money to needy families, repayable out of WPA earnings; granting of funds to farmers desiring to keep small livestock herds for the purchase of feed and subsistence to be repaid by work on WPA projects; loans and grants to owners of large scale cattle enterprises to cover the cost of shipping animals to other states for feeding.

THE attempted assassination of King Edward VIII of England in London brought great alarm to the English speaking world. The attempt was made near Hyde Park and the monarch's life was saved by a woman bystander who grappled with the would-be assassin and wrested a pistol from him.



King Edward

The king was returning to Buckingham palace from Hyde Park, where on horseback he had presented new colors to six battalions of the Grenadier, Coldstream and Scots guards.

There was unrest in other European capitals. In Madrid, Jose Calvo Sotello, one of Spain's most powerful monarchist leaders, was kidnaped and murdered. Precautions were taken to guard other political figures, lest the assassination open a new period of disorder between the leftists and rightists. The crisis was heightened by the threat of the Socialists to establish a dictator.

In Paris, the celebration of France's national holiday, Bastille day, saw the Champs Elysees a scene of rioting with rightists and leftists in combat with each other and the police. The disorders began when leftists were returning from their own parade in the eastern section of the city. Seeing red flags borne in the procession, the rightists greeted their opponents with cries of "Soviets everywhere."

IMMEDIATE splitting of the American Federation of Labor into two rival groups was averted by the action of the Federation's executive council in voting to bring to trial on August, 3, the union leaders led by John L. Lewis on charges of "dual unionism." It had been reported earlier that the council had voted to suspend the 12 unions grouped as the Committee for Industrial Unionization.

The council's action was looked upon as a peace move in the crisis that threatens open warfare in the labor movement. It was precipitated by the drive to organize 500,000 workers in the steel industry into one big industrial union by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and his followers.

The charges against the Lewis group include "competition as a rival organization with the A. F. of L."; fomenting an insurrection within the Federation; violation of contracts they have entered into with the Federation when granted their charters.

While the council deliberated the fate of the so-called "insurgent" unions, Mr. Lewis denounced both the steel industry and the Federation, declaring:

"Neither the American Federation of Labor nor the steel industry can stop the organization of steel workers in our organization. I am for the millions of American workers who have been denied the right to organize and who have been scorned by the industrialists."

AN ALLIANCE between Dr. Francis E. Townsend, Father Charles E. Coughlin and the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith in the interests of a third party was announced at the Townsendite convention in Cleveland, attended by 12,000 followers of the California doctor who advocates pensions of $200 per month for every person over 60.

Dr. Townsend

In an address before the convention, Father Coughlin bitterly denounced the present administration and President Roosevelt and called upon the delegates to follow Dr. Townsend in endorsing the candidacy of William Lemke for the presidency on the Union ticket.

Earlier the New Deal had been the target of both Dr. Townsend and the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, now leader of the late Huey Long's share-the-wealth movement.

Townsendite candidates who must run on the Democratic ticket planned a pro-Roosevelt demonstration. Pro-Roosevelt delegations representing 11 states signed a resolution urging that no "merger or fusion" with a third party be made. A tactical victory was won by the New Deal forces in the election of Willis Mahoney, Townsendite-Democratic candidate for senator from Oregon, as chairman of the resolutions committee.

THE arrest of former Lieut. Commander John S. Farnsworth of the United States navy on a charge that he had sold confidential naval data to a Japanese officer marked what observers believed was the beginning of a roundup of persons suspected of supplying navy secrets to foreign powers.

Declaring that he had obtained nothing of importance from the navy and gave nothing to the Japanese that "could not have been obtained in the public library in Washington," Farnsworth at first pleaded not guilty to the charges.

Farnsworth is charged with taking from the Navy department and later selling it to the Japanese government, a book entitled "The Service of Information and General Security." The book is on naval tactics and according to officials, is rated as "confidential."

It was claimed that Farnsworth's technical training in the navy would make it possible for him to piece together information picked up from former fellow officers.

HENRY FORD, approaching his seventy - third birthday envisioned the eventual decline of farm animals as a source of the world's food and predicted that grains and other crops will largely be substituted for them.

HenryFord

"We can, I believe, get a more plentiful supply of food cheaper and better," he said, "by processing the products of the soil instead of asking cows and chickens to do it for us. In the future farm animals of all kinds will decline in numbers. We won't need them. The farm animal will go, but the farm will become larger."

Business, according to the great industrialist is "doing all right." He criticized governmental interference with private business, "particularly through the attempt of international bankers to control all business." He said the "financiers' only idea is to get in and make money. They are not much interested in production at lower costs. The better you can make a thing and the cheaper you can sell it, the larger will be your production and the higher the wages you can pay."

AFTER dedicating New York's new $64,000,000 Tri - borough bridge, attending the wedding of Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, minister to Denmark, to Captain Boerge Rohde of the Danish court and spending two days at his Hyde Park home, President Roosevelt embarked on a nautical vacation in Maine and Canadian waters.

President Roosevelt

On the bridge dedication program with the President were Secretary of the Interior Ickes, Gov. Lehman of New York, Senator Wagner and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York City. The bridge is the largest completed public works administration project in the East. It comprises four spans in it: three and one-half miles of elevated ways and connects Manhattan, the Bronx and Queens, Long Island. Its cost is second only to that of the Golden Gate bridge at San Francisco.

On the cruise of the Sewanna, a 50-foot schooner yacht, President Roosevelt will act as skipper and helmsman. Three of his four sons, James, Franklin Jr., and John are members of the crew. The cruise will carry the President along the Maine coast to Campobello Island, New Brunswick, where his mother has a summer home and off Nova Scotia where he expects to do some deep sea fishing. A destroyer, the presidential yacht Potomac and the schooner Liberty carrying newspaper men are trailing the Sewanna.

Before he returns to the White House, the President will pay a visit to Lord Tweedsmuir, governor-general of Canada at Ottawa, the Dominion's capital.

PREDICTING 1936 will be the best business year since 1930 and "possibly since 1929," Colonel Leonard P. Ayers, economist of Cleveland, declared that statistics on all important business had shown substantial and "healthy increases" since the first of this year. Strikes, drouth and other difficulties have not affected increases in employment, markets and security exchanges, the economist said.

"More steel has been produced in the first half of 1936 than in all 1932," he pointed out. "A major factor in the increased steadiness of business has been well sustained employment among the factory workers making durable goods. Workers in the durable goods factories suffer most from lay-offs and shut-downs, but such has not been the case in the first half of this year and of last year."

COMPLETE endorsement of the presidential candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas was given by former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois following a conference in Topeka. Following the conference former Governor Lowden announced that he and Governor Landon were in "full accord" on the question of farm relief.

Frank O. Lowden

The Illinois farm leader revealed that he had discussed soil erosion, reciprocal treaties, conservation of farm population, government aid in marketing surplus crops, centralizing of federal power and reduction of federal expenditures with Gov. Landon. Mr. Lowden declared:

"We are in accord on the important agricultural issues. I shall support him and campaign for his election."

Payment of cash federal bounties to soil - conserving farmers through a plan contemplating state administration was one of the farm principles advocated by Mr. Lowden which received the verbal support of Gov. Landon following the conference.

With the Republican presidential nominee at work on his acceptance speech, conferences with other leaders were scheduled. Important among these was the visit of George N. Peek, former AAA administrator who resigned his post following a break with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and is now a New Deal critic. Also on the program was the visit of Col. Frank Knox, Governor Landon's running mate.

In the meantime members of the Kansas legislature had departed for their homes after submitting two constitutional amendments to the state's electorate. One of these would authorize state aid for the needy and the other would approve state participation in the federal social security plan. Both amendments were recommended by Governor Landon.

FIFTEEN Japanese army officers who were leaders in last February's bloody rebellion in which four high-ranking government officials met assassination, were executed by a firing squad in Tokyo.

Two other officers condemned to death were not shot and no explanation was made by the war office. They were Captain Yoshiaki Nakamura and Captan Asiachi Isobe. Unofficial observers believed their lives were temporarily spared so that they might testify in trials of other men accused of complicity in the uprising of February 26 which pushed Japan close to the brink of civil war.

Descend Among Bicycles
Many Strikes and Worries
Two Flags That Clash
Two National Hymns

This column, like others to follow, written in Europe, traveling about by automobile, will represent an effort to see things clearly, and describe them simply, according to the old formula.

Arthur Brisbane

You descend from the ship at Havre into a world on wheels, bicycle wheels, a change from the world on automobile wheels left on the other side of the Atlantic.

Here working men and women, thousands of them, ride to and from work, ten to thirty abreast, depending on the width of the street.

They have the right of way, properly, in a democracy.

So it used to be in America, when automobiles were new, small boys shouted "Get a horse," and New York state law compelled the automobile driver to stop his car and engine, while a farm wagon passed, if the farmer raised his hand, or even lead the farm team past his machine if the farmer requested it. Here the car stops, while bicycles circulate around it on both sides. Similarly, you stop, later, meeting flocks of sheep, on roads across the salt marshes of the Vendee.

France is a land of bicycles, of many political parties, and, at the moment, a land of strikes. Like all other European countries, it is a land of permanent war scares. America looks upon war as a distant, improbable possibility, and when it comes spends billions on airships that do not fly, ships that never go to sea, and similar evidences of patriotic dollar-a-year efficiency. Europe's nations live in a state of fear, as an American family might live if it knew that, at any moment, well-equipped gangsters from next door might enter, "shoot up" the household and set fire to the house.

American travelers leaving the boat by railroad, descending in Paris at the Saint Lazare station, were surprised to find crowds fighting each other, not waiting for Germany, crowds made up entirely of Frenchmen of different political opinions.

Some wore ribbons with the red, white and blue colors of the French flag; others, more numerous, wore the plain color red. One side sang the "Marseillaise," national hymn of France since the revolution.

Others wearing small red flags sang the "Internationale," official song of the Communists the world over, from Moscow to Harlem. Crowds grew bigger, the Frenchmen sang the two hymns at each other, more and more violently, with excellent voices, not one out of tune, all knowing the words of their respective hymns. The "Marsellaise" says, "Let us go, children of the fatherland, the day of glory has arrived"; the other says, "Arise ye prisoners of starvation; arise, ye wretched of the earth."

It was a scene never to be described, now that Dooley is dead, and Artemus Ward. Nobody bothered the descending foreigners from across the water. A few Frenchmen hit other Frenchmen, not hard, then agents of the Surete, whom we should call policemen, gradually dispersed the crowds, that met and sang at each other again the next day. They live in the suburbs and work in Paris, or vice versa, and, meeting in the railroad station, it enrages them to encounter those that sing the wrong hymn and wear the wrong colors.

Those singers have chests like drums, complexions that reveal countless billions of red corpuscles and voices that could be heard, almost, from Los Angeles to Santa Monica.

One of them broke off at the sad word "starvation" and said to your narrator, who had politely congratulated him on his vigor: 'Tenez, tatez mon bras, et j'ai soixante sept ans"—meaning, "Here, feel my muscle, and I am sixty-seven years old."

The muscle rose in a biceps like a small melon.

The duty of a visiting foreigner is to observe, describe and not comment; but this writer, had he accepted the invitation to speak at the American club in Paris recently, would have suggested that the French, whose only earthly possession is France, should be careful not to tear that property apart, especially with Germany ready to gather up the pieces.

This crosses the water by mail, is not new, and not news, when you see it. Only heaven knows what might happen in a week.

Ship Subsidy

Washington.—One of the pieces of legislation enacted by the late seventy - fourth congress was the ship subsidy bill. Residents of farming communities and smaller cities and towns in the interior probably paid no attention to it whatsoever. Nor was there any outstanding reason apparent why they should give thought to a rather complex and yet far-reaching piece of legislation. But it is important even though the circumstances under which it will be effective may not so appear to the agricultural sections of the country.

The new law provides an undisguised subsidy as the basis of encouragement for development of a new American merchant marine. It is the first time that such a policy has been carried out by the American nation and it is. therefore, yet a matter to be tried out before anyone can say definitely that the results will be satisfactory. Those who sponsored the legislation have long contended it was both sound and sensible and their argument prevailed in congress.

Advocates of the measure say that it will provide at least a start for the construction of new and faster and more efficient American owned ships. They contend further that the policy upon which the nation has now embarked as regards shipping will cost less in the end than other disguised and concealed subsidies that have been employed.

It may be necessary to recall that the United States long has paid what amounts to a subsidy to ocean going ships in the form of excessive rates for the transportation of ocean mail. There are 43 such mail routes and the ships operating on these routes, consequently, benefited to the extent of the number of pounds of mail they carried because the payments they received were on a pound basis. This contribution from the federal government enabled many of those shipping companies to survive.

But it is only natural that one should ask why a subsidy is advisable or necessary at all. The answer is plain. American owned ships, ships flying the American flag, are required by law to meet numerous conditions that are not required by any other nation of the ships registered with their admiralties.

For example, the standard of wages on American ships and the working conditions laid down by law are the highest of any in the world. Those conditions alone add immensely to the overhead cost of American owned ships.

* * *

Some Difficulties

With these conditions, among many others, it becomes easily understandable what difficulties confront American flag ships in competition with world shipping.

Above and beyond the factors just mentioned, it is a matter of record as well that ship construction in the United States costs more perhaps than any place else in the world. Here again American standards are influential. They bring about higher wages and shorter hours for American labor in American shipyards. Thus, a new ship starting out begins its service with a handicap of greater cost upon which a return must be had if those who invest their money in ships are to receive a profit thereon.

Then, there is a further distinct and important reason. I refer to national defense. It has long been the conviction of military and naval men that American freight and passenger ships should be so designed, developed and constructed, that they might be converted to satisfactory use as auxiliary craft in time of war. In this connection it will be recalled that tremendous sums were expended by our government in building ships for use in the World war. There was such vast waste of money at that time that it seems incredible anyone should ever make the same mistake again. But to avoid that mistake advance preparations are necessary and that is a point strongly stressed by those who favored the ship subsidy legislation.

* * *

Link With the Farm

Now to link the importance of the ship subsidy bill with agriculture: American products must have access to foreign markets and this access must be under fair and reasonable competitive conditions. Such reasonable and fair competitive conditions cannot obtain if American built ships, constructed at greater costs because of the higher standards of wages and living of American labor, and operated on a basis of greater cost for the same reasons do not have some protection from the government whose flag they fly. They cannot, for example, meet the freight rates offered by the Japanese whose labor basis is distressing and whose general construction costs are amazingly low. Nor can they compete with ships constructed with government money and subsidized by special privileges accorded by their governments.

So, it is made to appear, at least from this line of reasoning, that American firms are left to the mercies of foreign shipping companies in their efforts to expand our export trade—that is, they are left to these mercies unless this government takes a definite stand by which American flag ships are accorded some advantages.

I suspect there are many features of the ship subsidy bill which was fathered by Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, that will prove unsatisfactory. Indeed, I am sure some of them will be found to be wholly unworkable. But the point is, after all, that a start has been made toward honesty of policy in dealing with merchant marine problems. I think no one can refute the statement that as between concealed or disguised subsidies and forthright payments that are known as subsidies, the forthright and honest method is decidedly better.

Since the United States normally produces a surplus of agricultural products, it becomes highly important to agriculture that the foreign markets are accessible and that the costs of transportation do not entirely eat up the value of the commodity exported unless the wheat from the plains states and the cotton from the South and the corn from the Mississippi valley can be moved at reasonable cost.

One might properly inquire why the foreign boats should not be used to handle American commodities if the freight rate is lower There are two very valid reasons why this should not obtain. One is that constant rate reduction by foreign shipping companies would sooner or later, probably sooner, destroy the American merchant marine. With this end achieved, the foreign shipping companies would do as they have attempted to do on a number of occasions—jack up the rates to suit themselves. The other reason why American goods should be shipped in American bottoms is that a mercantile marine is as necessary an adjunct to our national economy and our national welfare as are the lines of land transportation. This may seem to be a broad statement but I believe, nevertheless, it is a truthful one because all fields of industry as well as agriculture would suffer if we were left at the mercy of foreign shipping companies. Further, the commodities that we import would pay whatever rates the foreign shipping companies demanded in order to reach our shores and we eventually would pay the bill.

It seems, therefore, that while this legislation probably is far from perfection, probably has entirely too much governmental finger in the shipping pie, it presents a start that eventually will be helpful I have heard no answer to this statement. It is going to cost about so much for transportation on the ocean and if we can maintain an American industry upon that cost plus the aid of a subsidy of the type now initiated, we have laid out a sound unit in our national commercial structure. It goes without saying, therefore, that if it is helpful to one part of the country it is going to be helpful to all others because we are so interrelated.

Pests and Drouth

Political students have been engaged lately in stirring arguments over what possibly may be a new influence in the campaigns of 1936. I refer to the disastrous conditions in some of the plains of the middle west resulting from lack of rain. I refer, also, to the presence of pests in sections of the plains states.

It has been interesting, not to say humorous, to listen to the arguments being advanced, arguments based purely on political phases that may or may not result from those conditions. There is no agreement among the Democrats and no agreement among the Republicans as to the effect of the natural circumstances developing in the middle west. Some Democrats contend the drouth will react to President Roosevelt's advantage. Some Republicans fear that the Democratic contention is true. Some Democrats are afraid that the loss of crops and the generally bad condition in which this leaves thousands of farmers will place them in a state of mind where they will be determined to vote against somebody and of course the only person against whom they can vote is Mr. Roosevelt inasmuch as he happens to be the man in power at the moment.

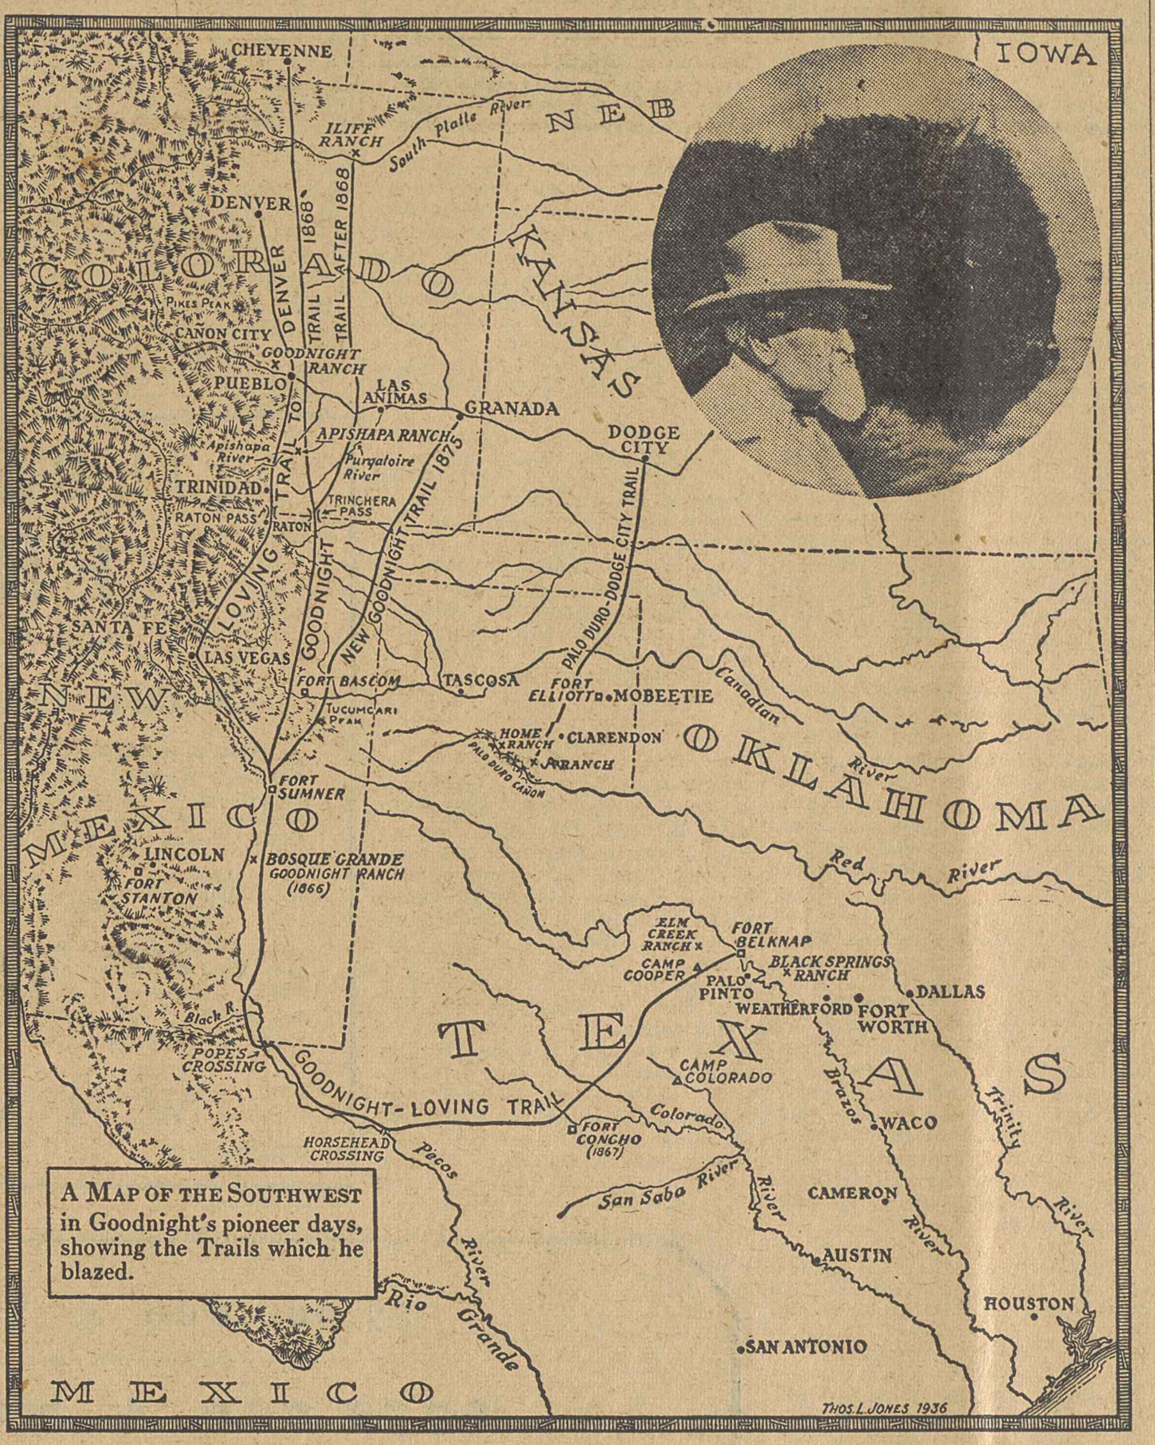
The Story of a Texas Trail-Blazer

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON MARCH 2, 1836, the Republic of Texas came into existence in the little town of Washington-on-the-Brazos. Three days later, in a farm home on the prairies of Madison county, Illinois, was born a little boy who was destined to become one of the truly great citizens of Texas even though, unlike some of her traditional heroes, he is but little known outside the borders of the Lone Star state. But few of those heroes had a more interesting career than did Charles Goodnight.

"He rode bareback from Illinois to Texas when he was nine years old. He was hunting with the Caddo Indians beyond the frontier at thirteen, launching into the cattle business at twenty, guiding Texas Rangers at twenty-four, blazing cattle trails two thousand miles in length at thirty, establishing a ranch three hundred miles beyond the frontier at forty, and at forty-five dominating nearly twenty million acres of range country in the interests of order. At sixty he was recognized as possibly the greatest scientific breeder of range cattle in the West, and at ninety he was an active international authority on the economics of the range industry.

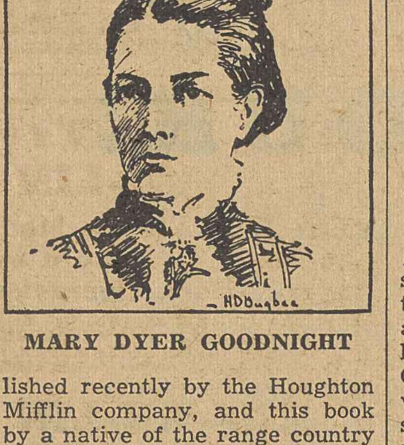
"He always rode beyond the borderlands, upon ranges of unspoiled grass. He knew the West of Jim Bridger, Kit Carson, Dick Wootton, St. Vrain and Lucien Maxwell. He ranged a country as vast as Bridger ranged. He rode with the boldness of Fremont, guided by the craft of Carson. The vast and changing country over which he moved, the fertility of a mind that quickly grasped the significance of climate and topography, the inexhaustible energy of his mind and body, and the long period of time through which he constantly applied himself to the Western World, operated to produce in this man an ample nature surpassing many of the more famous characters of frontier history. . . . Now, a hundred years after his birth, his massive frame looms strong among the horsemen of the storied West."



A MAP OF THE SOUTHWEST in Goodnight's pioneer days, showing the Trails which he blazed.

All pictures from Haley's "Charles Goodnight—Cowman and Plainsman," courtesy, Houghton Mifflin Company.

So writes J. Evetts Haley in the book "Charles Goodnight—Cowman and Plainsman," published recently by the Houghton Mifflin company, and this book by a native of the range country of west Texas who is a member of the department of history at the University of Texas, not only is one of the most important Western biographies of recent years but it is an inspiring account of an American frontiersman who was unique among his kind. In contrast to so many men of the border breed whose chief claim to distinction seems to have been their spectacular career of destruction, Goodnight was a constructive force in the country in which he pioneered. True, he had occasion now and then to kill but the men whom he disposed of—rustlers mostly—were the kind of citizens which the community could spare easily enough. On the whole, what he did almost always served the best interests of the region where he lived and at the same time it advanced his own interests. But that was a secondary consideration with him.



MARY DYER GOODNIGHT

Again in contrast to so many other men of the frontier, who were noted for only one thing, his was an extraordinarily versatile and many-sided personality. Again quoting his biographer:

> He was filled with vigorous zest for life. His Observations upon nature ranged, with remarkable freshness, from the prairie dogs of the Palo Duro Plains to the buffalo of the Northwest, from the grasses of the Brazos Valley to the conifers of the Greenhorns. He saw seven-horned sheep grazing with the Navajo flocks along the Pecos, Nature's own photograph of a giant cinnamon bear on the mineral bluffs of the Picketwire, great forests miniatured in the agate of the Rockies and buffaloes and horses racing upside down through the mirages of the Staked Plains. He found time to turn back from the lead of two thousand Texas longhorns to see dove's nests passed over by thousands of hoofs, and left with eggs untouched. He allowed a Texas cow that escaped from his herd on the Pecos and back-trailed through four hundred miles of desert and wilderness to die of old age upon the Keechi range she loved. He cursed the fool who cut down a lone chittam tree at the head of Dry Creek, on the JA ranch, a fine, useful landmark in a country devoid of timber. He carried one of the little Sonoran deer fifty miles across his saddle in front of him, to add to his studies of wild life in the Panhandle.

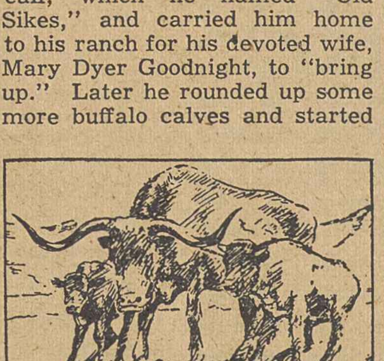
It was these studies which gave him what fame he had, insufficient though it was, outside the borders of his state. For to anyone at all familiar with the history of the West, the name of Goodnight is inseparably linked with the name of those great shaggy creatures which once roamed the plains by the millions—the buffalo. His interest in these animals began more than 60 years ago, at a time when they were threatened with extinction. He roped a little bull calf, which he named "Old Sikes," and carried him home to his ranch for his devoted wife, Mary Dyer Goodnight, to "bring up." Later he rounded up some more buffalo calves and started the herd of bison on the Palo Duro range whose fame became widespread in this country.



"OLD BLUE"
Leader of Goodnight's Trail Herds

Mr. Haley says that Goodnight, whom he calls the "Burbank of the Open Ranges," first tried the experiment of crossing the buffalo with Galloway cattle, and shows that he, rather than the renowned "Buffalo" Jones, deserves credit for that feat. He is also credited with being the inventor of that essential piece of equipment (certainly essential to hard-working and hungry cowpunchers) of the open range—the chuckwagon. But more important than either of these achievements is the remarkable experiments on the JA ranch which brought him recognition as the greatest scientific breeder of range cattle in the world.

Even if Goodnight had not achieved renown as a cowman, his career as a trail-blazer would have been enough to give him enduring fame. In reality, that career started in 1845—the year Texas became a state—when his mother and stepfather, his older brother and two sisters, left Illinois and started for Texas in two covered wagons.

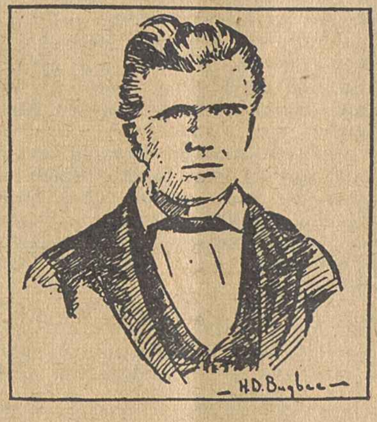
In Texas the boy thrived amid the hardships of pioneer life—helping his elder brother support the family by working for neighboring ranchers, hunting and fishing for food, bringing up a captured wild colt on a bottle and thus getting his first mount. By the time he was nineteen he decided that he knew Texas pretty well and was about ready to move farther west to a newer country — California. With a young companion, and an ox team and a few horses, they started on the long trek west. But by the time they had gone a few hundred miles into West Texas they decided that the state was large enough for them. So Goodnight went back to Palo Pinto county where he ranched and supported his widowed mother. During the Civil war he served with the Texas Rangers, fighting mostly Indians, Mexicans and cattle thieves.

After the war, there was no cattle market. The plains swarmed with herds, and cattle could be bought on credit. Goodnight saw the necessity of finding a western market. So did some others, but the young plainsman, then thirty, differed from the rest in that he determined to find it. There was already one up at Abilene, Kas., where many of the cattlemen took their herds to sell, but Goodnight saw a greater opportunity up in New Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming.

The drawback in the scheme was that between the Panhandle and this promising territory lay a great expanse of desert and territory inhabited by Comanche Indians ready to pounce upon invaders and drive off the cattle. Without heavy protection, no herd could get through. So when Goodnight laid his plan before some of his neighbors, they saw only the danger connected with the venture and declined to have anything to do with it.

But young Goodnight found a partner. He was Oliver Loving, one of the most experienced cowmen in Texas at that time. The story of how these two men blazed the Goodnight-Loving Trail across West Texas and up into New Mexico to Fort Sumner, how Oliver Loving lost his life in the venture and how Goodnight brought the body of his partner back to his native Texas is one of the epics of the West. "Though Goodnight was then thirty-one years of age, until his death, nearly sixty-three years later, he never spoke of Loving except in utmost tenderness," says his biographer, "and his vibrant voice mellowed with reverence as he would slowly say, 'my old partner's and raise his eyes to the picture that hung on the ranch-house wall."

Later the Goodnight-Loving trail was extended into Coloradc and Wyoming and 300,000 cattle passed over it in six years. The second of the trails which he blazed, known as the new Goodnight trail, ran from Fort Sumner in New Mexico to Granada, Colo., and several years later he laid off his third—from the JA ranch to Dodge City, Kan. It was 250 miles in length and known as the Palo Duro-Dodge City trail.



OLIVER LOVING

Almost as romantic as the story of his trail-blazing is the story of his association with the Irishman, John George Adair, in the development of the famous JA ranch, the first in the Texas Panhandle. During his eleven years on this ranch he handled more than 300,000 cattle, with a total loss during the time of only 1,000 head, and the property paid an annual profit of 75 per cent on the capital invested.

He died in 1929 at the age of ninety-three, still active, vigorous and dynamic in both brain and body. "His bow-legged, gray-headed JA cowboys lowered his massive casket into the grave, and with tears streaming down their leathery, wind-carved faces, shoveled in the dirt that covered him up. And there in the graveyard at Goodnight, Texas, came to rest at last this dominant, driving, restless plainsman. More appropriately, he should lie at the edge of the Palo Duro canyon, which, splashed with the enduring colors of ages, verdant with grass that will never be plowed, carves out of the staked plains an everlasting memorial to the pioneering spirit of Charles Goodnight."

—17—

"Not because he'd thought of finger-prints, but because he was accustomed to wearing gloves, even in summer.

"It was red-hot the day I came here to tell you about Nolan.

"And your gloves were lying there with your hat."

Peter smiled, faintly.

"I remember, too," he said. "You picked one of them up. But, of course, I might merely have been carrying them."

Barry smiled, also.

"You might," he admitted. "But the glove that fell on the floor was turned inside out. People don't carry gloves that way."

"Well," Winslow observed, "Harwood didn't make any mistake when he said you were a good newspaper man. You're right about everything. My wife was Mrs. Selby. She thought Selby was dead, of course, when she married me. Two or three years ago, I met him on the street. He was d—d decent. 'Believe it or not, I was terribly in love with Julie,' he said. 'I still am. But God knows I'm no husband for her, and you are. You've nothing to fear from me.' he said.

"But I did fear. All my life, I've had one conviction. Murder will out. Everything comes to the surface sooner or later. I urged Julie to get a divorce. 'I can't,' she said, 'without more dreadful publicity. It would ruin your career,' she said. Always thinking of me, Julie is."

He touched the tell-tale magnet, almost lovingly.

"We were still talking about it," he continued, "when Julie went all to pieces again. Just as she had when the tabloids printed the story you saw. I took her to Europe. When we came back, Selby'd disappeared. I didn't even know his new name, and, of course, I didn't look for him. I persuaded myself the danger was over.

"Then came the Jefferson street grab.

"I was upset about what the newspapers said of Judge Hambidge. I'd no idea of what was back of that, of course, and he didn't tell me. I figured that they'd got to him, somehow. And then Morano telephoned, the night of the murder, to say Kelly'd been to the Cocoanut Bar. He'd had the marriage certificate some time, and, through an underworld connection, he knew Selby was alive, but he'd only just found out that Selby was Morano. Some one had told him that afternoon—probably the same man who tipped off Luis' telephone message to Harwood. Kelly had said to Morano, 'Now, I've got you, and Hambidge, and Winslow.' He has, too,' Luis added, 'unless you can find a way out of it.'"

Winslow's hand closed tightly.

"Julie was upstairs, asleep," he said. "She'd left me an hour before, radiantly happy. I went to see Kelly. Heaven knows what I intended to do. Certainly not murder. I was about to ring the bell, when I saw the key in the door, and used it. Kelly was talking to Hambidge. I recognized the Judge's voice, and slipped into the dining room. Listening, I learned why he had written that decision. And I heard Kelly say, 'If it ain't filed by noon today, I'll have your sister-in-law arrested for bigamy.'

"Hambidge said, 'You can do what you like; I won't file it.'

"The cut-glass decanter was on the table in front of me. I picked it up, almost mechanically. Kelly was in the hall then, shouting 'squealers' and 'beat it.' I suppose I had some vague idea of helping my brother-in-law. I don't know. Anyway, I opened the door between the dining room and the drawing room. And, as I did so, Kelly came in from the hall, closing that door behind him. His left hand was still on the knob when he saw me.

"'More squealers!' he shouted. 'Witnesses! So you heard, did you? Well, by God, you're not going to tell anybody!'

"He lifted his right hand, and there was a revolver in it.

"Another instant, and he'd've fired.

"I hurled the decanter.

"It was just instinct. I didn't take aim. There wasn't time. If I meant to do anything, it was to hit his pistol arm. I don't really know where the bottle did strike. A moment afterward, Kelly went down in a heap.

"He wasn't dead. A long way from it, for the gun had dropped out of his hand, and he reached for it. I picked it up. Ten seconds later, Hambidge was on the other side of that door, trying to open it, and calling Kelly. I turned the lights out. Hambidge left. I put the revolver into my pocket, and got the certificate out of Kelly's. There was a white push-button in the door-frame. I pressed it—or thought I did—and hurried through the dining room into the street. Evidently, the bell didn't ring, for it seems that no one came to Kelly's assistance.

"It never occurred to me that Kelly was anything more than stunned. I went home, and burned that marriage certificate. There was no other record; I'd made sure of that. A few hours later, Hambidge phoned to say he'd filed his decision. There was nothing about Kelly in the morning paper. I'd no idea he was dead until long after dinner that night at Southampton."

Barry nodded.

"Of course, my first impulse was to give myself up," Winslow said. "But what good would that've done? They couldn't convict me. I'd killed in self-defense, and could come mighty near proving it. But, in doing so, I'd've given away the secret I'd struggled to keep all these years. I'd've smashed Julie utterly, and ruined Hambidge, and Pat. Nobody was harmed by my keeping my mouth shut. There wasn't a chance of their finding Ridder guilty, or anyone else. If they'd done that, I'd've confessed in a moment."

"I know," Barry declared. "That's what you meant when you said, 'If we have to get the guilty man to free Rogers, we'll do it, but let's give the court a chance first.'"

"Yes."

Peter rose, and went to the window.

"The difficult thing," he continued, "was not to confess. With that boy in jail. But it was letting an innocent man suffer a few weeks, or an innocent woman all her life. If you'd seen Julie's face, when she collapsed, after hearing of Selby's arrest—" He paused. "Of course, neither she nor Hambidge knows I killed Kelly."

Barry said, "They'll never know it through me.

"Bon voyage," he added, blithely, an instant later, his hat in his hand. "And come back soon. I'd like to have you two at my wedding."

GUNLOCK RANCH

by FRANK H. SPEARMAN

HERE'S an exciting tale of Western ranch life. It has all the customary and necessary parts of a true-to-life Rocky Mountain story plus a lot of unexpected angles that will maintain your interest to the final sentence.

Jane Van Tambel is the heroine, an Eastern girl who comes out West to meet her father for the first time . . . and finds him a crook and thief masquerading under a cloak of respectability. The desire to turn against him is repressed until she meets Bill Denison, her father's mortal enemy. Love appears, and with it comes an emotional conflict that Spearman portrays with mastery.

Should Jane Van Tambel turn against her father or renounce her love for Denison?

POSTMASTER REID

Although the frequently mentioned "four vacancies" in the legislature include the post of Rep R. A. Reid, who has been appointed postmaster at Montevallo, there is a possibility that the genial Shelby county representative may see further service in the house. It all depends upon how soon the extra session is called.

"I've been appointed postmaster all right, but it is not definite just when I will take over the job," he said while in a visit to the capitol last week. "When the present temporary postmaster was appointed, she was given to understand that it would be for a certain number of months, and I have not yet qualified.

"It will be some time later in the year before I assume my new duties, and if you boys can get the legislature back in special session soon I might be with you."

Montevallo has one of he busiest post offices of its size in the state, with Alabama college the biggest customer. Algernon Blair, Montgomery contractor, is preparing to start work there on a new $52,000 post office building. — Alabama Journal.

INZER REID HAS THE BELT

Inzer Reid is the champion shot of Montevallo with a revolver. Yes, sir-ree.. The Times has Chief Gardner's word for it, and they do say that where a question of veracity is involved that the Chief has the late George Washington beat, in that George could not tell a lie, and the Chief could but won't. But to the point. A pistol range is located near the home of Chief C. M. Gardner, where the crack shots gather to display their wares. Mr. Gardner said that only recently at one of these meetings Inzer at a distance of 25 paces put six shots in succession right kerdab in the bull's eye. Now folks, you are bound to admit that a man who can do that is plenty good, and there are some mighty good pistol shots in Montevallo, including Chief Gardner himself. Just why Inzer has been overlooked by the Honorable J. Edgar Hoover in Washington, D. C. we are not in position to say. But from the above record we don't doubt but that he will soon be receiving overtures to join Uncle Sam's G-Men.

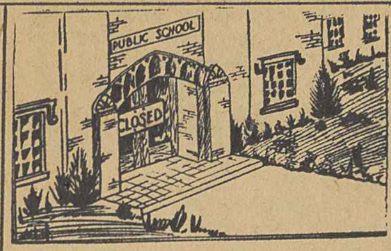
Montevallo, Ala.



All public education, including colleges, is asking $3,100,000 less than was spent in 1929-1930.

Last year education attempted to operate on $7,000,000 less than was spent in 1929-30.

Alabama wealth totals $1,244 per person. Only Mississippi, with $1,216, is poorer.

Observers agree that Alabama has the resources to become wealthy. Between 1901 and 1935 public school enrollment increased from 350,000 to 665,000.

Only 26 per cent of those of school age attended in 1901; 60 per cent attended in 1935.

Assessed property values grew from $270,000,000 to more than $900,000,000 in that time.

Only by providing education can we reduce poverty and develop Alabama's resources.

Alabama pays $30.99 per person in state and local taxes. Only Arkansas, with $30.51, pays less.

Some high per capita taxes are:

Nevada	$136.00
New York	108.00
California	106.00
New Jersey	103.00

Alabama pays a smaller per cent of her income and her wealth in taxes than do California, New York, and New Jersey.

Since Alabama has less wealth, she must pay a greater part of it to have good schools.

Most increases in taxes go to the Highway Department.

If highway funds were diverted to schools, federal money could not be matched, and Alabama would lose it.

The legislative, executive, and judicial departments of government combined spend only $1,800,000 per year.

If the whole state government supported from the General Fund were abolished, the saving would not pay the school deficit.

NOTICE

Default having been made in the payment of the 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 annual instalments of Sanitary Sewer System Assessment No. 110, against Monroe Prentice levied under Sanitary Sewer Ordinance No. 1 of the Town of Montevallo, Alabama, adopted by the Town Council of said Town on December 1st, 1925, which assessments are past due,

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, C. M. Gardner, Town Clerk of the Town of Montevallo, Alabama, the officer designated by the Town Council of said Town to collect such assessments, will, at the front steps of the Mayor's office in said Town, within the legal hours of sale, on the 8th day of August, 1936, sell, at public outcry, to the highest bidder, for cash, the following described property in said Town, against which said assessment was made, for the purpose of paying and discharging said assessment, viz:

A lot or parcel of land the north side of which is 290 feet south of the S. P. L. of County Road and fronting 75 feet on the west side of Main Street and running back of uniform width and at right angles a distance of 100 feet.

Said assessment was for $57.55 was payable in ten annual instalments of $5.75 each, with interest on deferred payments at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable annually, and the first installment was due on the 3rd day of February, 1927, and one installment on the 3rd day of February of each year thereafter up to and including February 3rd, 1936.

This the 10th day of July, 1936.

C. M. GARDNER,
Town Clerk of the Town of Montevallo, Alabama.

State Capitol News

Montgomery. — Veteran political observers on Goat Hill are indulging themselves in unrestrained speculation over the bruited special session of the Legislature which they confidently predict will be summoned within 60 to 90 days.

Since Governor Graves' return from the Democratic National convention Capitol corridors have been filled with solons anxious to learn what the Little Colonel is mulling over in his active and agile brain. Thus far, however, their curiosity has found little satisfaction.

Though Governor Graves has made no definite statement that might indicate he contemplates another sitting of the lawmakers, a select few have emerged from his office with the feeling that he is burning midnight oil in the preparation of an acceptable program designed to assure full school terms and provide additional aid for public health and welfare activities.

Two major calamities — drouth and an infantile paralysis epidemic—have served to focus attention on the invaluable services rendered by the latter two departments and, despite the tragic toll in human life and property, they have had the effect of moulding in the public consciousness a new appreciation of the essential work of these social agencies.

Several House members closely identified with the Administration insist the Governor's "call" will include the legalization of intoxicating beverages and a one-per cent gross receipts tax. They believe these levies would bring $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 into the state coffers.

Rep. E. C. Boswell, of Geneva, one of the most articulate "wets" in the House and close friend of the Governor, spent two days at the Capitol last week and expressed the belief that the special session would be convened "the last week in August or early September." He added there was little doubt in his mind that the Governor had capitulated to the popular demand that liquor be legalized and taxed. Boswell also favors a heavy license schedule on chain stores, similar to the Florida law enacted last year

Another indication that the session is not far in the offing is the fact that Rep. Bob Reid, of Shelby, has made no move to relinquish his House seat. He was recently appointed postmaster at Montevallo and must give up his legislative post when he goes on the Federal payroll. However, it is understood his appointment will not become effective until October 1. If the Governor calls the lawmakers into extraordinary session on or about September 1, then Reid will have an opportunity to render valuable service to the Administration for at least a month.

The Governor has not yet called special elections in Madison, Chambers and Marengo counties to fill vacancies caused by the deaths of Senator Shelby Fletcher and Rep. J. W. Hollingsworth, and the resignation of Rep. Clint Harrison. However, he may simultaneously issue his formal call for the special session and the local elections with only 30 days advance notice.

The question of Administration leadership in both Houses has been engagaing the Governor's attention, and it is understood he conferred with several legislative loyalists during his recent sojourn at Gulf Shores. However, many of his friends are urging him to rely upon steering committees rather than place the responsibility in the hands of two men.

Operators of the few remaining river ferries were the only opponents of the Governor's plan to free the State's 15 toll bridges.

Those once picturesque ferrymen, long since outmoded in the march of progress, are understood to be in reality the so-called "minority bond holders" who made the last fight before the Supreme Court to forestall the refunding plan and lease of the spans to the highway department.

On Thursday, July 16 the court denied a motion for rehearing of the case. but the die-hard ferrymen served notice they would appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court

Fifty-five persons lost their lives in industrial accidents during 1935 and a total of $254,464 was paid in workmen's compensations claims in 3,308 cases, according to a report by Frank N. Julian, state insurane commissioner.

A total of 3,411 industrial accidents ocurred, the report showed classified as follows: temporary total disability 2, 936; total partial disability five; permanent partial disability 309; permanent total disability three; deaths 55.

Rapidly becoming the hub of New Deal agencies for the South, this city has been designated as headquarters for the state loan certification offices of the Resettlement Administration for Alabama South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, according to announcement by Rexford Tugwell, Federal Administrator.

The move, it was learned, would bring about 150 employes of the organization here, with an addition to the population of 400 to 500 persons. The concentration, described as "permanent" was said to have been made for the purposes of economy and increased efficiency. Arrival of the personnel and equipment from the other states is expected early this week. They will be located in the Bell Building and in the Exchange and Gay-Teague Hotels.

Simultaneously, it was learned that an allocation of $75,000 had been released for Alabama's drouth stricken farmers to be disbursed in the form of out right grants.

Purchase of $125,000 in bituminous paving materials to be used in resurfacing and smoothing out sections of the Montgomery-Birmingham highway through Shelby county, was announced by Gaston Scott, president of the State Highway Commission.

Paving will begin immediately Scott said, WPA workers have already spent several weeks widening the shoulders of the 22 mile stretch and repairing and replacing guard rails on curves, fills and culverts. The construction work will be done by state maintenance forces, together with convict labor. Several convict camps will be established along the roadway within the next week, it was learned.

Low bidders on road construction to cost more than $200,000 including nine miles of cotton fabric reinforced paving were announced last week by the Highway Department, following the opening and tabulation of all bids received on four projects in as many counties. They are:

Jackson county: Grading, draining and paving with bituminous material with cotton fabric reinforcing on 9.009 miles of the Scottsboro-Chattanooga road, Hardaway Contracting Co., Columbus, Ga., $58,260.

Walker county: Grading, draining and top soil and sand-clay surfacing, also construction of concrete and steel bridges on 4.349 miles of the road extending from Townley toward Fayette; Vandigriff Constrution Co., Montgomery $77,410.08.

Bibb county: Grading, draining and gravel surfacing with timber steel and concrete bridges on 0.246 miles of the road extending from Centreville to Sprotts; J. P. McKee, Leroy, $32,863.82.

Preliminary work on the Dothan Enterprise highwaf, long delayed, was expected to start within a few days. Full construction probably will be under way by September.

Houston's sixteen and one-half mile stretch to the Dale county line will cost approximately $99,000, divided between State and County on the "two-way" plan, while Coffee is building a link from the Dale line to Enterprise, leaving only the seven-mile stretch in the latter county unpaved.

Experimental cotton fabric binding will be tried on the Enterprise road.

The Alabama Bridge Commission last week revived the $1,000,000 Dauphin Island bridge project by resubmitting the application for Federal loans and grants to the Public Works Administration.

The original application was made by the county of Mobile but it was explained the county was unable to go through with the required obligations because of legal restrictions.

ELECTRICITY IS CHEAP IN ALABAMA
$9,000,000 A YEAR
sounds too big to mean much, doesn't it?
$750,000 A MONTH
is still a vague sort of sum to most of us;
$173,077 A WEEK
stays a trifle on the dreamy side;
$24,657 A DAY
We're getting warm now; we can almost understand it;
$1,027 AN HOUR
and THAT'S a lot of money in anybody's language especially when that much money is going out
EVERY HOUR!
To Alabamians for Alabama

THREE quarters of a million dollars a month — paid out in wages, spent with merchants, manufacturers and dealers, paid in taxes —is one of the Alabama Power Company's principal contributions to Alabama's business activity, her prosperity and her social advancement.

This sum averages $173,077 a week, $24,657 a day, $1,027 an hour, EVERY HOUR—24 hours a day, seven days a week, 52 weeks a year —pouring out into Alabama channels of trade, giving jobs to Alabama people, sending men and women and children into Alabama stores with money to spend, making more jobs possible, creating a bigger market in Alabama for Alabama products, increasing opportunities for Alabamians in Alabama.

This money builds highways, it educates children, it supports churches. It touches the life of every county in the state—not only the counties we do business in, but all the other counties as well. It benefits every Alabamian — including yourself!

The $9,000,000 being spent by the Company in 1936—in payrolls, purchases and taxes alone—includes $3,750,000 in salaries and wages to over 2,000 employees, and every one of them lives in Alabama. It includes $3,000,000 worth of materials and supplies bought from Alabama firms or from firms represented in Alabama and employing Alabama people. It includes over $2,250,000 in taxes paid to the state, the counties, the towns and the school districts of Alabama.

Your monthly electric bill buys for you electric service that ranks with the best and cheapest anywhere. But it does much more than that, for your payments, joined with those of 110,000 other Alabama homes, offices, stores and factories, are playing a big part in Alabama's prosperity and progress. That money, in the hands of a Company whose interests are all wrapped up with Alabama's interests, is much like the music in the song—"It goes in here . . . and comes out here!" Mighty little of it remains in the hands of the Company. Mighty little of it goes outside the state. Most of it is paid out as fast as it comes in—to Alabamians for Alabama!

"To insure SAFETY, COMFORT and ON-TIME SCHEDULES for our 30,000,000 PASSENGERS, Firestone GUM-DIPPED TIRES are used on Greyhound Buses"

Says C. E. Wickman, President, Greyhound Corporation, world's largest highway transportation system

FOLLOW the lead of big tire users who buy only on proof of performance.

Last year Greyhound buses traveled 138,000,000 miles from Coast to Coast and from Canada to the Gulf across deserts and over winding mountain roads.

They have won the National Safety Council's highest award in inter-city bus operation for the past four years. This is indeed a tribute to careful driving, efficient equipment and the reserve safety of Firestone Tires made possible by the Firestone Patented Process of Gum-Dipping which prevents internal friction and heat.

Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires run up to 28° cooler and give greatest blowout protection—the scientifically designed non-skid tread will stop your car up to 25% quicker and give you 50% longer non-skid mileage.

Take no chances! Buy your tires on proof of performance. Let us equip your car today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, the Masterpiece of Tire Construction!

Ruth Removal Aids Yanks, but He, Too, Could've Done Job

UNTIL that moment the reporter undoubtedly was the life of the party. Having nothing else to look forward to except a light afternoon date with some millionaire babies, his hosts were spreading themselves with appreciation.

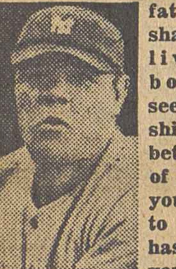
All this made the reporter very, very happy. "Poor little lonesome boys," he thought. "All the way out there by themselves with nobody even close. Probably it does them a lot of good to have a human being catch up with them now and then. Why, I oughta give them a break an'——"

Then he popped the question and got what many another guy has gotten for taking similar liberties.

Charley Ruffing sought the water cooler at the other end of the dugout. Lou Gehrig remembered that he had immediate business to attend to in the clubhouse. Lefty Gomez hid behind his ears. Probably no one ever will know now what happened right after Joe McCarthy booted that grounder in Steelton twenty years ago.

So, humming sadly about just being one of those smarties who breaks up all the parties, the reporter dragged himself into exile. Since then he has been wondering about that question, though. All he asked was:

"Gents a coupla seasons ago there was more'n a coupla rumors to the effect that a fat man was overshadowing your lives and bank books. Now I see you're all sunshine again. Just between the bunch of us, would any of you like to chirp as to how Babe Ruth has helped elevate you to your present blithe position?"



Babe Ruth

But, to avert woeful doings, the reporter must undertake to supply the answer himself.

Undoubtedly Joe Di Maggio, best rookie of several years, has filled a dire outfield need. Tony Lazzeri supplies a shrewd steadying influence. Frankie Crosetti, living up to predictions that once seemed unlikely to be realized, may really be the spark plug of the team. Lou Gehrig's hitting is—. But enough of such things. It is senseless to call the roll while singling out each player responsible for the club's success.

The point is that the dead-panned Yanks of a year or two ago also abounded with single individuals of far more than average worth. Yet they ever were failing in the clutch. Now they are far out in the lead of the American League parade. The reason for their success—you can twist it about and also obtain the disastrous dope concerning the gold embroidered Red Sox—is that Joe McCarthy is not milling along with a collection of stars. He is heading a team.

Being an old Babe Ruth boy, I rather hate to admit this, but it is the truth. During his two final seasons with the club, and even last year when the memory of his mighty deeds still lingered, there was tension, a divided loyalty in clubhouse and dugout.

It was a state of affairs, this conflict between a manager and a dominant personality, which neither the Babe nor McCarthy could handle. No doubt both of them sincerely deplored it and struggled for some proper mingling of team spirit. But the conflict and the inevitable destruction of bright chances existed just as surely as a similar tug of purposes still exists among the Red Sox and at Ebbets Field.

Now the young men come alive in the dugout. They round first base, seeking to give extra value to their hits as they did in the palmiest days of Murderer's Row. Heads which formerly were occupied only with figuring individual averages now are bobbed determinedly in front of second basemen seeking to complete double plays. Even the pitchers——. But perhaps it would be best to stop here in the midst of undoubted gladness.

More than likely the Yankees would have a similar tidy lead if Ruth now were manager and McCarthy was sitting on his Buffalo back porch. As one of the most persistent torchlight bearers in the Bambino procession, I think that they would.

NOTRE DAME will lose two, probably three, football games next fall. Nothing particularly wrong with the Irish, it's the schedule . . . More National League clubs are complaining bitterly about umpiring this season than at any time within the memory of man . . . Mike Jacobs has an answer for those "three-cent critics" who claimed that $40 was too much for a Schmeling-Louis ducat. His tax statement reveals that he peddled 4,700 of the gold-embroidered ducats and only 3,800 of the $3 variety . . . Dave Rabb, sensational young center forward of the New York (soccer) Hakoahs, is the son of a Brooklyn rabbi.

Even Van Mungo and the Dodgers get along better than Lefty Grove and his Boston teammates . . . There is a whisper that Al Weill will succeed Tom McArdle as matchmaker for the club occasionally known as the Twentieth Century . . . Mike McTigue will be one of the guests of honor when the Claremen's association has its moonlight sail on June 9 . . . Although they have been attracting banner crowds to the Burnt Mills Sunday polo games, Princeton's mallet swingers have to perform under assumed names. That is because the university trustees have blue law notions.

Bill Mehlhorn Is an Ardent Baseball Fan

Bill Mehlhorn

Bill Mehlhorn, the golfer, also is a baseball fan. When he isn't whaling them off the tee or sinking a birdie, nothing pleases him more than to watch the national pastime . . . Both the Cards and the Cubs say that Jimmy Ripple would be of far more assistance to the Giants if he played deeper . . . Lieutenant Colonel Abe Hollow, Colonel Widener's aide, took the fashion plate title away from the glamorous Kansas Price at Aqueduct last week. Did it with a bright orange suit . . . Olympic statisticians note that it will take 80 tons of meat and poultry, 17 tons of fish, 120 tons of vegetables, 55 tons of flour, 17 tons of butter, 34,000 gallons of milk, 280,000 eggs, 32,000 oranges 52,600 grapefruits and 105,200 lemons to feed the athletes during two weeks of competition. The lemons, no doubt, will be obtained free of charge . . . The only woman jockey in Japan had her license revoked when the Department of Agriculture ruled that "the mixing of sexes on the turf may lead to undesirable results."

Some of Colonel Ruppert's very good friends insist that the Yankees tried to trade Lefty Gomez several weeks ago . . . Bookie Tim (I don't read the damn paper) Mara sounds like a broken record of George Givot when he lays down the law to his Turf and Gridiron Club followers. He dese, dos and dems the poor little bookies to death . . . Before he took baseball seriously the Cubs' Tex Carleton used to be a rodeo official down in Fort Worth. Was a scorekeeper, setting down the times and records for calf roping and similar events . . . Just for the sake of argument—if the rule concerning the maximum amount of hand bandages had not been enforced, wouldn't Schmeling have been able to hit harder, too?

Crew coaches continue the most hard boiled of all sporting gents before a race and the shrillest squawkers afterwards . . . As usual, Yale supplies the Leader . . . Even though he was quite a foot racer years ago, oblivion seems to be catching up with Bill Bingham, Harvard Olympic delegate . . . Note to the boys of the Huron Baseball club—Sorry, but your card did not arrive in time. Hope Hans Wagner made a swell speech .

Buddy Hassett crooned so handsomely at the birthday party tossed by Mrs. Jimmy (once Lady Eaves) Jordan for Mrs. Frenchy Bordagaray that the Broadway night clubs again are waving contracts at the Brooklyn first sacker . . . Jazz Rogers, once a Baltimore baseball official, now runs a seafood house on Forty-third Street, New York . . . Bobby (Manhattan F. C.) and Tommy (Flushing Juniors) Roberts can hardly help being soccer stars. Their dad was one of the world's best when he played outside right for Barrow-in-Furness forty years or so ago.

What wife of what celebrated ballplayer said—"Hunh, if her husband could pitch as well as she dresses we certainly would have won a lot more ball games this year"? . . . A celebrated sports organization, now having unexpected trouble with several other ventures, will bid for the Dodgers if the price can be knocked down low enough. . . . At least one Hearst A. C. luminary feels that the public has been milked long enough and that the next big show might very well be run without the charity angle.

Marshall Duffield, former Southern California quarter back, is a member of the crew of Adore, one of the entrants in the current yacht race from California to Hawaii. . . . Adore is owned by Lee Tracy of the movies. . . . Dolph Camilli, Phillies' first baseman, uses three gloves a season.

Taking No Chances

Farmer Thomas gave a new hand a plateful of mushrooms for his supper.

"Isn't anyone else having mushrooms for supper?" asked the hand, noticing that he was the only one eating them.

"We like them for breakfast best," said the farmer.

Next morning Thomas went to his new hand's room and asked him how he felt.

"Fine," said the hand.

Returning to the kitchen, and putting his head round the door, he shouted to his wife: "It's all right, Jane, they're not toadstools!"

A Human Zero

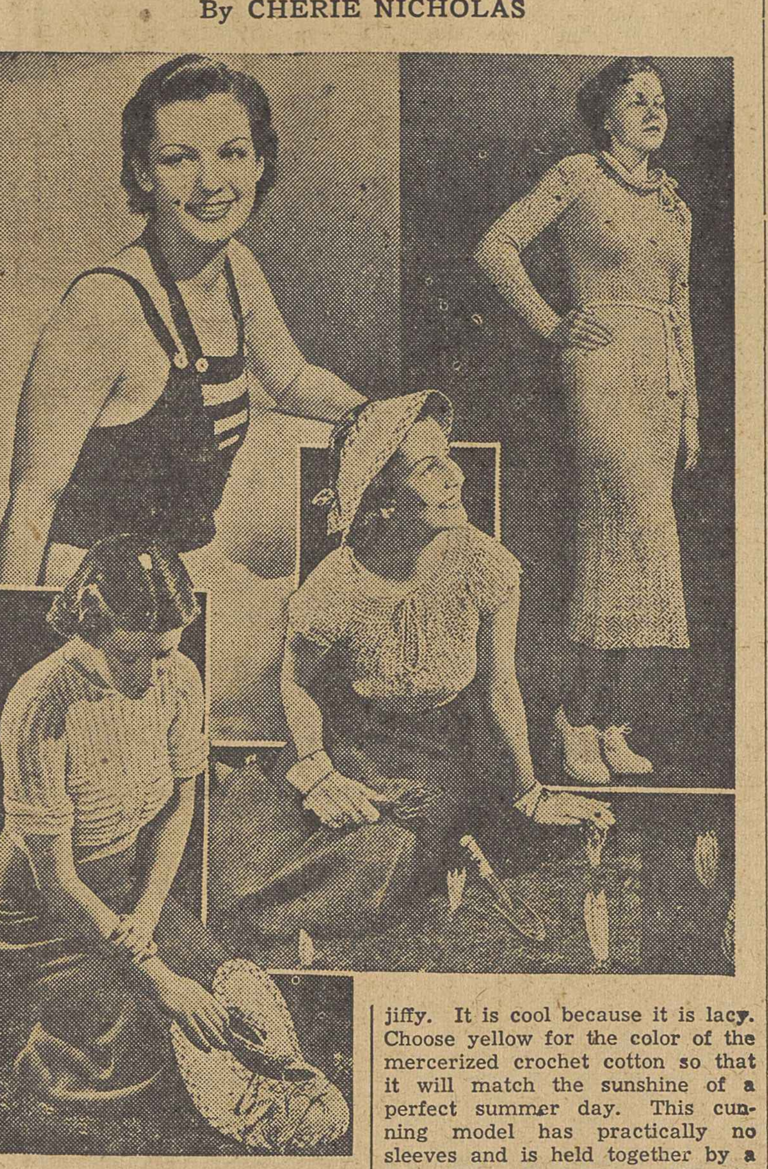
Easy to Knit and Easy to Wear

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



IT IS a foregone conclusion among women of varied activities that knitted clothes are the logical sort to wear at play or at work. This conviction in regard to the practical wearability of things knitted has come about from actual experience, and not from mere theory. And so the clicking of needles goes merrily on.

There is added inspiration, too, in the knowledge that knit or crochet yarns have been brought to such high state of perfection through modern processing that one is cheered with the assurance of dependable washability both as to shrinkage and to color fastness. Thus a new confidence has been created in the minds of the practical minded to the extent that knitted apparel has come to be recognized as staple wear rather than in the category of fleeting moods or fads.

As to the knitted items pictured they are new and they are practical, just such as you will appreciate wearing during week-end and vacation hours. The suntan halter as shown in the upper left of the group will give you all the exposure and freedom you need in beach and summer sports clothes. You can combine it with knitted bathing trunks or gabardine shorts or the popular culotte costume, or wear it with a linen skirt.

Out in the garden on a warm summer day with gay flowers about and skies that are blue it will be the frivolous dainty type of a blouse you will be wanting to fit in with the joyous landscape. Centered in the picture is a pretty blouse that is so simple and easy to crochet you can make it in a jiffy. It is cool because it is lacy. Choose yellow for the color of the mercerized crochet cotton so that it will match the sunshine of a perfect summer day. This cunning model has practically no sleeves and is held together by a drawstring about the neckline in peasant fashion.

To the left below a sheer blouse is shown knitted of mercerized crochet cotton. It is the sort that will add the feminine touch to your mannishly tailored suit or will carry through smartly with your summer linen skirts. The rows and rows of tiny ruffles at each side above the waistline are something new. You will like this styling immensely and so will your friends for it is out of the ordinary. The sleeves puffed just above the elbow are also a smart and very new feature. The neck is high, giving that close-to-the-throat line which fashion decrees this season. This high neck effect fills the opening of a classic lapeled suit jacket to perfect satisfaction.

Cool and lovely in its dainty coloring is the dress pictured to the right. The majority of dresses are knitted but this one is crocheted of soft washable knit-cro-sheen. The work goes rapidly as the stitch is a very open lacy one. A dress of this type should go into every trunk that is vacation bound, for it packs, washes and wears beautifully. The soft rolled collar and the cord and tassel fastenings are style details that give "class" that is recognized at a glance.

Of course you have taken note of the crownless garden hats which the girls in the sweaters are wearing. You can make one yourself and at trifling cost—just one of those big farmer straw hats with the crown cut out and the brim slashed up the back, rounding the corners. Finish all edges with a wide bias-cut binding of gay gingham and add ties of the same.

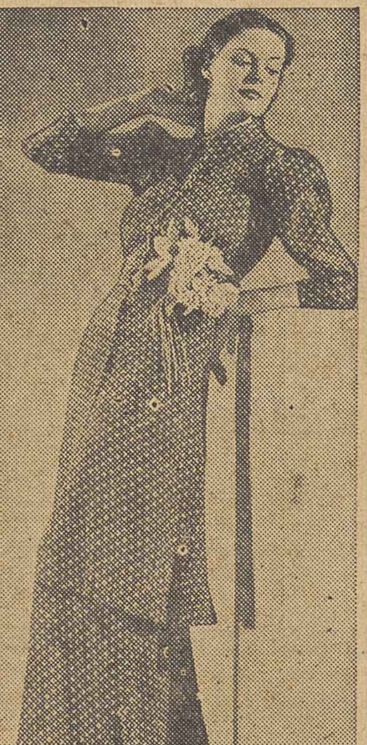
STAR-PRINT CREPE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Attractively studded with the symbol of the Lone Star state, this star print crepe cocktail dress is a special design in honor of the Centennial now being held there. The closely positioned buttons, the tunic silhouette, the fanciful slit hemline, the widened puffed shoulders and the turnover collar effect are all contributing style details. Free-flowing, allowing ease of movement, this smart-looking dress is ideal for semi-formal afternoon or early evening wear.

WOMEN ADD COLOR; DON GAY GALLUSES

Not satisfied with copying men's suits, both as to material and styling, the women are now wearing suspenders. They have discovered that galluses not only furnish an added chance to introduce color and swank to the accessory theme, but these dashing skirt "holder-uppers" are exceedingly practical. In the narrow width sizes, chosen to form a daring contrast with the suit and blouse, suspenders present a smart appearance as they flash out from behind an unbuttoned jacket.

The whole idea, designers claim, is not just another fashion whim but springs directly out of style requirements set by the present trends in women's apparel; mannish suits, hence suspenders! Clipping onto the skirt, suspenders hold this garment in line properly, preventing it from acquiring that ungainly "sat-in" look.

Swim Suits Are Dark and Snug-Fitting This Season

Wine-and-white is the prize color combination for swim suits this season.

Navy-and-white comes next, and then black, in lustrous suits of elastic satin.

Most of the newest suits have a dressmaker look. They are closely fitted, complete with uplift brassiere top, halter necks and sunbacks.

The great-open-spaces fad, which left the tummy bare to the sun's rays, is doing a graceful fadeout.

Negligee Ensemble

In making a silk nightgown, buy enough silk to include a little bed jacket to match it. This can be elbow or waist length and slip on over the nightgowh for breakfasts in bed.

IF YOU'RE interested in watching a career grow, keep your eye on young Larry Blake, who has been giving character interpretations of Charles Laughton, John Barrymore, Edward Robinson and Clark Gable at the Rainbow Room of Rockefeller Center. First thing you know he'll be on the air and in the movies; though he is in his early twenties now, he has made a good start.

He went to Brooklyn college, and has appeared in vaudeville and at smart hotels and night clubs here and there about the country; the Congress and the Stevens hotels in Chicago featured him not long ago. Landing in the Rainbow Room crowns him with success; talent scouts make it one of their first stops in New York, and no visitor wants to leave town till he's been there.

Barbara Stanwyck

Four members of the Abbey Players of Dublin, one of the most famous theatrical organizations in the world, arrived in the United States recently to appear in RKO's screen version of "The Plough and the Stars," which they've often performed on the stage. One of them, Barry Fitzgerald, was thrilled to death—because he'd met James Cagney.

Barbara Stanwyck will be starred in this new Irish picture, which is being made because all of us liked "The Informer" so well. And it will be made by the producers, director and scenarist who were responsible for "The Informer," so it's going to be good.

Seems there's a rumor around that Major Bowes isn't so popular as he once was; people have heard that performers on his programs don't get paid much, but that he gets plenty. And some of the people who go to the broadcasts feel that he isn't dignified enough.

All that may or may not be true—but a high-powered publicity organization has been engaged to change public opinion regarding the genial Major; his new sponsors feel that the public must go on liking him, or else!

Want to know the low-down on how to play bad man on the screen? Noah Beery, brother of Wallace, can give it to you. He's now playing a hired killer in "Strangers on a Honeymoon," at the Gaumont British studios, along with Constance Cummings and Hugh Sinclair—he's been appearing as various kinds of murderers for years and years.

He says that, if a criminal is to seem to be a real man, he must show a streak of human kindness—"A screen killer can mow a guy down with a shot-gun, but he's got to stoop and pat a kid on the head on the way out"—otherwise he's a madman, not a human being.

Columbia Broadcasting System is going to give a lot of young men a chance this summer. With regular announcers going on vacations, others who have been auditioned in the past and are working here and there on the network will be brought in and given a chance to show what they can do in more important spots on the air.

Margaret Sullavan

The most important arm in the movies at present is Margaret Sullavan's. She broke it a while ago, you'll recall. It wasn't healing properly, so she hied her to New York for special treatments. Now she's back again in Hollywood and hopes to go to work soon. But friends have cautioned her to be careful of that arm. Only the other day she was reported as whizzing to the west side tennis matches on a motorcycle with Willie Wyler.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Kay Francis played the role of a famous nurse in her Florence Nightingale picture, and now she needs one; has two impacted wisdom teeth . . . Seems that the story about Clark Gable's knocking out his sparring partner was just a faked-up publicity yarn . . . Joan Blondell and Dick Powell seem to be getting all set for that long-heralded wedding. Have you joined one of the flourishing Lanny Ross clubs? . . . Shirley Temple is cuter than ever in "Poor Little Rich Girl" . . . You'll want to see "San Francisco" because of the earthquake scenes if for no other reason . . . Though Jeanette MacDonald's singing should be reason enough . . . Carole Lombard's illness is holding up "Spawn of the North" indefinitely.

Big-Team Outfit Cuts Power Cost

Reduce Expenses by Using Less Grain, More Pasture and Roughage.

By E. T. ROBBINS, Live Stock Specialist, University of Illinois.
WNU Service.

By combining from five to twelve horses under the management of one driver, farmers operating big-team outfits obtain low cost power ranging from 6.4 cents to 11.8 cents for each work horse hour.

On ordinary horse farms, a work horse hour cost 18 per cent more and on tractor farms 23 per cent more than on big-team farms, based on a survey of horse farms and tractor farms in the corn belt.

The big-team operators worked the largest horses and mules and averaged the greatest number of days of work a head in a year, yet they cheapened their horse cost by using less grain and more pasture, legume hay, straw and cornstalks. They turned their work stock out on pasture at night and on idle days in summer, and in winter used legume hay to balance stalk fields and straw stacks to make satisfactory maintenance for horses.

In farms studied in the survey, average amounts fed to a work horse a year were about 3,200 pounds of grain, mostly corn and oats, and 5,000 pounds of dry roughage, including considerable straw and corn stover. In addition the horses grazed about six months on grass and stalk fields.

Green Strip Plan Halts Loss of Valuable Soil

Some crops are enemies of soil erosion and other crops are allies. Some crops protect and bind the soil and others induce soil losses.

According to the Soil Conservation Service nearly all forage crops—such as alfalfa, the clovers, sudan grass, and lespedeza—check soil washing and blowing.

The Soil Conservation Service is recommending strip cropping to thousands of farmers co-operating in its 141 demonstration areas throughout the country. Strip cropping means planting strips of close-growing, soil-protecting crops on the contour between strips of clean-cultivated, self-depleting crops. Each close-growing strip checks the speed of water running down the slope. The strips of protecting crops catch the soil that washes away from clean-cultivated strips. Combined with terracing and terrace outlet drainageways, strip cropping provides the best protection against cropland erosion in many regions.

Strip cropping also is effective in retarding wind erosion. Close-growing crops break the wind, and in addition help build up fertility and conserve moisture in the soil.

Strip cropping is comparatively new in erosion-control procedure, but is being used on nearly all demonstration projects in 41 states.

Two Tons of Roots

Alfalfa improves soil conditions very rapidly because of its huge root system which penetrates much more deeply than any other legume. Alfalfa roots remaining in the soil increase the humus content and add supplies of nitrogen and other plant foods. The roots seem to improve the physical properties of the soil. This improvement is particularly noticeable on heavy soil. The penetration of the roots into the subsoil permits the entrance of air and water. Dr. C. J. Willard of the Ohio State university found that the average weight of alfalfa roots per acre in six field tests was two tons. A good crop of alfalfa will leave 125 pounds of nitrogen, 25 pounds of phosphoric acid and 40 pounds of potash in the soil. This is about twice the amount of plant nutrients that are contained in a ton of ordinary fertilizer. It is twice as much plant food as red or Alsike clover leaves in the soil and ten times as much as is deposited in the soil by a crop of soy beans.

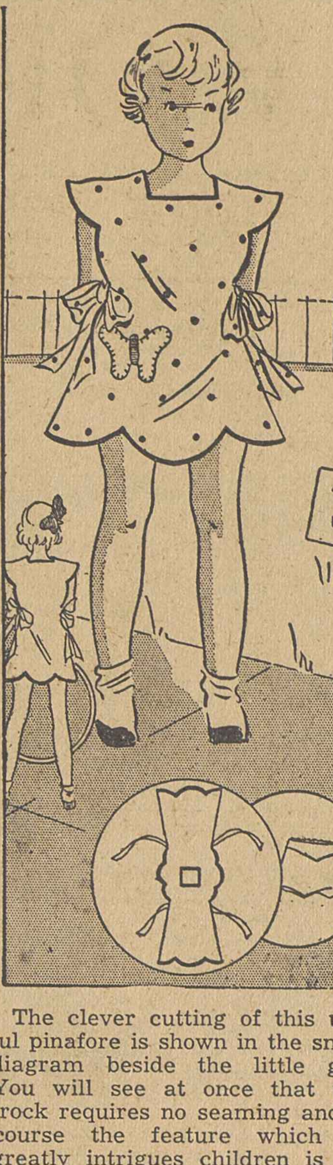
Poisonous Plants

Live stock losses caused by poisonous plants can be reduced if care is taken to keep live stock on pastures that will furnish an adequate supply of good grass. Avoid pasturing where poisonous weeds may be more plentiful than edible plants. Care should be taken so as not to permit live stock to have access to branches of trees of the wild cherry that may have been broken or cut down. Water hemlock and white snakeroot should be destroyed. The outstanding types of field weeds are European bindweed, perennial sow thistle, quack grass and Canada thistle. It is worth while to keep a careful lookout for new weeds. If they are of the perennial type, growing from both root and seed they should be eradicated at once.—Rural New-Yorker.

Feed Combinations

When the dairy farmer has an adequate quantity of legume hay and silage, he has the basis for a splendid ration and has many ways to make a mixture of milk feed and grains that will make a balanced ration with silage and alfalfa. Feeding a cow 15 pounds of alfalfa hay and 25 pounds silage, provides 1.9 pounds protein, almost enough to make a pound of butterfat. It is plain then that the dairy farmer can use most any combination of feeds with this roughage.

Pinafore for Little Girl



The clever cutting of this useful pinafore is shown in the small diagram beside the little girl. You will see at once that this frock requires no seaming and of course the feature which so greatly intrigues children is the butterfly which forms the pocket.

Notice how simple it is to put on, merely slipped over the head and tied at each side. Mothers find it a great help because it can be used as an apron over a frock, which must be kept clean, or worn instead of a frock. The panties to match are an asset—they have the comfortable French yoke top and stay snug but never bind. This attractive design made in cotton, percale, gingham, calico, or lawn would be effective with contrasting binding and colorful embroidery on the butterfly pocket.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1910-B is available for sizes 2, 4, 6, and 8. Size 6 requires 1 1-2 yards of 35 inch material plus 7-8 yard for the panties. Send fifteen cents in coins.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

OH, CHARLIE, THAT'S WONDERFUL! I KNEW IT WOULD COME SOON! YOU'VE BEEN SUCH A DEAR SINCE YOU SWITCHED TO POSTUM!
Paul ARTHUR

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly...try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. Loss By Erosion Is 400 Million Dollars

These articles were written by the members of the Junior High School Group and edited by John Orr, with the help of Bob Anderson, a member of the Senior II Group.

OUR SUMMER PROGRAM

Our group is doing a real job—erosion control. You've been around Montevallo and you know how bad the erosion is. You've noticed the gullies. You've seen the color of the water—water colored by our good soil washing away. Let me tell you what we have been doing. We formed what we call the M. E. C. P.—The Montevallo Erosion Control Project. We worked in groups. One group made erosion traps to find out the amount of erosion taking place.

After checking the traps they found out that a great deal of soil was being lost in cultivated fields, much was being lost from hardened, denuded spots, but very little soil was being lost in grassy places. This drew them to the conclusion that grass or other plants held the soil, and should be planted to check erosion.

But vegetation alone isn't enough. Gullies and ditches need stronger treatment. Another group has been building check dams. They've completed a log dam, a plank dam, and a brush dam. They've started on a cement one. These dams have shown excellent results. After the rain the soil has washed down and has banked against the dam. The ditch is gradually filling up. Later vegetation can be planted and the erosion will be entirely checked.

A third group made a survey of the kinds of trees and plants best suited for this purpose. They considered several points—the ability to hold the soil, rate of growth, and value for fruit or lumber. They found oaks, hickories, and locusts the best trees, and Bermuda grass one of the best plants. Because of lack of time, we will not be able to do much planting ourselves, but we plan to turn our finds over to the proper authorities for later use.

Because erosion is the result of rain, and the amount of erosion is determined by the amount and force of the rain, it is necessary to have weather stations as a part of the control. Weather prediction is also valuable aid in construction work. The M. E. C. P. has four weather stations at their different projects. A check is made twice daily. The average is taken and recorded on a chart. The weather stations consist of two thermometers, a weather glass, and a rain gauge. In the science laboratory there is a hygrometer and a mercury barometer. The barometer is used to measure the air pressure. When it is high the weather will be fair, and when it is low there will be rain. The hygrometer tells the per cent of humidity in the air.

Then they found that the water, which naturally collects behind the dams, afforded an exellent breeding place for mosquitoes. A committee was appointed to control these carriers of disease. Their first job was to read all they could about mosquitoes. They found many means of control and after a careful study decided that a mixture of oil and kerosene was the most efficient and harmless method of eliminating the source of these harmful insects. Two weeks ago the first step for the actual control of mosquitoes was taken. The results have been very satisfactory.

DAMAGE DONE BY EROSION

H. H. Bennete, the Director of the Soil Erosion Service of the Department of the Interior, has said, "Approximately 60 million acres of land in the arid region of the United States, have suffered severe damage from wind erosion. About 5 million acres have been completely destroyed."

In 1901, a dust storm fell over all Europe, destroying about 470 thousand square miles of land. Recent storms is our country have done as much damage.

At the soil erosion experiment station at Temple, Texas, land planted in corn, lost between 5 and 10 tons of dry soil an acre during a heavy rain. Land in oats lost less than two-tenths of a ton of dry soil per acre. Land with a Bermuda grass cover lost only two-hundreths of a ton of dry soil per acre.

Erosion strips off the soil and then much of the subsoil down to infertile, acid shale.

Many thousands of cattle are killed, crops are smothered and human beings become ill because of the dust carried by winds.

Millions of dollars are lost because of reservoirs becoming filled with silt carried by streams and run-off.

EROSION

Erosion is the wearing away of the soil by wind or water. Water erosion takes place in this state more than wind erosion.

After rains you have seen the water running through the gutter which has been colored by the soil. You have also seen soil on the sidewalks. As you have traveled along the roads you have noticed the large ditches and gullies made by the water. You'ce noticed fields cut up by these gullies, fields being ruined for cultivation.

These are all examples of erosion.

Erosion traps are containers which are set in the ground to find out how much erosion is taking place in different types of vegetation.

One of the places we chose for an erosion trap was a denuded spot at the base of a terrace. The next trap was in a level, grassy place. Still other traps were set up in a cultivated corn field.

Three traps were set up in each place. This was done to get the average and a more nearly accurate account of the erosion taking place.

We found by this experiment that much soil is being carried away in a cultivated corn field, less in a denuded spot at the base of a terrace, and very little in a grassy level place.

EROSION PREVENTIVES

The Root Vegetation Pays

Approximately 600 million trees and shrubs are being produced for the use of erosion control projects, by the Soil Conservation Service. A large share of these trees will be used on farms and grazing lands.

Under the Soil Conservation Program, acres too steep or otherwise unsuited for practical cultivation are taken out of crop production and planted in trees. Shrubs also are used to prevent erosion by wind and water.

Shrubs and vines are used in the control of gullies. When planted on gully banks they anchor the soil and prevent it from washing away.

Another use of trees is to make soil. The leaves fall off the trees and gradually decay, producing soil. Although it takes many years for this to be done, it is very useful.

Grasses that are good for holding soil from washing are often serious pests in cultivated land. The most troublesome farm weeds are Quack grass, Johnson grass and Bermuda grass. These are good grasses for use in gullies however.

One of the grasses useful in controling erosion in cultivated fields is the blue grass. The blue grass is the oldest and perhaps best known of farm grasses. There are three species of importance in erosion control. These are the Kentucky bluegrass, Canada blue grass and Poa trivialis.

GOVERNMENT HELPS

Perhaps erosion could not be checked if it was not for government help. Farmers in all regions of the United States listen to the "Farm and Home Hour," which is broadcast at 11 o'clock every day over WAPI (Birmingham). Bulletins issued by the United States Department of Agriculture are guide books to many farmers in the devastated regions of the United States.

The Soil Conservation Service is building dams and planting trees to hold back the soil which is rapidly being washed away. Twenty-seven million, five hundred thousand dollars were set aside for the Soil Conservation Service in 1935. This presented Alabama with two propects, forming a total amount of $500,908.

Congress has passed the Omnibus Flood Control Act, appropriating $320,000,000 to the building of dams, reservoirs, spillways, and levees.

Recently the government has tried a new angle, movies, "The Plow That Broke The Pains," is the title of the picture which was presented Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Strand Theatre. Yes, the government has helped.

NATURE'S BATTLE AXE

(Editorial)

When Nature sharpens her battle axe we should be prepared to fight one of the most serious enemies of man today—erosion. Erosion takes its toll of $400,000,000 acres of its fertile top-soil.

One of the greatest damages of crops in the midwest is sheet erosion. The wind which carries dust often deposits it on healthy young crops, thus blotting them out. This not only causes a loss to farmers but a rise in price for everyone. Erosion caused by water carries rich topsoil, much needed in farming, down to the sea.

The solution to this problem is probably less trouble than the majority of us imagine. Five means of controlling this great enemy of farmers are: Check dams, reforestation, terracing, strip cropping, and contour plowing. It is not so much the cost as the time that it takes to conquer erosion. Something must be done about this and it is up to us to do it.

MOSQUITO CONTROL IS LOOKED INTO

The need for the control of mosquitos is very great in Montevallo. There are numerous breeding places where the harmful malaria and celex mosquitos make their homes. These pests are found most often in ponds, tin cans, and rain barrels.

The Junior Class of the Progressive Education School realized the urgent need of mosquito control in the community. The class decided that a committee should be formed to look into the matter. After a careful study of the breeding places and means of control the committee took the first step to rid the town of this harmful pest. A spray cinsisting of equal parts of kerosene and oil was used on the breeding places. Only one great disadvantage was found with the use of oil, the fact that wind or rain may break the film and so make another spraying necessary. Otherwise the method was very satisfactory. On a second trip to the sprayed ponds the committee found the number of mosquitoes had decreased.

TERRACING, CONTOUR PLOWING AND STRIP CROPPING

Terracing is used mainly in the Southern States. It is of the principal ways used by the southern farmers of checking erosion.

The broadbase graded terrace is used because it is best adapted to the climate and soil conditions. Terraces control the run-off water because they are spaced in a series like steps, down the slope, each taking its share of the water before the total quantity becomes large enough to do any damage.

Contour Plowing

Contour plowing is plowing on the contour or outline of a hill. That is, at a right angle of the slope. It is necessary to plow the slope at right angles to the flow of surface water in order to hold the water long enough to be absorbed by the soil.

"Strip Cropping"

The term "strip cropping", as applied to a cropping practice employed by the Soil Conservation Service, means the production of crops in long variable width stripts, placed crosswise to the line of slope, approximately on the contour. To define the term a little more simply we say it this way. It is strips of grounds that are cultivated, with strips of grass planted between them. These strips of grass stop the run-off and hold the water.

EROSION IS WORST ENEMY OF LAND

Erosion is one of the worst enemies of our land. It has, in many cases, made land absolutely useless.

Erosion is caused mainly by wind and rain. Mr. B. Chambers has just returned from an inspection trip of an affected area in the wind-swept plains. He said thousands of acres have been completely stripped of their top soil, with the damage spreading rapidly. In the Texas Panhandle many fields have lost from several inches to as much as two and three feet of soil and subsoil during recent storms. Dunes twenty feet high, extending in some cases for a quarter of a mile across fields have formed in many places.

Measurements made showed that from forty to eighty tons of soil per acre were blown from the land in two recent storms.

Living conditions in the plains region are very difficult, for the fine dust penetrates even the most tightly closed rooms. In some cases the dust actually has been shoveled from private homes.

From this we see there is an urgent need for erosion control. There are many ways it can be controlled. These are by check dams, reforestation, terracing, strip cropping and contour plowing.

DAMS

One way of checking erosion is by building dams. There are several kinds of dams such as log, plank, brush and cement. In building these dams we have checked quite a bit of erosion.

Our brush, plank and log dams are located near Dr. Harman's home. Our cement dam is in the ditch on King Street.

The log and plank dams, in less than two weeks, have caught over two feet of soil.

The dams have to be put in the gully tightly to keep the water from washing the soil around them. Check dams should have a spillway at the top so the water can go over and the soil can't. In building these dams we have not only accomplished a great deal but we have rendered service to our community.

WHERE IS THE SOIL?

Soil Cannot Last Forever

When this country was first opened to the world the soil was so rich that thousands of cattle and men could live on grassy plains and leave the plains looking as if man or beast had not been there. But because of the soil not being used correctly it has in some places lost all of its value and has caused great arid regions in the Middle West.

During the World War the demand for wheat was so great that people forgot about the value of trees holding soil. They plowed many million acres of land. After the war the wheat was no longer needed, the fields were left fallow, so the rain washed the soil and the wind blew the top soil thousands of miles away. The west was left in a very bad condition.

VOLUME 4, NUMBER 16 — MONTEVALLO, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1936 — SUBSCRIPTION $1.00 A YEAR

Work On Montevallo's New Post Office Begins Aug. 10

WILL BE FINISHED BY FIRST DAY OF JANUARY, SAYS MR. VOLTZ TUESDAY

Mr. C. F. Voltz and Mr. W. D. Owens, representing the firm of Angernon Blair, contrators, of Montgomery, were in Montevallo Tuesday making preliminary arrangements to begin work of construction on our new $52,000 post-office building.

According to Mr. Voltz, actual work will begin on Monday, August 10. Time limit for completion of the job is set by the government as February 20, 1937, but the contractor, according to Mr. Voltz, plans to have it finished by the first of next January.

Incidentally, we might say that those who are familiar with the operations of the firm of Algernon Blair have repeatedly made the observation that his jobs, as a rule, are always finished thirty to sixty days in advance of the time limit.

When interviewed Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Voltz gave The Times the following details of his arrangements for materials and labor which have been consummated on behalf of the contracting firm:

All common brick, of which there are 130,000 to be used, will be furnished by the Montevallo Brick & Tile Company. All Portland cement, 1,800 sacks to be used, will be bought from Montevallo Lumber Company. Thirteen tons of lime will be furnished by Montevallo Lumber Company.

Representatives of the contractor are investigating the possibility of securing the necessary sand and gravel from local sources, which they will do if possible.

The Southern Steel Works, of Birmingham, will furnish 27 tons of structural steel. Truscon Steel Company will furnish 12 1-2 tons of structural steel. Ornamental work will be furnished by the Birmingham Ornamental Iron Company. Marble finishing materials will come from the Georgia Marble Company, Atlanta. All mill work, such as sash, doors, etc., will be furnished by the Southern Manufacturng Company, of Gadsden.

When questioned about labor to be used on the construction, Mr. Voltz stated that if satisfactory local labor is obtainable, it will be used on the job. The lowest wage scale to be paid for any labor will be 30 cents per hour.

The following scale of wages was outlined for a few of the principal classifications: Brick masons $1.25 per hour; carpenters 85 cents per hour; cement finishers 85 cents per hour; plasterers and plumbers $1.00 per hour.

The contracting firm of Algernon Blair holds the distinction of having built more post office buildings than any other firm in the United States. At the present time they're engaged in the following projects; Galveston, Texas, post office, $600,000; Austin, Texas, post office, $300,000; Wilmington, N. C., post office, $300,000; Huntingdon, W. Va., post office, $300,000; Montgomery, Ala. city hall, $600.00; post offices at Ozark and Tuscumbia, Ala.

Graves To Fix The Date For Session

Montgomery, July 27.—As Governor Graves arranged more conferences with members of the Legislature today, high administration sources predicted an early announcement regarding plans for another special session.

Most of the "insiders" continued to predict it would convene in Soptember. They looked for the governor to order special elections to fill four House vacancies in a few days.

Administration leaders said a number of legislators who opposed the administration in the last special session now were ready to cooperate in enacting a financial program for schools, health and public welfare activities.

Governor Graves, J. A. Keller, superintendent of education, and Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, indicated they would ignore a bitter attack directed at them during the week-end by Jeff Beeland of the Anti-Sales Tax Association.

Mr. Beeland charged they are "selfishly endeavoring to put over tax programs that will further jeopardize the interests of those who are paying the bill."

The Greenville merchant, who recently indicated he might consider running for governor in 1938, charged that approximately 31 legislators had been "subordinated" by being placed on the state payroll. He termed Dr. Duncan a "dual office holder," declaring he draws $5,000 a year as president of Auburn and $5,000 as head of the Farm Extension Service.

James Edgar Fancher left Monday for Chillicothe, Mo., where he will enter business college.

Recreational Center For Our Town

COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING POSSIBLE SITES AND BUILDING PLANS

Miss Margaret Hodo, community worker, reports satisfactory progress in the movement to establish and develop a community recreational center for Montevallo.

An interesting outline of the efforts so far made is given by Miss Hodo. In the beginning, a few weeks ago, at the suggestion of Miss Hodo, committees were appointed by the Civic Club and the Business and Professional Women's Club, to consider possible plans of procedure for projects, the most important of which, it was agreed, was a center for community activities and recreation.

The next step was calling of a meeting of the presidents of all organized groups of the community to discuss plans of procedure. In this general meeting the following organizations were represented by their designated officers.

The Study Club, the American Legion, the American Legion Auxiliary, the Parent-Teacher Association, the Women's Missionary Societies of the Baptist, Methodist Presbyterian Churches, the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, the D.A.R., the U.D.C., and the Peter Pan Club.

The group as a whole, constituting this general meeting, was favorable in its attitude toward the development of a community center, if the same were found to be possible as a WPA project, and within means of the community to sponsor.

Two committees were named by the general meetings (1) to see about available property for the location of the community center, composed of Town Councilman, Stanley Mahan, chairman, Luther Shaw and Lucien Giddens; (2) to make rough plans for a proposed building, composed of Mrs. A. W. Vaughan, chairman, Mrs. E. B. Cooper, Mrs. Bessie Merle Elliott, L. E. Shaw and Lucien Giddens.

These committees are at work upon the duties assigned to them. Miss Hodo says that another general meeting of representatives of all the clubs will be held as quickly as the committees are ready to make their reports and recommendations.

Mrs. Zettie Fulford and daughter, Alice Nell, spent Monday in Montgomery.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mahaffey and little daughter, Mary Charles, have returned home after spending their vacation in Hayneville.

Mr. Clifford Fulford and Taylor Hardy spent Tuesday in Birmingham.

Miss Marie Orr is the guest of Miss Helen Nix in Maplesville.

Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Mahaffey returned home.

ELOISE MERONEY ENROLLED AT NORTHWESTERN UNIV.

Evanston, Ill.—Eloise Meroney of Montevallo, Alabama, is among the students who are enrolled this summer at Northwestern University.

Nearly 4,000 students, representing every state in the Union and eight foreign countries, are attending the session. Courses in more than 300 subjects, taught by a faculty of 242, of whom 60 are visiting professors, are being offered.

Miss Meroney teaches English in Alabama College, Montevallo, Alabama.

Plan War Memorial Building

Montgomery, July 27.—Campaign to raise $500,000 for erection of an Alabama War Memorial Building adjoining the State Capitol opened today with appeals from Governor Graves and Mayor W. A. Gunter of Montgomery for state-wide support.

The governor announced he had definite assurance that the Federal Government would make "a substantial grant" for the project, which has been endorsed by the American Legion, Spanish-American War veterans, Daughters of the Confederacy and other patriotic organizations.

Quota for each county has been placed at $6 for each man that county sent to the World War.

In the proposed building, which will conform in architectural design with the Capitol, will be housed the State Department of Archives and History. The governor said a representative of the Federal Government recently placed the monetary value of the department's collection at more than $2,500,000.

FARMERS OF SHELBY RECEIVE PAYMENTS

Farmers of Shelby County received a total of $240,268.76 in rental and benefit payments and profits on cotton options between the time the AAA prgram started in 1933 and February 29th this year, reports County Agent A. A. Lauderdale, who has been responsible for distributing the checks to the farmers in this county.

Total benefit payments to farmers throughout Alabama have amounted to $39,237,230. Statistics furnished by County Agent Lauderdale also show that the total value of cotton and cotton seed increased from $37,402,000 in 1932 to $84,205,839 in 1935, an increase of 125 per cent.

In releasing these figures, Mr. Lauderdale stated that this increase in income has played an important part in increasing the business conditions in Shelby County and in the State of Alabama.

Schools Suffer Due To Failure of Levies

STATEMENT FROM MRS. HILL PRESIDENT OF STATE P. T. A.

Montgomery, July 29.—Alabama schools are suffering more today because we did not levy new taxes to replace losses in property assessments several years ago as did most states, Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers declared in the sixth of a series of statewide radio talks from Montgomery Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Hill explained that the whole nation suffered a drop in property assessments as did Alabama, but that in 1933 and 1934 new taxes to replace these losses were adopted by 28 states. In two years the sales tax alone was passed in 18 states for the benefit of the schools The only important new tax in Alabama was the income tax, which was pledged to debt retirement and ad valorem reductions, not to school operation.

Alabama placed her schools on federal relief while 32 other states adopted new taxes, according to Mrs. Hill. In 1933-34 Alabama received two millions of relief money for schools. No other state got this much, and 16 received no federal money, and the result was that Alabama had the shortest school term in the nation.

The paramount issue facing the state today is "Will Alabama Provide Adequate Schools?" Mrs. Hill declared. This was the issue when the special session was called last spring, but secondary questions served as a smoke screen to confuse the voters. The sales tax, repeal, and expenditures of the Graves Administration were described as secondary issues which preveted attention from being focused on school support.

Well-Bred Cattle Can Be Obtained

Farmers interested in purchasing well-bred breeding cattle at reasonable prices from drought-stricken areas of the West, should make application to county agents immediately, advises R. J. Goode, state commissioner of agriculture.

Full details of how such purchases may be made have been received by the local county agents, from Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the state extension service.

"We are advised that the Surplus Commodity Corporation will buy such cattle of the kind and description as desired by Alabama farmers and ship on Federal bills of lading, consigned to the Alabama Relief Administration" says Commissioner Goode. "The Alabama Relief Administration will deliver such cattle to the purchaser in Alabama and collect for the cattle and will, in turn, reimburse the Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation."

To those having sufficient pasturage and feed, terms may be arranged, either locally or through the Production Credit Associations.

Before any cattle are shipped into Alabama, they will be inspected by Dr. R. S. Sugg and F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialists, to see that Alabama growers receive the kind and quality specified.

Emphasizing the importance of farmers making applications for the desired cattle immediately, Commissioner Goode stated that this plan "gives us an opportunity to secure the best class of breeding stock at reasonable prices."

Baptist Church

Sunday School will be held at 9:45 Sunday morning. At 11:00 o'clock the morning worship service will be held. In the absence of the pastor the pulpit will be supplied by someone to be announced later. There will be no evening service.

HIGHER EDUCATION IN ALABAMA

(By Dr. Arthur F. Harman, President of Alabama College)

DR. A. F. HARMAN

A day or two ago a highly respected public official of Alabama, an acknowledge friend and advocate of public education, desired to know "if it is not true that Alabama has more degree granting institutions of higher learning than almost any other state." My mind turned immediately to a passage from Dr. Howard W. Odum's monumental book, "Southern Regions," with respect to higher education here in the South. Says Dr. Odum: "Certainly, there is no need to repeat the long catalogue of low rankings and deficiencies. Certainly, enough of these facts are available; their continued repetition may well be a smoke screen for realistic action. Of mere cataloguing of mechanical, self-evident indices we have had enough"

Long since I have reached the conclusion that comparative statistics about education do not get us anywhere. About the only person who pays any attention to statistics is the person who quotes them to prove his case. However this may be, it is not true that Alabama has more degree granting institutions of higher learning than almost any other state. It is not even true that Alabama has more degree granting institutions of higher learning than some of the other Southern states or more than many of the other states comparable as to size, population, and resources for supporting education.

The real seeker after information concerning Alabama's status in the matter of support of higher education should read parts of Odum's great book that deal with this question. He should also read "The State and Higher Education", published in the year 1933 by The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in cooperation with the United States Office of Education. If the honest seeker after the truth about the cost of higher education in Alabama as compared with the other states will consult such disinterested authorities as those just cited he can have no doubt left in his mind as to our "low rankings and deficiencies."

The vital question concerning higher education in Alabama is not the total number of institutions but the total bill of expense—the total cost of higher education. In the peak year 1929-1930, fifteenth state in point of population, we were the twenty-third state in total moneys received from the State, counties and cities for the current expenses of our higher institutions. We were the seventeenth state in moneys received from all sources for all purposes exclusive of additions to endowments. If these rankings seem comparatively favorable we must turn to the more reliable index to find that in point of receipts for current expenses of higher education from all sources per white inhabitant 21 years of age and over, Alabama ranks twenty-fifth. Or we must turn to a still more reliable index to find that in point of receipts for current expenses of higher education from all sources per white inhabitant 21 years of age and over, Alabama ranks twenty-fifth. Or we must turn to a still more reliable index to find that in point of receipts for current expenses of higher education from all sources for each white inhabitant 18 to 21 years of age inclusive, Alabama ranks thirty-second among the states. These unbiased figures ought to leave no doubt about the comparatively low cost of higher education in Alabama. But we said a bit ago that statistics do not get us anywhere in education.

Everyone in Alabama who knows anything ought to know by now that support of higher education in Alabama is not excessive or extravagant. Among my newspaper clippings I have two editorial utterances of the past few weeks by one of our leading dailies: (1) "Alabama needs more and better education almost more than anything else"; and (2) "Everyone realizes that the average professor in an Alabama college is underpaid . . . . When a professor is underpaid he is naturally not able to give his utmost to his students. The personnel of any institution or organization is its most vital asset and when the best members are allowed to go to other places because of better conditions the institution is sure to suffer." In another leading daily, concerning education, I find this: "Until Alabama pays the people it hired to work for it Alabama must stand degraded before the world! Alabama cannot afford to starve the cultural leaders who give it life, whose services make it possible for the State to claim respectability among the commonwealth!"

In the face of fact and truth statistically proved and editorially pronounced by our best newspapers, how long shall we continue to starve higher education in Alabama? When shall we rise in the might and strength of our intelligence determined to provide adequate educational facilities from lowest school to highest for our own blood and bone?

I have no right to speak for the institutions of higher learning of Alabama collectively. In the case of Alabama College, the State College for Women, for whose administration I am now directly responsible, it is my duty to say that our endurance is approaching the breaking point. We are not overstaffed at Alabama College. We are in reality understaffed. We are not overbuilt nor overequipped. We are in reality underbuilt and underequipped. We are not overpaid at Alabama College. Salaries of instructors and professors are below the average for the country as a whole. Salaries are in reality below the standards set by the accrediting agencies. But unless action is speedy and effective these modest salaries for the year 1935-1936 are not to be paid. Under our system of laws this deficit at the close of the year is automatically wiped out—education in Alabama is not an essential of government, not according to law. This unpaid bill of expense for education of some $80,000 to $90,000 is a tremendous tax upon a little company of brilliant and loyal men and women builders of culture, who can ill afford to pay it.

At Alabama College our accredited relationships, of which we are justly proud and of which Alabama's young women reap well-deserved benefit, are endangered. Our morale is balanced on a needle's point. Instructors and professors of distinguished ability are being drawn to happier fields. Our existence is not precarious but it is problematical and filled with difficulties. If our men and women of the college staff have continued cheerful it is only because they foster hope and cling to the faith that the constituted authorities will soon awake to their opportunity to provide educational facilities suited to the needs of our glorious youth.

Alabama Near Bottom Of List

Montgomery, July 27.—Alabama is being cited throughout the nation as one of the states doing the least for her children according to a signed statement from the office of Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, last week. Dr. Keller said that data going over the nation from the United States Office of Education show Alabama to have one of the shortest terms, her teachers to be among the poorest paid, and her buildings to be below the average.

Dr. Keller pointed out that education is requesting funds that total $3,100,00 less than was spent in 1929-30 in spite of an 11 per cent increase in enrollment in the public schools and a 30 per cent growth in the colleges. The amount actually received for 1935-36 is seven millions less than was spent in 1929-30.

Public education of all forms, including higher education received $23,325,000 in 1929-30, while during the past year only $16,320,000 was paid. The State is paying about three millions less, while local revenue has fallen off four millions.

Dr. Keller pointed out that the people of the state spent more money on tobacco last year than on education. A "civilization is measured by its attitude toward childhood and youth" he said. "The civilization that adopts a policy of self-indulgence without a thought of the future loses its own soul and signs its own death warrant."

Mrs. W. G. Clements of Carrollton is spending her vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Robinson, in Montevallo this week.

Farmers Receive Benefit Payments

Shelby County farmers have received $29,475.12 in cotton price adjustment payments, A. A. Lauderdale, county agent, said today in advising that farmers who have not already filed application should do so immediately, as July 31st is the last day applications will be received, except on cotton in the 10-cent loan.

Cotton price adjustment payments to farmers of Alabama totaled $2,858, 824.49 through June 30th, according to information received by Mr. Lauderdale, from Dr. L. N. Duncan, Director of the State Extension Service, showing that over $4,000,000 will have been distributed to Alabama farmers by the end of this month.

Wlater L. Randolph, Administrative Officer in charge of the Agricultural Conservation program in Alabama, advises that every effort is being made to distribute all cotton price adjustment checks just as soon as possible. Most of them will be issued by the end of this month, he says.

Four Millions Necessary For Schools

BIRMINGHAM MEN MAKE A NON-PARTISAN STUDY OF SCHOOL FINANCES

Montgomery, July 27.—Education's claim that about four millions in additional school funds are necesary was upheld last week by a non-partisian group of Birmingham men who have made a study of school finances. The survey was directed by Charles F. Zukoski of the First National Bank of Birmingham for the benefit of legislative groups.

The independent study group placed the additional needs of the public schools last year at $2,500,000 for an elementary term of seven months and a high school term of nine. It was declared that approximately the same amount would be needed for 1936-37. Probable additional needs of higher education for normal functioning were placed at $1,300,000, making the total $3,800,000.

The two largest sources of revenue recommended by the group were a tax on liquor under state control and an increase of three mills in local property taxes where it is needed . A tax on luxuries or items not already taxed was also suggested after certain economy measures are put into force.

The economy measures recommended were: 1. Eliminate the convict appropriation of $300,000 from the General Fund, and make up the deficit by higher wages for convict road work; 2. Adopt civil service for state employees; 3. Return to the counties the expense of trial and upkeep of petty criminals.

It was also suggested that the excess income tax not required for debt retirement be diverted to education. At present the income tax is pledged to reduce property taxes after the warrant debt is refunded.

A frank recognition that education must have more money and an insistence that economy as well as new taxes supply the funds was described as a much more constructive policy than to insist that no more taxes are needed. It was also declared that, in spite of the advantage of keeping taxation low enough to encourage enterprise, the importance of education is great enough to justify the providing of more funds by the legislature.

Funeral For Paul Gresky Here Friday

BODY EXPECTED TO ARRIVE HOME ABOUT NOON TODAY

The body of Paul L. Gresky, who was instantly killed in an aeroplane crash at Santa Maria, California, July 23, will arrive in Montevallo today (Thursday). Funeral services will be held at the Montevallo Baptist Church Friday, July 31, at 3:30 p.m., conducted by the pastor, Dr. Fred B. Pearson.

Active pallbearers will be Kermit Woolley, Walter M. Shaw, William Rogan, Edwin Allen, Ashley Jeter, and Milton Orr. Honorary pallbearers will be the members of the graduating class of 1931 of the Montevallo High School of which Paul was also a member.

Surviving members of the family are his wife, Mrs. Mildred Heath Gresky; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gresky, of Montevallo; and one brother, Alan Gresky, of Montevallo.

Accompanying the body on its last long journey homeward from California were the widow, Mrs. Mildred Gresky, and Mrs. John Zarko, of San Francisco, formerly Miss Vivian Heath of Montevallo.

Paul Gresky was 22 years of age. He graduated at Montevallo High School in 1931, where he was a popular student, and outstanding in athletic activities. Soon after graduation he enlisted in the United States Navy, and served four years. Last summer he returned to Montevallo and married Miss Mildred Heath. Re-enlisting in the Navy, he carried his bride with him to California, where he was stationed.

He was a mechanic in the Naval Air Service. He, with his superior officer, Lieut. Oliver, of Maine, were killed instantly Thursday, July 23, when their seaplane, making a cross country flight, crashed to the ground at Santa Maria. Reports of the tragedy say that the fliers remained at their controls after the ship became disabled long enough to steer it away from a huge gathering of people at the Santa Maria Fair, thus preventing the crash from endangering the lives of many.

Alabama College Grads. Get Places

A number of graduates of Alabama College in the Class of 1936 have already been placed in teaching positions in the state. The list includes the following who will teach at the places indicated:

Misses Mildred Baird, Guin; Marjorie Browne, Birmingham; Billie Hill, Opp; Evelyn Houck, Hayneville; Nelle Long, Opp; Nalda Williams, Lowndesboro; Nell Hines, Opp; Ruth Maddox, Cullman County; Mattaline Matthews, Cullman; Elizabeth Youngblood, Atmore; Virginia Tutwiler, Roanoke; Annie Bailey Jones, Holly Pond; Elizabeth Messer, Coffeeville; Lynette Carter, Coffeeville; Ida Kathryn Coker, Talladega; Bert Barnette, Carbon Hill; Nelle Buck, Millport; Eloise Clark, Billingsley; Evelyn Cobb, Cedar Bluff; Stella Etheridge, Riverton; Mrs. Peggy M. Ford, Gold Springs; Effie Lou Gaines, Fairview; Mary Evelyn Bafling, Wylam; Jean Richardson, Suttle; Mary Frances Ward, Akron; Louise Sanders, Pineapple; Evelyn Pond, Woodland; Martha Hanson, Leighton; Eleanor Lewis, Millport; Anna Robison, Union Springs; and Grace Wilson, Cullman. Others are being placed rapidly as the summer advances.

Dr. and Mrs. Riddle Return From Trip

Dr. and Mrs. J. I. Riddle have returned to their home in Montevallo following a thirty-day motor trip through New Mexico and Texas, where Dr. Riddle, a member of the Alabama College faculty, delivered a series of addresses.

His major addresses were delivered at Houston, Texas; Carlsbad, New Mexico; Hot Springs, New Mexico; and Albuquerque, New Mexico. In speaking to state Baptist Sunday School assemblies Dr. Riddle stressed the training of Sunday School teachers, giving demonstration lessons following each address. His subjects on these occasions were "Effective Teaching," "Objectives in Teaching," and "Marks of a Teacher". His appearances at these Sunday Schools was sponsored by the Sunday School organizations of these states

In addition, Dr. and Mrs. Riddle visited the campuses of Baylor University, University of Texas School of Mines, Hardin-Simmons University, Hardin-Baylor University and the University of New Mexico.

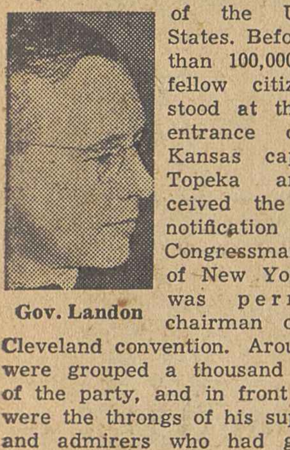
Governor Landon Accepts Republican Presidential Nomination—Organized Labor Schism Widens —Spain Torn by Bloody Civil War.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.



Gov. Landon

GOV. ALF. M. LANDON now knows officially that he is the Republican nominee for President of the United States. Before more than 100,000 of his fellow citizens he stood at the south entrance of the Kansas capitol in Topeka and received the formal notification from Congressman Snell of New York, who was permanent chairman of the Cleveland convention. Around him were grouped a thousand leaders of the party, and in front of him were the throngs of his supporters and admirers who had gathered from far and near to do him honor and to witness the ceremonies. Trains, automobiles, buses and airplanes had been pouring them into Topeka for several days and the gaily decorated little city was crowded to the limit. Everyone was happy and enthusiastic and everyone appeared confident that Landon would be the next chief executive of the country.

The nominee's speech of acceptance was the plain spoken, outright kind of talk his hearers expected. Asking divine guidance to make him worthy of the faith and confidence shown in him, he said:

"This call, coming to one whose life has been that of the everyday American, is proof of the freedom of opportunity which belongs to the people under our government".

Pledging complete adherence to the party platform, the governor said he intended "to approach the issues fairly, as I see them, without rancor or passion. If we are to go forward permanently, it must be with a united nation—not with people torn by appeals to prejudice and divided by class feeling."

Here, briefly, is what Mr. Landon had to say on some of the more vital issues:

Recovery—"The record shows that these (New Deal) measures did not fit together into any definite program of recovery. Many of them worked at cross-purposes and defeated themselves . . . The nation has not made the durable progress, either in reform or recovery, that we had the right to expect . . . We must be freed from incessant governmental intimidation and hostility. We must be freed from excessive expenditures and crippling taxation. We must be freed from the effects of an arbitrary and uncertain monetary policy, and from private monopolistic control."

Relief—"Let me emphasize that while we propose to follow a policy of economy in government expenditures, those who need relief will get it. We will not take our economies out of the allotments to the unemployed. We will take them out of the hides of the political exploiters."

Agriculture—"We shall establish effective soil conservation and erosion control policies in connection with a national land use and flood prevention program—and keep it all out of politics. Our farmers are entitled to all of the home market they can supply without injustice to the consumer. We propose a policy that protects them in this right . . . We propose to pay cash benefits in order to cushion our farm families against the disastrous effects of price fluctuations and to protect their standard of living."

Labor—"The right of labor to organize means to me the right of employees to join any type of union they prefer, whether it covers their plant, their craft or their industry. It means that, in the absence of a union contract, an employee has an equal right to join a union or to refuse to join a union."

Constitution—"It is not my belief that the constitution is above change. The people have the right, by the means they have prescribed, to change their form of government to fit their wishes . . . But change must come by and through the people and not by usurpation. . . . The Republican party, however, does not believe that the people wish to abandon the American form of government."

State Rights—"There has now appeared in high places a new and dangerous impulse. This is the impulse to take away and lodge in the Chief Executive, without the people's consent, the powers which they have kept in their state governments or which they have reserved in themselves. In its ultimate effect upon the welfare of the whole people, this is the most important question now before us. Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

Preceding the notification ceremonies there was a huge parade that included more than a hundred bands and drum corps, an elephant, hundreds of Indians, cowboys and cowgirls in full regalia, and other hundreds of men and women garbed to illustrate the history of Kansas.

FATHER COUGHLIN, the Detroit "radio priest" who in a speech before the recent Townsendite convention called President Roosevelt a "great betrayer and liar," has realized the impropriety of his language. He has published an open letter to the President offering his "sincere apology." The priest also says:

"As my President I still respect you. As a fellow citizen and as a man I still regard you highly, but as an executive, despite your excellency's fine intentions, I deem it best for the welfare of our common country that you be supplanted in office."

Dispatches from Rome said Father Coughlin's speech caused a "painful impression" at the Vatican, and Bishop Gallagher, the priest's ecclesiastical superior, leaving for a visit to the Vatican, intimated he might report on the incident.

IT SEEMS at this time that nothing can prevent the great schism in the ranks of American organized labor. John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, and his followers in the industrial union movement, are determined to go ahead with their plans for the organization of steel workers into a mass union, and now have expanded their program, proposing to unionize thus the employees of steel fabrication and processing plants.

Moreover, Lewis and his associates have declared they will not appear before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor to stand trial on charges of "fomenting insurrection," so it appears the council can do nothing but suspend the rebels and their unions, these constituting about one third of the federation's membership. If this is done, the final decision as to expulsion of these unions will be made by the national convention in Tampa in November.

The members of the Committee for Industrial Organization, the Lewis group assert the contemplated proceedings of the council are unwarranted by the constitution of the federation.

Philip Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers, gave out the news of the CIO drive to gather in the steel fabricators and processors, who number between 300,000 and 400,000 men. As there are about 446,000 employees in the steel mills, the goal of the CIO is now the organization of more than three quarters of a million steel workers. Murray also disclosed that the CIO was looking into the feasibility of organizing the 40,000 workers of the aluminum industry. Drives also have been started in the rubber, automobile, and rayon industries.

SPANISH Fascists and royalists, in rebellion against the leftist government, were temporarily in control of most of the northern part of the country and were moving on Madrid from Burgos and Segovia, threatening to bomb the capital from the air if the government did not capitulate. In Barcelona, capital of Catalonia, fierce fighting was reported, and at the request of the Washington authorities a vessel of the American Export line was hastening there to evacuate Americans, whose lives were in danger. Catalonia had declared against the rebels.

C. G. Bowers

The rebels gained possession of San Sebastian, near the French border, and the loyalists were said to be making a desperate attempt to recover that town. This is the place where Claude G. Bowers, American ambassador, is in summer residence, and as communications were completely disrupted there was much anxiety in Washington as to Mr. Bowers' safety.

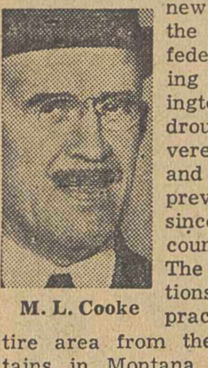
Socialists, Communists and workers in large numbers were joining the loyal troops for the defense of Madrid, and also helped in crushing the rebellion in several towns, according to the claims of the government.

In the south, where Gen. Francisco Franco commanded the revolutionaries, there was almost continuous fighting, and in the engagements between rebel planes and loyal warships some bombs and shells struck the Rock of Gibraltar and others fell close to a British destroyer. The latter fired warning shots and the acting governor of Gibraltar protested to General Franco.

EXPLANATIONS and apologies are not enough for J. Edgar Hoover, head of the federal bureau of investigation, who was angered by the revelation that the doings of his "G men" had been under investigation by secret service men of the Treasury department. His strenuous protests started an inquiry that at this writing is still going on. Mr. Hoover also heard a rumor that some one was probing his "brokerage accounts," and this didn't help to calm him. Said he: "Anybody making such an inquiry is wasting his time. I have no brokerage accounts, so any effort to find them will be futile."

It is admitted by the Treasury that the secret service has no legal right to investigate the actions of any other government department. The inference has been that several slayings by Hoover's men were unwarranted.

SCATTERED rains over limited areas brought only temporary relief from the heat and drouth, and then warm weather started a new advance over the corn belt. The federal crop reporting board in Washington said the drouth was as severe as that of 1934 and worse than any previous drouths since the western country was settled. The serious conditions prevailed over practically the entire area from the Rocky mountains in Montana to the Hudson valley in New York and southward over western Pennsylvania, central Maryland, the Ohio valley, parts of Arkansas, and most of Oklahoma.



M. L. Cooke

It was announced in Washington that President Roosevelt had created a national committee to study measures for remedying conditions in the drouth region through utilization of natural resources. The committee is headed by Morris L. Cooke, rural electrification administrator. Other members are Col. Richard C. Moore of the army engineers; John C. Page, acting commissioner of the bureau of reclamation; Frederick H. Fowler of the national resources committee; Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, and Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator.

Mr. Roosevelt intends to make a trip through the drouth area late in August.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE addressing the International Baby Chick association in Kansas City, discussed at length the drouth situation and the measures taken or contemplated for relief. He suggested this four-point program for the protection of both farmers and consumers:

1. Judicious commodity loans, especially in years of excessive supplies.
2. The ever normal granary.
3. Crop insurance.
4. Government purchase of land which definitely never should have been plowed.

COL. AND MRS. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH flew in a borrowed plane from London to Berlin, and were given a big reception by high Nazi officials, the press and the populace. The colonel was the guest of the air ministry at a luncheon attended by Germany's best aviators. It was expected that Reichsfuehrer Hitler and Air Minister Goering would go from southern Germany to Berlin to meet the Lindberghs before they left the country.

THROUGH an executive order of President Roosevelt, all postmastership appointments in the future are to be subject to civil service examination. The order affects 13,730 postmasterships of the first, second and third classes as vacancies occur. Incumbents chosen for reappointment must pass a noncompetitive examination, as must employees promoted to postmaster. In other cases the examinations will be open and competitive. Fourth class postmasters already were under civil service.

IN OLYMPIA, Greece, scene of the first Olympic games, a torch was lighted by the rays of the sun and a Greek runner seized it and started it on a 12-day relay to the sports field in Berlin where the Olympic flame is to be lighted on August 1. Five thousand distinguished persons were selected to carry the torch, these including King Boris of Bulgaria, King Peter of Jugoslavia, and a long list of princes, statesmen and sportsmen. On the last leg it was to be borne by S. Loues of Greece, winner of the marathon in the games of 1896. A hundred thousand Hitler youths will accompany Loues in a triumphal parade to the stadium.

Five thousand torches to carry the flame were donated by the Krupp works, so each of the bearers will retain one as a souvenir.

EIGHT signatories to the Lausanne post-war treaty have granted to Turkey the right to remilitarize the Dardanelles, and they, with Turkey, have signed a convention covering the matter.

During wartime belligerents will be prohibited from using the straits unless acting for the league or under the obligations of a regional pact of which Turkey was a signatory.

Paris: Many Newspapers
Surprise for Karl Marx
Mr. Eden Was Tired Out
A Big Somersault

This world is really no bigger, now, than the palm of your hand; wherever you are, news comes pouring in—a Pullman car on the Mohave desert has the "Examiner"; flying across, the Levand brothers hurry to the airfield at Wichita with the latest "Beacon"; and on the ocean, a newspaper appears every day; the radio feeds it; in Paris, ten times as many newspapers as are published in New York tell you anything you choose to believe, from editorials written by men who do not know that the royal and imperial French families died and were buried after the war of 1870 to fiery-eyed moderns who think they can graft Karl Marx and Lenin on Jacques Bonhomme, the French peasant, and produce a French Utopia, with a Russian accent and a pair of high boots.

Arthur Brisbane

They do not know Jacques Bonhomme, who bought his land in the revolution at bargain prices with inflated assignats, and means to keep it, nor do they know the small-sized French bourgeois, who thinks more of one four-cent franc than some of our governing geniuses think of a billion 59-cent dollars.

The Marx-Stalin-Lenin brotherhood in America, by the way, does not understand the inside feelings of the U. S. A. citizen, with his bungalow, automobile, radio set, washing machine and furniture, all "nearly paid for."

Send HIM, instead of a bill for his last installment, the statement, "No more private property," and see what he says and does.

You take your choice of dozens of Paris daily newspapers; the wild kind, that say anything and lose money; the tame kind, that say nothing and make money, but very little of it; the mummified kind, that still take "Madame La Marquise" seriously, and think themselves back in the days of old Madame De Deffand and Lord Bolingbroke.

You have, also, newspapers from all the Lilliput countries nearby—English, Italian, German—and the news is in them, only you must know how to extract it. They are queer little newspapers, and if that be provincialism, make the most of it.

In London, for instance, Lord Rothermere's newspaper tells you that Mr. Eden, British foreign secretary, has gone to "a secret destination" in the country for a week's rest.

English statesmen always go to "a secret destination," for reasons unknown to Mr. James Farley, who relaxes at the ringside, or President Roosevelt, who rests fishing, on a battleship, with fifty reporters on another ship, nearby.

You wonder that a man as young as Eden should need a rest. Gladstone, at nearly twice his age, was talking in the Commons at four in the morning—but Gladstones are few, Tim Healys also.

Rothermere's writer thinks Eden is all tired out after his Geneva speech, telling just why England lifted the Italian sanctions. It was he who made a speech recently, just as earnest and much louder, telling why those sanctions must NEVER be lifted. That was turning a big somersault. The English know how to do that, and you are supposed to laugh.

Eden told Baldwin what the doctor said, and Baldwin said, "By all means, my boy, hurry off to a secret destination," and Eden hurried. In America, the business man would say, "Doctor, there are a few things that I must settle first," meaning, perhaps, his income tax. He would hang on and on, and finally go to a really secret destination, in the graveyard.

Driving through Normandy, from Havre, where the ships land, would interest American farmers, especially any whose lands are "worn out" after comparatively few years of cultivation. On lands in this part of the world, wheat has been grown for three hundred years, and today yields better, bigger crops than ever.

In Rome, as in other places on the earth's surface, one city is piled upon another. Dig down through one and the other appears. Invasions, plagues, famines and the grinding ice have wiped them out.

Those that read this today are the descendants of men such as the inhabitants of the Stone age village. And still we are worried, looking down at the enemy, poverty, that may climb up and attack us in old age.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The steel industry of the United States has cast for itself a role in the forthcoming campaign—whether it intended to do so or not. The same is true of John L. Lewis and his segment of organized labor—and it is pretty generally suspected that Mr. Lewis intended to get labor questions well mixed up in politics. It is all more important because of President Roosevelt's attack on "economic royalists" in his Philadelphia acceptance speech.

Labor and Politics

Whatever rights the steel industry has or whatever rights Mr. Lewis and his followers have, the fact remains that they are all knee deep in politics and there is every reason to believe that each side will suffer in public esteem as a result. It means simply this: each side is mixing up problems that are basically economic in character with sordid, even unclean, political motives.

This outburst is prompted by two things: the gigantic steel industry has taken the position that it will defend itself against encroachment of professional labor leaders like Mr. Lewis and President William Green of the American Federation of Labor and their satellites "from any source." The steel industry thereby has thrown down the challenge and now that such a die is cast, the steel industry will be compelled to do a number of indefensible things if it adheres to its program.

The same condition is to be observed in the organized labor situation. Whether Mr. Lewis is willing to admit it or not, his declaration that he will foster, even enforce, his scheme for organizing the steel workers is likely to lead to overzealous acts by his followers—and overzealous and foolish acts all too frequently lead to bloodshed.

* * *

Steel Bucks Unions

For a number of years, steel companies have refused steadfastly to recognize union labor as represented by the professional leaders in the American Federation of Labor. They have attempted to defeat the inroads of that organization by forming what is known as company unions, groups of employees on the pay roll of each corporation. They have accorded to these groups the right of collective bargaining and have insisted that they would deal only with the representatives of the company unions for the reason that they believe they then are dealing with the employees concerned with questions of pay and working conditions in that particular plant. If the national unions were recognized, officials of a given company always have had to negotiate with the expert union negotiators who are paid by the national organization. The results have not always been happy. This combination of circumstances, together with a disposition on the part of the steel companies, I am afraid, to be rather selfish in their attitude toward labor has developed a continuing controversy that has raged over the last score of years.

It happened that the rather insolent announcement of the steel companies, their challenge, came almost simultaneously with the delivery of President Roosevelt's speech accepting the Democratic nomination for re-election. It was in this speech, it will be remembered, where Mr. Roosevelt denounced "economic royalists," in which he resorted to expressions bound to create class hatred and in which he used language that is certainly going to help discredit corporations which are large enough to attract national attention. Of course, I know that Mr. Roosevelt did not have the steel industry particularly in mind in his assault on massed capital but the effect is the same as though he had been shooting directly at the steel industry because of the coincidence mentioned above.

The tragedy of the thing is that the professional labor leaders are going to use the steel industry's challenge politically; they are certain to attempt to gain government interference in their quarrel with the steel industry and, like all such conflicts, fairness on the part of either side to the controversy is likely to disappear because of the political mixture.

* * *

The Real Issue

From all of the inside discussions that I have heard, it appears that the issue between the steel industry and its workers is no longer simply whether the steel industry shall be unionized. It is a question of how it shall be unionized. In addition to this, Mr. Lewis has been chiseling away for several years in promoting his labor union idea of organizing all workers in one unit instead of the craft union idea that is basic in the American Federation of Labor. That is to say, Mr. Lewis proposes to have a steel union or a shipbuilding union or a textile union instead of organizing the workers in accordance with the particular jobs they do, whether they be engineers, painters, carpenters, moulders or any one of the various other crafts.

Since the steel industry has its company unions, there is a conviction in many quarters that Mr. Lewis might well pause to consider whether this is the time to carry forward his program of bringing steel workers under national labor union control. There are those who believe that the company unions eventually will become units in the larger labor structure of the country and, if that be true, it is made to appear that Mr. Lewis has hurt labor's cause.

On the other hand, the steel industry already is under attack by the government. Mr. Roosevelt suddenly "cracked down" on some of the major companies recently, charging them with collusion in bids on government work. He came out with this charge at a time which undoubtedly will stiffen the backbone of the union agitators—and it is not unlikely that by the same token he has stiffened the resistance which the steel companies will use.

Yet, it does seem that the steel companies made a fatal mistake in the pronouncement they have issued. There are too many people who will be inclined to believe that the steel companies have taken advantage of an apparent assurance of collapse of federal supervision. There are few who believe that the federal compulsory collective bargaining statute will last very long but the fact that this statute is due for the discard, it seems to me, hardly warrants the action which the steel companies have taken. They are no more warranted in that than union labor is warranted in taking advantage of the political situation to feather their own nest. A real danger, in addition to this, is that Communist agitators are going to use this situation as one vehicle for spreading their propaganda of dissatisfaction and discontent and Mr. Roosevelt's attack on massed capital unfortunately lends itself to the nefarious schemes of the Reds.

Tax Law Irritation

It long has been said that the method of administering laws frequently has created more dissatisfaction among the citizens than the requirements of laws themselves. Tax laws of whatever kind furnish a splendid example. It has always been true since we have had income tax laws that taxpayers have complained more about bureaucratic regulation, indecision, lack of uniformity in administration and, generally speaking, slow processes of settlement than about the amount they were required to pay. The same is true about our customs laws despite the fact that they affect fewer persons directly.

The other day, the Treasury issued a notice to customs inspectors that was "effective immediately." It was a change in policy respecting the quantity of goods an individual may bring in from foreign shores without the payment of the customs tax.

Since 1798 or thereabouts, there has been a law which permitted a returning American to bring in commodities of whatever kind he desired, except narcotics, up to $100 in value but that law permitted the Treasury to make exceptions. The Treasury notice the other day was an announcement of an exception to this $100 exemption. It said that no inbound traveler could carry more than one wine gallon of liquor without the payment of the customs tax thereon. A practice had sprung up since the import duty on liquors has been made so high of returning tourists bringing in almost the full exemption in liquor alone. Probably the practice was getting very bad and no one questions the judgment of the Treasury in determining policy. But it is the method employed in making this change that has aroused criticism.

In ordering the new regulation "effective immediately," the Treasury forced upon hundreds of travelers the necessity for paying duty on their personal stocks of liquor in what amounts to a surprise order. They had left foreign shores under one regulation and arrive under another.

I have no doubt at all that the Treasury's reason for changing the rule while the game was being played will result in a considerable amount of revenue for the government. But there are many who believe, as I do, that the department in all fairness should have issued its regulation to became effective at some fixed date in the future in order that citizens who must comply with it would be prepared by proper notification of what they were expected to do and the penalties for failure to obey.

The incident to which I have referred is an outstanding example of inconsideration and such things always cause citizens to have a hurt feeling, a feeling that the government changed the rules without consulting those who must obey the rules.

By VIRGINIA VALE

PETE SMITH, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who's made a name for himself with his short subjects, bought a film made by an amateur on sixteen millimeter film, remade it on thirty-five millimeter, and liked the result so well that he is putting on a nation-wide contest for such subjects.

Theater executives and representatives of film-selling companies all over the country will send the best films submitted to them by amateur movie makers to Mr. Smith, and he'll pick the winners.

George Arliss is busy in England making "East Meets West," and his brother, Fred H. Andrews, is equally busy at the same studio. He is advising the producers on Oriental matters connected with the picture. It comes easily to him because he used to be curator of the Lahore museum. The veteran English character star continues to be a favorite with American moviegoers. His pictures have invariably been interesting and the movie public is looking forward to his version of "East Meets West."

Imagine the feelings of one of our foremost movie stars when, as she motored through a small city recently, she saw one of her latest and best pictures advertised on the marquee of a theater—along with another feature, the Louis-Schmeling fight pictures, and the $550 that was the evening's Bank Night award.

"At least," said she when she'd recovered, "they weren't offering people dishes as an inducement to come in and see my film!"

Football fans are going to flock to movie theaters when RKO's "The Big Game" is released. Bobby Wilson, All-American quarterback from Southern Methodist university, has just been signed for it, and along with him will appear five more star football players, all members of Stanford university's championship eleven of last fall. They are Monk Moscrip, Bones Hamilton, Keith Topping and Frank Alustiza.

Ruth Chatterton loves to fly her own plane, and does it very capably. But she's been asked not to go up in her plane while she's working in "Dodsworth"; valuable property can't be risked, you see.

So she went for a whirlwind trip on a motorcycle the other night, and the company had the jitters all over again when word of it came out. First thing she knows, she'll be requested to do all her riding, if any, in a wheel chair.

If you are among the many who never fail to tune in on Colonel Stoopnagle and Bud, you may have wondered why they omitted Mr. Bopp, one of the most amusing characters on their broadcasts, the first time they substituted for the vacationing Fred Allen.

The Colonel had his tonsils out a few days before the broadcast. And he plays Mr. Bopp, which is very hard on the voice.

You may recall that Merle Oberon was slated for "The Garden of Allah" till Marlene Dietrich came along and got the role. Merle was upset, and decided to sue the producers.

The matter was settled out of court, very nicely. Miss Oberon received $10,000, in addition to the $12,000 which she got before she lost the part. And she's to do another picture, "It Happened in Hollywood," which will bring in another $60,000. Not so bad.

Bette Davis has been having her troubles. Her salary and the kind of roles assigned her caused the difficulty, and, after she failed to show up for three weeks to work in "God's Country and the Woman" she was suspended by Warner Brothers.

Gunlock Ranch

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

CHAPTER I

—1—

IT WAS the Fourth of July, and Sleepy Cat—that sunswept little desert town bordering on the Very Bad Lands of the arid Southwest—was dusty.

Dust was not unusual in Sleepy Cat; to be dusty was its normal condition; when not dusty, Sleepy Cat was dead.

"But you needn't be scared of this kind of dust," explained Doctor Carpy, who, sitting with his feet up against the porch handrail of his Sleepy Cat hotel, was talking to Jane Van Tambel. "It's not dirt, this dust—not like your Chicago dust. It's clean volcanic ash that drifts up from the Spanish Sinks.

"But toward sundown when the ash settles over the Superstition Range and the sun shines through it, the air shows every color of the rainbow. That snow on Music mountain"—Dr. Carpy pointed—"looks pink and red and purple. You'll like it out here."

Jane disagreed vigorously. "Oh, no! It's going to be awfully lonesome after city life," she declared positively.

"You'll never be lonesome in Sleepy Cat—unless you're good," observed the doctor cynically. "Otherwise you'll find things generally hum in Sleepy Cat."

"It certainly is lively today," conceded the dissatisfied city girl.

It was. Horsemen, not a few of them cowmen, clattered up and down Front street and River street, chiefly to hear their own noise. And a mob of miners and prospectors from Thief River had come up for the celebration and the horse races.

"Been out on the Fairgrounds yet?" asked the doctor, continuing his chat with Jane. "Seen any of the races?"

"I saw the Indian races this morning—such yipping and yelling! And those Texans that rode into town yesterday—they yelled louder than the Indians."

"That outfit has just delivered four thousand head of cattle to the Gunlock Agency. They checked them in yesterday. Some old-time Sleepy Catters in that bunch—Henry Sawdy and John Lefever made the drive with the outfit—all the way up from the Rio Grande. Hello," exclaimed the doctor lazily, "here comes Sawdy now."

A rather tall man, well rounded out, somewhat bow-legged, strongly built and confident, if not aggressive, in manner, was coming up the wooden steps leading from the sidewalk to the hotel office. Carpy hailed him. Sawdy poised under an overwhelming sombrero, turned and walked toward the doctor and his guest.

"Henry!" exclaimed the doctor. "You blamed old longhorn, I never looked to see you back in Sleepy Cat."

"Ain't no warrants out agin me, are there?" asked Sawdy in calm, blunt, but spirited fashion.

"There must be one or more agin you down along the Rio Grande, Henry," retorted the doctor, "or you wouldn't be so far from the tinkle of the guitar with winter coming on. Meet Miss Van Tambel — newcomer since you went south. Mr. Sawdy, Miss Jane."

Hat in hand, Sawdy stared: "Miss Van Tambel?" he echoed. "Did I get the name right?" he asked as Jane nodded to his greeting.

"You got it right," remarked Carpy dryly.

"Well," returned Sawdy, swallowing, "if you could get a few more newcomers like this, Doc, you'd have a live town. She's no relation to—"

"Gus Van Tambel? Yes," nodded Carpy, easily anticipative. "She's his daughter—only daughter; only child, in fact."

Sawdy swallowed again. "Well, I'll say any man might be proud to claim her. I used to work for your father. Is he alive yet?"

"Alive, yes," interposed Carpy, "but a sick men. Have you had a horse race this morning, Henry?" asked Carpy in teasing fashion.

Sawdy snorted. "Hintin' at that sell yesterday, eh? No horse race at all," he went on angrily. "It was just a plain steal, Doc—beggin' pardon, miss—a steal put up by this saloon keeper, Boland, and a crooked cowman, McCrossen, and that Thief River butcher, Clubfoot."

Jane started. McCrossen was the Van Tambel foreman at Gunlock Ranch.

"Tell us about that race," interposed Carpy.

"Well," began the cowman reluctantly, "night before last we bedded the herd down about three miles below Thief River town. About sundown Clubfoot rode into camp on a good-lookin' bay mare. I didn't see him, I was on guard. He said he he was on his way up to Sleepy Cat. John Lefever, our foreman, invited him to take supper and bunk for the night.

"He said he was a prospector goin' out on the Gunlock range. He started talkin' horses and said he wanted to sell his pony—claimed he had the fastest mare along the Sinks. He blowed about that pony until John got touchy about his own little chestnut gelding, and John finally promised him a race when we got to Sleepy Cat. Nobody in our bunch not havin' seen the fellow's horse run, John waited till everybody got to sleep and takes Clubfoot's mare off her picket rope for a tryout. Shucks! She had no speed at all.

"Next day they arranged the race, and we boys put up our dough—every dollar in the outfit. What do you think of us for suckers? When the race started, that cussed prospector—beggin' your pardon, miss—run in a ringer on us—another bay mare, looked exactly like the one he rode into camp. That mare run like a streak—covered five hundred yards before John's gelding got his feet picked up. Then we got the story.

"Clubfoot turned out to be a sideswipe for this saloon keeper Boland here."

"Henry, I thought you and John were too wise to get stung like that. How you going to get even? Smashing glassware won't do it."

"I don't know, Doc, I don't know."

"Henry," observed Carpy, "what you mean is you know but you won't tell."

"The races ain't all over yet. Then there's the ropin' and throwin'—"

Carpy nodded.

"—'nd the trick riding. All I'll say is—" Sawdy hesitated.

"Say all you want to before this young lady. She won't spill. I'll guarantee her," said Carpy.

"Well, if that's so, miss—and you certainly look up to the brag—I'll say McCrossen, that new foreman of yours, was in on that skinnin' we took—at least, we think so. That's nothin' in the world against you."

Jane spoke frankly: "Oh, I'm glad, Mr. Sawdy, you don't bring me into it, for I really don't know any more about it than a babe unborn."

"I hear McCrossen is quite a rider," observed Sawdy tentatively.

"That's what everybody says," returned Jane. "He certainly is wonderful in the saddle."

Sawdy nodded wisely, as if merely to say, "It is well."

"Sawdy," demanded Carpy, "what you got up your sleeve?"

"Nothin' at all, Doc—not a thing in the world."

"You can't fool me, you old desert rat," persisted Carpy.

"Well, Doc, since you're so smart, will you back what I've got up my sleeve for fifty dollars? Will you do it, Doc? I've just come from Jake Spotts' place. He lent me fifty—"

Carpy reached into his trousers pocket and drew out a roll of bills. "Go along, you critter!" he exclaimed indignantly. "I might have known your long-winded story would cost me money. But I didn't look for it to be fifty dollars."

"Make it a hundred, Doc," ventured Sawdy in his rich, persuasive voice.

"Not on your life, Henry. You'll lose this, anyway."

"Go hang! I haven't got it to spare. Want to do some betting myself."

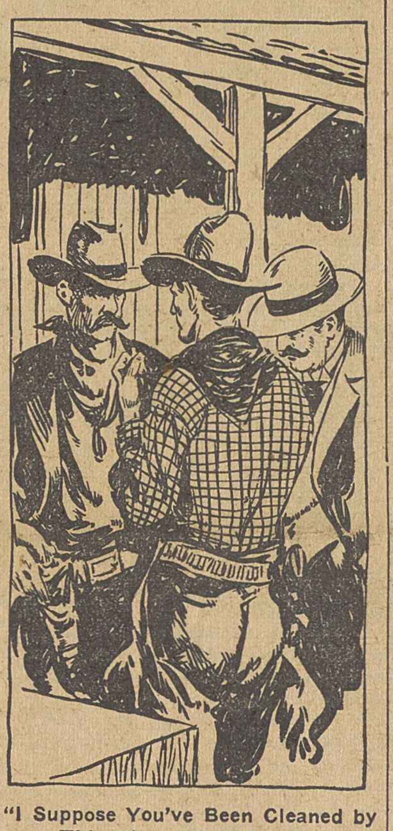
Jane held out her purse. "Why, here, Mr. Sawdy. There's over fifty in this that I'm sure I don't need. Take it."

Sawdy stared dumbfounded. "I couldn't do that, young miss. I couldn't."

Jane, still smiling, had opened her purse, taken from it five gold eagles, and held them out. "If you refuse to let me accommodate you, it won't be much of a compliment to me," she protested.

"I know blamed well I ought not to do it," muttered the big fellow. "Doc—what shall I do?"

"Take it!" said Carpy gruffly. "You'll lose it—then you can work it out for Jane on the ranch this summer—she's running things out there while her father's sick."



"I Suppose You've Been Cleaned by This Sleepy Cat Bunch."

Sawdy reluctantly let the trim young lady drop the gold pieces into his horny hand—she laughing,

"But if you go to work at Gunlock," remarked the doctor, "make no mistake. Keep off the grass. Don't aspire to the hand of this young princess. I've got a bid in there myself."

"Why, doctor!" exclaimed Jane, all rosy in protest and rising to go.

"Just the same, girl, any man that bids for you has got to face a major operation at my hands. Will you be back for dinner?" he asked of Jane as she made ready to leave. "We're having watermelon today."

"I'm not going to miss that. But I must go over to Rubido's to order some supplies. By the way, I forgot to ask: What shall I do with that medicine you gave me last time?"

"Throw it out the window and ride horseback. You're coming along wonderful for six weeks out here."

"Hold on, miss, just a minute, please," begged Sawdy as the party broke up. "You'll be at the Fairgrounds this afternoon for the races?"

"Of course I'll be there," responded Jane pertly.

"You've done me a kind, good turn. I want to do you a good one. This goes for this old medicine man, too." Sawdy nodded toward the doctor.

"What is it?" asked Jane coolly. Sawdy was solemn.

"You won't neither of you spill it? All right. Don't bet no money on the trick ridin' this afternoon."

By two o'clock that day the Fairgrounds were sizzling hot and tremendously crowded. Frontier Day celebration was combined with the national holiday and the county fair of a county bigger than most eastern states. A gathering of horsemen, cowmen, mining men, railroad men, gamblers, prospectors, desert rats, and frontier adventurers milled about the rickety little grandstand.

On an occasion such as this, when a local celebration combined with the arrival of a goodly outfit of cowmen, there was reason to look forward to a lively round-up by proprietors of thirst parlors, gamblers, clothiers, merchants, and barbers. On this particular Fourth of July there was every reason but one for such a hope—the cow outfit had been thoroughly skinned by the advance guard of Sleepy Cat sharpers in the person of Harry Boland and Clubfoot and Company.

In consequence the Circle Dot boys, as Sawdy's outfit was known, made no especial contribution to the Fairgrounds festivities; they were present but not betting.

Sawdy, long-faced and solemn, neglected to pull at his sweeping mustachios—a sure sign of mental depression. John Lefever, rotund and naturally jolly, Circle Dot foreman, only whistled softly.

The noon train from Medicine Bend brought a few more visitors to the Fairgrounds. These made just about a load for Jim McAlpin's bus. To one Medicine Bend man, Jim paid particular deference, calling him frequently by his first name.

The moment McAlpin's favored passenger had paid his fare, tipped the Scotch liveryman generously, and walked toward the grandstand, McAlpin confided to those about him that this was the celebrated Harry Tenison, big-time gambler from Medicine Bend, who talked of opening a place in Sleepy Cat.

Sawdy and Lefever were in moody confab behind the grandstand when the dapper Tenison approached, picking his steps with disgust through the dust. Sawdy's eyes lighted on the new arrival first. He gave a great start.

"Harry!" he cried. "For the love o' women! Of all men you're sent this minute from heaven."

"How much is this goin' to cost, Henry?" asked Tenison, pausing to dust his shoes with an immaculate silk handkerchief. Lefever, too, beamed on Tenison.

"Harry!" he shouted. "For the love o' Mike, how come?"

"Two of you," commented Tenison calmly. "The clouds are gatherin'. I suppose you've been cleaned by this Sleepy Cat bunch and want me for a pay-off."

"Harry," murmured Sawdy, lower-voiced and very sober. "I'll admit I couldn't have said it better myself. Come this way. Talk low."

The three found a quiet spot back of the grandstand. The story of the cowmen was soon told. It went into sympathetic and unhesitating ears. As with all gamblers who play big, Tenison's mind was soon made up. "I don't bank much on sure things; but you two seem to know what you're talkin' about. How much do you boys want?"

"A thousand, Harry."

Tenison thought a minute. "Is Jake Spotts in town?"

"Here on the grounds, if he's not up at the saloon."

"Hunt him up. He'll have a few hundred. I've got a few in my pocket. Where's the boy that pulls this stuff for you?"

"Come over to the horses and meet Bill Denison. We're keeping him dark. They think he's a hostler."

gripping . . . enthralling . . . a racing story of love and hate in the western mountains . . .

That was old Doc Carpy's opinion of Jane Van Tambel, Eastern girl who came to Sleepy Cat to manage her ailing father's ranch. But Jane proved herself capable. You'll follow with intense interest this truly unusual Western novel written by a master of Rocky Mountain fiction, Frank H. Spearman. You'll be swept into fictionland by the intense story of a girl who found that her father was a despised crook, and that his mortal enemy was the man she loved!

Such was the situation facing Jane Van Tambel as her struggle for happiness began. Read how she battled both mankind and cruel nature, how she fought another war within her own heart . . . a war between one force that told her to love Bill Denison and another that asked her to respect an undeserving father.

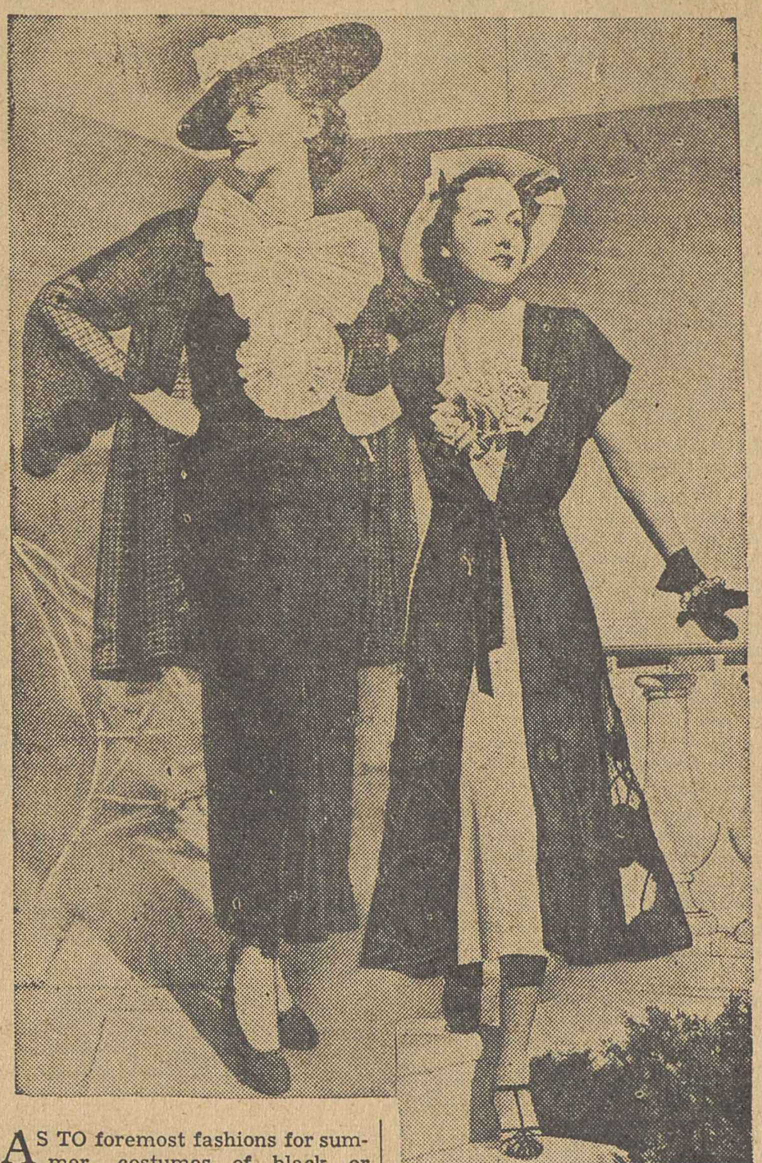
Black or Dark Silk Sheers Vogue

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



AS TO foremost fashions for summer, costumes of black or dark sheers such as silk chiffons, marquisettes, organza and handsome nets are carrying first honors.

Your wardrobe may be as you supposed replete with chic, but if it be sans one of the beguilingly styled dark sheers better send an immediate S.O.S. call in to your dressmaker or to your smartest store in town or to whoever caters to your sartorial needs. Telling you, we are, that without a suit or a dress of some one or other of these silk sheers or nets in black or in brown, navy or dubonnet red or deep purple dye your summer dress program will be sadly lacking indeed. We might add that black is the favorite of them all.

Especially are fascinating things being done with redingote fashions made of silk sheers that are thin to the point of transparency since they are designed to be worn over either a dress or slip in a solid bright color or a gay print. See the charming and chic ensemble to the right in the picture. It conveys the idea most eloquently. Here a black silk chiffon redingote with the new circular-cut hemline is posed over a pink silk moire slip. Very French in feeling is this most winsome 1936 afternoon dresses. Note the black silk taffeta applique of roses on the redingote. The corsage of huge twin roses accurately repeats the pink tone of the silk slip. Narrow velvet ribbon ties about the waist and trims the very lovely pink panama hat worn with this costume.

While we are on the subject of black silk chiffon and its importance in the summer style picture it might be well to mention the new skirts of black chiffon which are the smartest ever for evening, worn with a tunic or jacket-blouse done in flamboyantly colored flowered print. These skirts are cut full circular and their hemline measures yards. Yet with all this fullness you are not made aware of the fact as the skirt is styled to fit about the hips in slenderizing sleekness gradually and gracefully leading into soft undulations about the hemline. You will find a skirt of this description to be a real asset in your summer clothes collection. Have in reserve a shirtwaist blouse of black net also a decollette bodice of self black chiffon—an economical way to acquire a wardrobe of smart formals for varied occasion.

If you have an urge for color you will find joy in a costume that poses a redingote of dubonnet red silk chiffon or organza over a slip of gorgeous flower print. The color effect is beyond the telling in word or picture. It requires the evening lights to glorify it.

Could anything in the way of a daytime costume be smarter and more to be coveted than the jacket-and-dress twosome to the left in the illustration! If so we have not discovered it. You may be interested in knowing that this ensemble is of royal lineage in that it is a creation by no less a noted designer than the personal dressmaker to Queen Mary. It came over on the R. M. S. Queen Mary as did a whole fashion load of stunning modes. The dress is perfect for afternoon wear on warm summer days, made as it is of cool Tudor-brown twytex net. The finely pleated and tucked jabot is of white silk net, and the loose coat is of brown crossbar twytex.

The story of net as it unfolds in the summer style program is proving a most fascinating one. Nothing smarter or more practical has centered the style stage than the jacket dresses tailored of cool and comfortable and chic looking nets either in black or the stunning new rich dark colors.

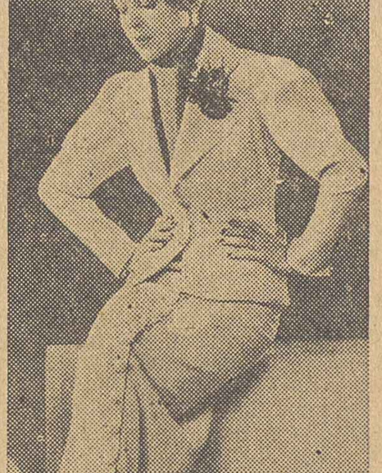
DINNER SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



The vogue for tailored clothes goes into the evening. Very stylish indeed is the young woman in the picture who wears a strictly tailored dinner suit with its 1890 jacket and buttoned skirt. It is fashioned of creamy white Mt. Airy cloth.

QUILTED COATS FOR BEACH WEAR LATEST

A coat which looks as though it were made from the family's heirloom quilt will go a long way toward creating a sensation on the beaches. Dressier versions that have intricate quilting patterns are destined for wear over summer formals.

Large floral motifs which have bright colors on white or pastel backgrounds are the most fashionable for beach wear. Some of these coats are made of printed cottons which have the designs outlined with quilting, while others are pieced together in the regulation quilt manner.

The quilted coat of plaid woolen, very light of weight and quite gay in its color combinations, is shown for vacation wear, while the taffeta and hand-blocked linen versions are evening favorites.

Flowers Are Dramatic

White flowers on a black gown are dramatic; and on a white gown they emphasize an effect of simplicity. A spot of brilliant scarlet on a white gown is gorgeous. Color harmony may be achieved by wearing flowers that blend into the general tone of the costume, or with a contrasting complementary color.

Flowers Deck Shoes

Shoes have become so fancy that one widely-known Paris house shows street shoes trimmed with applied flowers in contrasting colors and a belt and purse to match.

The Montevallo Times

PUBLISHED ON THURSDAY

W. M. WYATT, Publisher

Subscription - - - - $1.00

Published weekly in the Masonic Building on Main Street. "Entered as second-class matter, April 1, 1933, at the Post Office at Montevallo, Ala., under the Act of Congress, March 3, 1879."

In case you run afoul of any of Alabama's highway officials, drop them a gentle hint that Montevallo is not yet fully satisfied on the paved road subject. We want some paving down toward Centreville, at least to the Bibb County line.

OUR NEW POSTOFFICE

Mr. C. L. Voltz, representing the contracting firm of Algernon Blair, Montgomery, was here Tuesday initiating the first steps toward construction of Montevallo's new $52,000 postoffice building.

Work will actually begin on Monday, August 10, it was stated. February 20, 1937, is the time limit for completion. But the Blair tradition is to finish a job ahead of schedule, and Mr. Voltz said we will have the building finished by January 1, 1937.

While here Mr. Voltz made arrangements for the purchase of all materials possible from local firms. Luther Shaw and Fred Frost will get a lion's share of the business, we are glad to learn.

All available and capable local labor will be used by the contractor, it was stated by Mr. Voltz. Therefore, the construction of this building with its attendant expenditure of money for materials and labor locally, will stimulate business over the period from now to the end of the year.

We feel justified in predicting that the Montevallo post office building will be the finest that has been erected in a town of this size in Alabama.

PUTTING IT TOO STRONG

Jeff Beeland, head and spokesman of the Anti-Sales Tax League of Alabama, is reported as saying that Dr. L. N. Duncan of Auburn, Governor Bibb Graves, and State Superintendent of Education, J. A. Keller, constitute a triumvirate which places selfishness above the welfare and destiny of more than 2,500,000 citizens of Alabama.

That is putting it too strong for us Jeff. We do not believe that any of the gentlemen named in the charge are guilty of any degree of selfishness in their attitude toward the problem of public education in Alabama.

We would grant them as much sincerity and honesty of purpose as we would grant to Mr. Beeland and the anti-sales tax group.

It is merely a difference of opinion in the same sense that so many other individuals and groups have a difference of opinion about our school problems.

Certainly it will not add much weight to the arguments of Mr. Beeland for him to make such drastic charges against men of the reputation and character of Dr. Duncan, Governor Graves, and Superintendent Keller.

Alabama must have a leader, a statesman—one who can and will take education out of our political campaigning. We should not listen to and look to leadership that would assume to solve our educational problem by putting it deeper into politics.

The best ambition we can have for the next few years is to get our schools out of politics and keep them shielded from the darts of politicians. We might well look to the accomplishment of this, even if we were to forget entirely for a time about the election of somebody to office.

PAUL GRESKY

Montevallo is full of sorrow this week as the many friends of Paul Gresky await the arrival of his lifeless body from California, where he met tragic death last Thursday.

Paul was a native son of this community. He grew up here, went to school, and gained a place of admiration, love and respect in the hearts of his home town people.

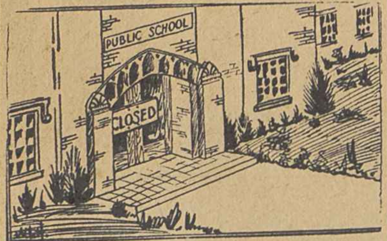
As a child he made toy airplanes, and dreamed of the day when he would fly. His daddy sought to dissuade him—but it was Paul's ambition, and he flew—to his death.

Upon graduation from high school in 1931, he enlisted in the United States Naval Air Service, where he might have the broadest possible field in which to exercise his abilities in aeronautics.

His friends followed his career with keen interest. They are saddened at his death. But their sadness is ameliorated by the fact that Paul died the hero that was his nature.

He might have saved himself, but to do so would have jeopardized the lives of others. He stuck to his plane until he knew its crash to the earth would not endanger those below. Then it was too late for him.

Montevallo will pay her last respects to Paul tomorrow when his mortal remains draped in the flag of his country, will be planted neath his native sod.



ALABAMA SCHOOL FACTS

In 1933-34 Alabama got two millions of relief money to run the schools.

No other state depended upon the federal governmnet to that extent, and 16 got no federal money at all.

During 1933 and 1934 new taxes to replace school losses in property taxes were adopted in 28 states.

The sales tax alone was adopted in 18 states to provide school revenue in 1933 and 1934.

Alabama's schools are suffering more now because we depended upon relief money while other states were adopting new taxes.

Alabama had 23 per cent less revenue available for schools in 1934 than in 1929.

In 31 states the drop was less than in Alabama, largely because of new taxes for schiols.

Six states—California, Illinois, Louisiana, Missouri, Oregon, and Tennessee—were able by new taxes to actually provide more revenue for schools in 1934 than in 1929.

It was apparent all through the Miller administration that school revenue was insufficient.

Governor Miller supported a sales tax for the schools, although his is known as an economy administration.

The sales tax was defeated by only one vote in the 1933 Miller special session of the legislature.

Between 1929 and 1934 state support of schools increased and local support fell in 34 states.

In that time Alabama decreased its burden by one-sixth, throwing the load on the counties.

The Minimum Program increases the state's percentage, doing what 34 other states did before 1934.

WE DENY THE CHARGE

The Times Editor can pass a lot of things—take them with a grain of salt, so to speak. But when a prospective candidate for Governor (or anybody else) says that Albert Keller is selfish in his service to education, we then and there become ready to offer protest and resentment. If Albert Keller were selfish, he never would have made the sacrifices he has made for the cause of education. When he finished high school in 1913, if he had been selfish, he would not have elected a career as a country school teacher upon which to build his future.

The same is true of hundreds of other educators who have passed up opportunities for selfish gain, and are sacrificing even now to hold our disgracefully inadequate school system together, as Dr. A. F. Harman says, "because they foster hope and cling to the faith that the constituted authorities will soon awake to their opportunity to provide educational facilities suited to the needs of our glorious youth."

Don't try to tell us that Albert Keller and those who stand with him in defense of our schools are placing selfishness above the welfare of our youth who cry for educational opportunities.

We know how Keller got his education. We know where he came from, and we know how his heart beats.

He can be depended upon in anything, and Alabama will not go wrong to follow his leadership in school affairs.

It is to be reasonably expected that men will differ with him in opinions, but it is unreasonbale to make the silly charge that he is actuated by selfish interests.

NOTICE

Default having been made in the payment of the 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 annual instalments of Sanitary Sewer System Assessment No. 112 against Eugene Shortridge levied under Sanitary Sewer Ordinance No. 1 of the Town of Montevallo, Alabama, adopted by the Town Council of said Town on December 1st, 1925, which assessments are past due,

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, C. M. Gardner, Town Clerk of the Town of Montevallo, Alabama, the officer designated by the Town Council of said Town to collect such assessments, will, at the front steps of the Mayor's office in said Town, within the legal hours of sale, on the 8th day of August, 1936, sell, at public outcry, to the highest bidder, for cash, the following described property in said Town, against which said assessment was made, for the purpose of paying and discharging said assessment, viz:

A lot or parcel of land the north side of which is 455 feet south of the S. P. L. of County Road, and fronting 97 feet on the west side of Main Street and running back of uniform width and at right angles thereto a distance of 100 feet.

Said assessment was for $338.37 was payable in ten annual installments of $33.84 each, with interest on deferred payments at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable annually, and the first installment was due on the 3rd day of February, 1927, and one installment on the 3rd day of February of each year thereafter up to and including February 3rd, 1936.

This the 10th day of July, 1936.

Montevallo, Alabama.

State Capitol News

Montgomery, Ala. — Governor Bibb Graves has maintained a commendable 'hands-off" policy in the disposition of Alabama's sporadic labor disturbances, while at the time avoiding partisian disputes.

This has been possible despite the necessity for summoning armed guardsmen to protect life and propery during the coal and red ore strikes in Jefferson and Walker counties, the dock workers strike at Mobile and the textile workers difficulties last Wednesday at Talladega.

Aided by the State Labor Board, headed by Commissioner Robert K. Moore, the Governor has been able to effect peace between the warring factions, establishing a high "batting average" as a mediator.

The few acts of violence which have thus far occurred were between strikers, so-called "company" guards and civil authorities.

The "red ore" strike which threatens to be nation-wide, is the most serious threat during the Governor's administration. However, he announced last week officials of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company at Birmingham had agreed to a week's postponement in eviction of striking miners from company houses.

He also requested additional time for negotiations with both sides in an effort to end the warfare, now in its second month. The walkout occurred after the company announced a time wage basis would be abandoned for a tonnage scale rate of pay.

Relatives of World War veterans killed or injured in the Florida hurricane of 1935 are urged to file benefit claims by W. R. M. Plamer, state compensation director of the WPA.

Palmer said claimants need not file a formal notice, but could protect their rights by applying to the U. S. Employees Compensation Commission at Washington, or to WPA compensation officers at Birmingham, Montgomery, Gadsden, Tuscaloosa, Decatur and Mobile.

This application, he said, should state the name of the disabled and deceased veteran, the name, address and relationship for whom compensation is claimed, and the same data on the person filing the claim.

Electricity consumers in 21 south Alabama towns won rate cuts from 10 to 25 per cent through negotiations completed with the Alabama Public Service Commission and W. M. Brunson, peoples attorney.

The revision approved by the commission following conferences between Brunson, Alabama Power Company officials and municipal officials will become effective August 1.

Towns benefitting were: Andalusia, Ariton, Banks, Belleville, Brantley, Brundidge, Olio, Dozier, Elba, Excel, Frisco City, Gantt, Glenwood, Goshen, Kingston, Milo, Opp, Red Level, Repton, River Falls and Samson.

With a few accounts yet to reach the gasoline department of the Tax Commission, collections for July on June sales have already passed the million dollar mark, according to announcement last week by Henry S. Long, chairman of the commission. At the close of business Saturday, collections amounted to $1,007,108.40, against a total for July last year of $846,378.84.

This means each county will receive for its road fund approximately $7,500 immediately after the close of this month. The other half of the funds go into the State Highway Fund to finance the $25,000,000 bond issue floated in 1927 for road building, and to build, as well as maintain public highways.

Collections in June for May sales this year amounted to $979,087.66.

Ad. Gen. John C. Coleman of the Alabama National Guard, left late last week for Ft. Oglethorpe, Tennessee, for two weeks encampment where he will join his headquarters troop.

The Cavalry Brigade from Birmingham opened its encampment there July 12 before other encampments were postponed because of the infantile paralysis threat.

HOME DEMONSTRATION MEETINGS POSTPONED

All regular monthly meetings and community meetings of the Home Deonstration Clubs are cancelled indefintely until the epidemic of infantile paralysis has subsided. The meetings will be resumed as soon as advised by the county health officer.

The plans for the community picnics for the month of August are also cancelled until further notice.

May we encourage you to cooperate with your health officer in the precautions for this dreaded disease.—Marye Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent, Shelby County.

WRIGHT HOME DEM. CLUB

Members of the Wright Home Demonstration Club met at the home of Mrs. Tom Morris on Thursday, July 23, and had a very good demonstration on food preservation which was given by Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen, agent. Corn was the only vegetable canned, as the drouth has affected our gardens, but we left the meeting with a determination to plant a fall garden and yet, fill our jars as well as pantry shelves.

A report was given on the rally held at the court house and committees were appointed to serve on the following ways and means campaign for new members. And too, we made plans for the annual club picnic to be held in August.

The attendance was not so good on account of infantile paralysis which has reached our county already. We hope to have a better attendance at our next meeting.

We want to say here that Mrs. B. L. Jones, one of our foremost club members recently won a dollar for the best receipe for chocolate chiffon pie in the Birmingham News. Below is the recipe given by Mrs. Jones. It will be remembered that we have just had a demonstration on making pies and desserts in our club work. So lets get busy ladies and really make our club work worth while. Who knows but what some day we might win a trip to the White House. We invite every woman within reach to join us.

Chiffon Chocolate Pie

Three squares unsweetened chocolate, two and one-half cups cold milk, one and one-third cups sugar, one-half cup corn starch, one-half teaspoon salt, two tablespoons butter, one teaspoon vanilla, three egg whites, six tablespoons sugar, three egg yolks, one baked 9-inch pie shell.

Add chocolate to milk and heat in double boiler. When chocolate is melted beat with rotary egg beater until blended. Sift one and one-third cups sugar with corn starch and salt and add chocolate mixture, stirring until smooth, return to double boiler, add butter and stir constantly till thick. Cook 10 minutes longer, stirring occasionally, pour gradually over well-beaten egg yolks, stirring constantly. Return to double boiler and cook until thick. Remove from fire and add vanilla. Cool and pour into pie shell. Beat egg whites until stiff and add sugar, beat again until stiff and pile lightly on filling. Bake in moderate oven (325 degrees) or until slightly browned.

Columbiana Baptist Church Regrets Rev. D. Z. Woolley's Leaving

Inasmuch as our beloved brother, Rev. D. Z. Woolley, has accepted a call to the Eclectic and Bethlehem (East) Baptist Churches in the Elmore County Baptist Association, after nearly seven years of service as pastor of the Columbiana Baptist Church; and

Inasmuch as Brother Woolley has rendered untiring and invaluable service to the Shelby County Baptist Association, having served as vice-moderator, as chairman of important committees, and in many other capacities; and Inasmuch as Mrs. Woolley has rendered great service as Superintendent of the W. M. U. of our Association, and other members of the family have served in various ways;

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we express to Brother Woolley our deep appreciation for his exemplary life as an earnest Christian, for his faithfulness as a sincere minister of the Gospel, and for his fellowship and cooperation as a true brother in Christ.

2. That we express, likewise, to Mrs. Woolley and each member of the family our appreciation fo their beautiful Christian lives, for their splendid spirit of cooperation and for their efficient service and Christian influence.

3. That we thank God for the fellowship of these dear friends and for their devoted and effective service in His Kingdom.

4. That we commend these friends, as a noble Christian family and as sincere Christian workers, to the Eclectic and Bethlehem churches, to the Elmore County Baptist Association, and to all Christians who may have the joy of fellowship with them.

5. That we remember Brother Woolley and his family in prayer as they go to their new field of labor, praying that the heavenly Father may keep them in all their ways and give them a gracious and fruitful ministry.

6. That a copy of these resolutions be given to Brother Woolley and his family, that copies be sent to the Eclectic and Bethlehem churches and to the Moderator of the Elmore County Baptist Association, and that copies be sent for publication to the Alabama Baptist and to the county papers of Shelby and Elmore counties.—(Signed)—Fred B. Pearson, A. B. Canant, W. H. Haddock, for the Executive Committee of the Shelby County Baptist Association.

FIRST GRADE QUALITY—The new Firestone Standard Tire is built of first grade materials, by skilled workmen, and embodies the Firestone patented construction features of Gum-Dipping and two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread.

GUM-DIPPED CORD BODY—Every cotton fibre in every cord in every ply is soaked in liquid rubber. This is the only process known that prevents internal friction and heat, providing greater strength, blowout protection and longer life.

TWO EXTRA LAYERS OF GUM-DIPPED CORDS UNDER THE TREAD—This patented Firestone feature binds the whole tire into one unit of greater strength, cushions road shocks, gives extra protection against punctures.

LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE—The new scientifically designed non-skid tread is wider, flatter, with more and tougher rubber on the road, giving long even wear and thousands of extra miles.

LOW PRICES—These low prices are made possible by volume production in the world's most efficient factories.

THE FIRESTONE NAME AND GUARANTEE—Every Firestone Standard Tire bears the Firestone name, your guarantee of greater safety, dependability and economy.

IN MEMORY

Of my little son, Blackley Graves DeLainey, who went away August 1, 1934.

I see you, Little Son, budding amidst downy clouds of your trundle bed; damp golden curls clinging lightly to your babyish head. You're so small, baby son. Just a few brief days of the long unknown years toward manhood were yours. Gone were childhood tears and you were grown, Little Son. Sleep peacefully with hands like the curled petals of a rose, and a glow on your cheeks as a sunset on a winter snow. I would have kept you so, Little Son. God kept the shadows of despair from your eyes. His heavenly gift, Little Son, to me, you made me love you too much, so that when the time came for you to leave me, as so many joys have done, I have had too great a sorrow to grieve. Stay by me, Little Son. When childish woes and stumbling toes ached more than you could bear, it would mean so much to rush home and find you waiting there. I'm always near, My Son. Let each tomorrow bring its gift, and to God I'll pray; for you're mine only, Little Son, and His.—Mrs. John Doyle.

HER OWN FATHER!

—Should she HATE HIM?

Jane Van Tambel, born and raised in Chicago, came West to meet her father for the first time . . . a man whose supposedly misunderstood complex had made him leave a wife and child many years ago to seek fortune on the western ranges.

But Gus Van Tambel's complex was downright wickedness, far too well understood by his fellow ranchers and the cowhands. Jane, managing the ranch while her father was in the hospital, tried not to believe the wicked stories. In her own heart there was certainty that Gus Van Tambel was a land thief, a crook whose very soul was hated by all who knew him. But . . . after all he was her father.

Then came Bill Denison, bronzed and handsome, the man whom Jane's father despised with a deathless passion for revenge. How should she regard this young stalwart? Should his vow of undying love be accepted or must she follow the dictates of her father and stamp Bill Denison as one to be scorned?

Jane Van Tambel followed the dictates of her heart . . . . .

Fans Last Ovation to Humphreys Best Memory to Retain

HE HAD been leaning forward from one of the padded leather chairs in a corner of the Garden boxing office. Felt hat carefully balanced on one knee, he had been listening eagerly to the brisk gossip, watching Marge dispose of too presumptuous free-ticket seekers breathing again the breath of what had been life to him for almost fifty years.

Then the crowd had drifted away. I looked at him again.

After all, times change, old friends drop off quickly. When a man who has been out of close touch so long is shoved again into the spotlight he must wonder if it will be the same. He—I thought that I noted one gnarled hand trembling slightly. We fell to talking, not about the illness that came three years ago, but about other brighter days.

There were stories about boyhood moments on Oliver street when he used to play marbles with the "Governor," a gentleman who is known more familiarly to most others as Al Smith.

Joe Humphreys

About how Murphy, who seldom went to fights, once sat beside him at a pulse-strumming bout and punched his ribs black and blue in the midst of the excitement. About how Sullivan named him "Joe the Beaut," a title which he much preferred to the "Bowery Demosthenes" which some newspaper guy tagged on him years later.

There was the proud boast that, for years, he had been able to smoke a cigarette, chew gum and announce a fight at the same time.

How did he come to get into this racket? Well, he was a newsboy when he was ten years old and folks who used to listen to him on the old Produce Exchange corner used to admire the power of his voice even then. After that there was a lot of distinction to be achieved as master of ceremonies at balls and parties.

Call for "Beaut" Started Famed Announcer's Career

Then one night, when Chuck Connors was meeting Billy Welsh at Maisch's Little Casino down on Bowery near Pearl, the regular announcer did not appear. A spectator stood up and demanded that "Joe the Beaut" be given the job. Joe got it. Whether the "Mayor of Chinatown," that was Connors, beat the "Little John L.," that was Welsh, on this occasion is something he could not remember. But he did remember that it was one of the happiest nights of his life though.

The very happiest? No, those were swell times when he and Sam Harris and Terry McGovern were in the fight business. Best fighter that ever lived, that Terry.

Secret of success? Well, what you had to have to handle a crowd was a voice, personality and color. It ought to be a deep, bass voice with lots of vibrations. You shouldn't ought to antagonize the crowd either. What you should do was use good judgment and try to keep them friendly.

What? Well, yeah, maybe he was sometimes misquoted. But what of it. Suppose he did stand up in the old Garden that last night there and demand silence so he could pronounce a "apostrophe" to the famed statue of Diana. The point about that was that he'd announced fights in this state under three boxing laws since 1899.

Besides, what if some people did laugh at that crack. It made them happy and so kept them satisfied, didn't it? Well, that was the real job of an announcer and if some of those birds who——

The ebb and flow of a boxing evening had brought the crowd back into the little office again. Jimmy Johnston was waiting to go downstairs with his old friend. I rose and shook a hand that no longer trembled.

"So long," he said. "I'll be—hey, I tell you what. You're always using old-time pictures on those sports pages of yours. Why don't you come out some day? I've got a lot of them and we could sit around some more and——."

Along with so many others I am going to miss Joe Humphreys.

NATIONAL Leaguers aver that Charley Gehringer was the best American circuit performer in the All-Star affair with Lou Gehrig ranking a very close second . . . Eddit Stuart, best of all lacrosse goalies when he operated in front of the Mount Washington and Crescent A. C. nets, has moved from Westchester to a better business proposition in Boston . . Watch Southern California next fall. The behind-the-scenes dope is that Howard Jones again has assembled one of the nation's best football teams . . . It's tough preparing for an Olympic invasion. A recent letter from Berlin confides that officials have been working overtime stocking up sixteen different brands of chewing gum for the athletes.

Unless he takes a salary cut Jimmy Wilson may be looking for a new job next year. Now that the once great catcher no longer is very active on the playing field his boss seems to feel that a $17,000 annual salary is too much for a mere Phillie manager . . . Van Mungo is not surprised at the unjustified rumors that he misbehaved before the All-Star game. When he checked in at his hotel on Monday morning he was assigned to Room 313 and when he paid for his breakfast he received a $2 bill in change. After that he was prepared for anything in the way of hard luck.

Pie Traynor Convinced Diz Would Make Pirates

Pie Traynor

Pie Traynor will tell you that if the Pirates had Dizzy Dean they would win the pennant easily . . . Although they do not deny that the big boy may do it, the smarter and more honest boxing people feel that Joe Louis will need more than the extra foot of bandage permitted him by the ever-obliging New York boxing commission before he makes a comeback . . . Rabbit Warstler, obtained from the A's recently, should be of real help to the Bees. He is one of the best defensive infielders in the business and when he is happy, hits .300 in the clutch. His Philadelphia trouble was that he did not like the way Connie Mack treated him . . . Incidentally Mr. Mack would be something less than a popular favorite in Boston even if he returned all that dough he has been taking out of the town since he located the Yawkey bakery. The fans are sore because he was in a town on a Sunday for a regularly scheduled contest but would not wait over for the All-Star affair two days later.

Another hot Boston blast is directed at the National league. The fans, who esteem Wally Berger so highly that the Bees were afraid to make several very promising deals for him this spring, cannot understand why he was kept on the bench during the dream game in his home park . . . Larry Benton, a great pitcher when he served the Braves and Giants, soon will be released by the Baltimore club . . . Rudd Hoyle, 185-pound triple-threat star at Hun school in Princeton, is an unreasonable lad. In spite of tempting offers from two major colleges nearer home the youngster, who is tabbed as "surefire varsity," plans to enter Harvard this fall.

The best minor league buy right now is Cliff Melton, who once had a tryout with the Yankees. He is a big, young, limber and not too smart Southerner possessed of a very good fast ball and a sharp breaking curve. Baltimore is asking $50,000 for him and will take 20 G's less—Don Lash, who possibly is the best Olympic distance star ever developed in the U. S., did his first running as a barefooted boy of thirteen. That was in the cow pasture back of the little red school in his home hamlet of Auburn, Ind. Could it be that Penn, the team which may end Princeton's football winning streak early in October, already has started practice?

The New York state athletic commission has dug up an old rule which decrees that all prize fight contracts must be signed at the commission's office. This, naturally, will not improve the very messy boxing situation but should give the matchmaking state officials some swell extra chances to get their pictures in the papers . . . A Boston restaurant features a Bill Terry hot plate on its "Celebrity" menu. The dish is "Freshly made corned beef hash with dropped egg." . . . Jimmy Butwell, who came back from the World war to continue his career as one of the all-time great jockeys, now is a patrol judge.

Jersey City hopes to get the Toronto, International league, franchise next year. Mayor Hague's new stadium, which will seat 38,000 for baseball and 65,000 for fights, being the reason for revived sports interest across the river . . . Even though the Giants are slipping there is no danger of Eddie Brannick losing his title as the best dressed secretary in baseball. On the club's last Western trip he packed 45 brightly striped and dotted neckties . . . Aside from winning prize fights lightweight contender Leonard Del Genio likes nothing better than to read Charles Dickens.

A New Memorial to McGuffey

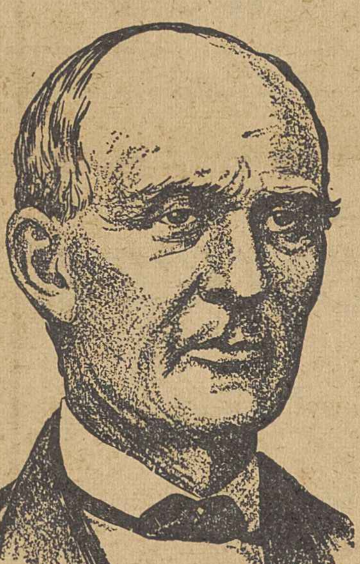
By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE other day a great crowd of people gathered in the little city of Oxford, Ohio. They were there for a double purpose—to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the publication of a book but more particularly to honor the memory of the man who wrote that book by unveiling a statue of him.

The man was William Holmes McGuffey and the book which he published in 1836 was the first of the McGuffey Eclectic Readers. Of him it has been said that "he was the most popular American of the Nineteenth century, the man who had the largest influence in determining the thoughts and ideals of the American people during that period and the man to whose work many great Americans of the present day pay tribute as being the fountain of their inspiration to aspire and to achieve."

That is why many American notables—authors, editors, educators, industrialists, statesmen—were present when the statue, the creation of one of America's leading sculptors, was unveiled at Oxford. But the greater part of the crowd there was made up of "just plain folks," members of the numerous "McGuffey Societies" scattered all over the United States, who still cherish in their hearts the lessons they learned from this "Schoolmaster of a Nation" in his Eclectic Readers.

The memorial at Oxford is the second which has been erected in his honor within the last two years. In 1934 another great throng gathered near Washington, Pa., to dedicate a huge granite boulder on the site of the log cabin where McGuffey was born. The crumbling remains of that cabin were removed to Dearborn, Mich., in 1928, rebuilt and added to the Edison institute collection by Henry Ford, through whose efforts 70 acres of the McGuffey farm were purchased for a permanent memorial. At that time Mr. Ford made one of his few public addresses. It was this laconic statement: "I am glad to join you today in giving honor to Doctor McGuffey. He was a great American. The McGuffey Readers taught industry and morality to America."



WILLIAM H. McGUFFEY

Tributes From Notables

But Henry Ford is not alone in paying tribute to the Ohio schoolmaster. In fact, the list of those who have acknowledged their indebtedness to his teachings is a veritable American "Who's Who."

Herbert Quick in writing of his childhood in rural Iowa in his book, "One Man's Life," says: "I had a burning thirst for books. On those farms a boy or girl with my appetite for literature was a frog in a desert. The thirst was satisfied and, more important, was stimulated to aspiration for further satisfaction by an old dog-eared volume of McGuffey's, the standard school readers of my day. My mastery of the first and second readers—just the opening of the marvels of the printed page—was a poignant delight and gave me a sort of ecstasy. Those text-books constitute the most influential volumes ever published in America."

Newton D. Baker, secretary of war under President Wilson, once declared that a certain melancholy poem contained in the Fifth Reader made an impression on him that still remains, and the late Justice John H. Clarke said that the language he used in handing down decisions of the United States Supreme court not infrequently was colored by the readers he had studied 50 years before. Ida M. Tarbell, the late Albert J. Beveridge, and many others credit McGuffey with having had a large share in shaping their minds.

DEDICATION OF THE McGUFFEY MEMORIAL AT HIS BIRTHPLACE NEAR WASHINGTON, PA. (At the left stands Nancy Pardee Newton of Ypsilanti, Mich., Designer of the Plaque.)

The story of the McGuffeys goes back to August, 1774, when William and Anne (McKittrick) McGuffey emigrated to this country from Scotland. Landing at Philadelphia, they journeyed to the southern border of York county, Pennsylvania, where they settled. This Scotch family had one son, Alexander, who was six years old when they arrived in America.

Alexander grew up to be a scout and Indian fighter, serving in Ohio and western Pennsylvania under Arthur St. Clair and Anthony Wayne. At the end of the campaign of 1794 he married Miss Anna Holmes of Washington county, Pennsylvania, and settled as a farmer in that county. Here, William Holmes McGuffey was born, September 23, 1800.

When the lad was two years old, the McGuffeys removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, where Alexander McGuffey purchased a farm of 165 acres in Cortsville village, Cortsville township, in the Connecticut Western Reserve.

One day Rev. Thomas Hughes, Presbyterian minister, was riding by the lonely McGuffey cabin. He overheard the mother praying that her young son, William, might have the opportunity to secure an education that would fit him for life and for the ministry. Reverend Hughes arranged to have the boy attend school at the "Old Stone academy" which he had opened at Darlington, Pa. The tuition was $3 a year and board 75 cents a week. Here William received his academic training and by the time he was eighteen was ready for a collegiate course.

He went to the nearest college, Washington college, in Pennsylvania, and there came under the influence of Dr. Andrew Wylie, president of the college. He studied Latin, Greek and Hebrew as well as English and was graduated with honors in 1826, receiving the bachelor of arts degree.

A Pioneer Teacher

While attending Washington college he supported himself in part by teaching. He taught a pioneer school in Kentucky, his work being observed by the first president of Miami university that had been founded at Oxford, Ohio, in 1809. This man, Rev. Robert Hamilton Bishop, at once recognized the power and devotion of the young undergraduate student and offered him a position at Miami, to begin in the autumn of 1826.

The minutes of the board of trustees show that he was employed as professor of languages. Miami tradition tells that he rode into Oxford with his little brother Alexander with his personal copies of Levy, Horace, Memorabilia and the Greek and Hebrew texts of the Bible in his saddle bags.

Soon after coming to Oxford he met Harriet Spining, daughter of Judge Isaac Spining of Dayton, who was visiting her uncle in Oxford. They became engaged and were married April 3, 1827.

While at Miami, McGuffey wrote the first and second of the graded set of readers—the first in 1836 and the second in 1837. Both the third and fourth readers were written at Cincinnati in 1838. His brother, Alexander, aided Professor McGuffey in the revision of the readers and collected much of the material for the fifth and sixth readers.

After some time at Miami, Professor McGuffey, whose interest lay in the field of literature and philosophy, was tendered a professorship of mental philosophy. He carried on theological studies privately and on March 29, 1829, he received his ordination into the ministry of the Presbyterian church, with the degree of doctor of divinity.

McGuffey recognized the dearth of reading material in the common schools of the time. He had a keen literary sense and was able to select much that appealed to young minds. It was this selection of lessons from a wide range of authors that caused him to name the readers McGuffey Eclectic Readers.

To read them is to catch a glimpse of the stern reality of life in the America of the Nineteenth century. Humor is absent from every one of them—from McGuffey's New First Eclectic Reader, from which the smallest children learned their ABCs and were fascinated by the quaint woodcuts of birds and animals, to the New Sixth Eclectic Reader, a 456-page volume of solid and forbidding type, described on the fly-leaf as "Exercises of Rhetorical Reading with Introductory Rules and Examples."

Moral Lessons

All of the stories in this volume ended with a moral and some of the poems were set to music for singing. At the end of the book were the Ten Commandments in verse and this exhortation:

"With all thy soul love God above,
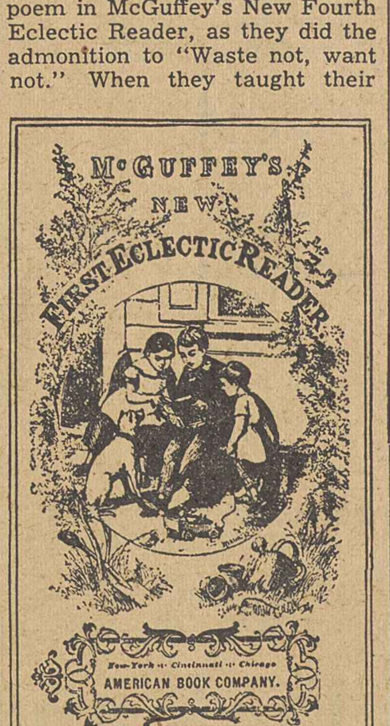
And as thyself thy neighbor
love."

Back in the eighties every child was told more than once by his parents: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again!" They got that maxim from a poem in McGuffey's New Fourth Eclectic Reader, as they did the admonition to "Waste not, want not." When they taught their children that it was a sin to abstain from "licking the plate clean" they were repeating the title of a little drama in McGuffey's Fourth Reader. "Lazy Ned," "Meddlesome Matty," "A Mother's Gift, the Bible," "Extract from the 'Sermon on the Mount'" are some of the other well-remembered titles.



McGUFFEY'S
NEW FIRST ECLECTIC READER

New-York · Cincinnati · Chicago
AMERICAN BOOK COMPANY.

FIRST READER TITLE PAGE

The Fifth Reader has the title: "McGuffey's New Fifth Eclectic Reader: Selected and Original Exercises for Schools." Here we find old friends: "Maud Muller," "Shylock, or the Pound of Flesh." "Effects of Gambling," which begins:

"The love of gambling steals, perhaps more often than any other sin, with an imperceptible influence on its victim. Its first pretext is inconsiderable, and falsely termed innocent play, with no more than the gentle excitement necessary to amusement. The plea, once indulged, is but too often 'as the letting out of water.' The interest imperceptibly grows. Pride of superior skill, opportunity, avarice, and all the overwhelming passions of depraved natures, ally themselves with the incipient and growing fondness. Dam and dike are swept away. The victim struggles in vain, and is borne down by the uncontrolled current."

"The Bible, the Best of Classics," "Religion the Only Basis of Society," "The Intemperate Husband," are the titles of other lessons, and many of these articles are honored by the name of the author in the index. That familiar poem, "The Spider and the Fly," is given in this reader. "Directions for Reading" are expounded and rules for proper diction are stressed.

It remains for the Sixth Reader to begin with "Principles of Education," which is considered under six heads: 1. Articulation. 2. Inflection. 3. Accent and Emphasis. 4. Reading verse. 5. The voice. 6. Gesture.

All faults to be remedied are meticulously listed. Indeed, lessons in articulation start with the second reader, and proper emphasis and correct pronunciation are stressed all through the series.

The Sixth Reader also contained such classics as Hamlet's soliloquy and "The Fall of Cardinal Wolsey," from "Henry VIII;" Scott's "Lochinvar" and "Marmion and Douglas"; Gray's Elegy; Macauley on "The Impeachment of Warren Hastings"; Tennyson's "Enoch Arden"; Poe's "The Raven"; Longfellow's "Evangeline," and "A Psalm of Life."

A LEAF FROM THE PRIMER

In 1836 Doctor McGuffey left Oxford to accept the presidency of Cincinnati college. In 1839 he became president of Ohio university at Athens. In 1844 he returned to Cincinnati and served as professor at Woodward college, afterward known as Woodward high school.

In 1845 McGuffey went to the University of Virginia as professor of philosophy. He was popular with his students and he taught, says one writer, "with the simplicity of a child, with the precision of a mathematician, and with the authority of truth." An old friend left the following description of Dr. McGuffey: "A man of medium stature and compact figure. His forehead was broad and full; his eyes clear and expressive. His features were of the strongly marked rugged Scotch type. He was a ready speaker, a popular lecturer on education, and an able preacher."

Dr. McGuffey's conscientiousness was proverbial. When he was nearly seventy-three years old he prepared a 500-page book on philosophy. It was the result of ten years of careful research. But he was so critical that after the book was already in type he decided that it was not worthy of publication and ordered it withheld. He remained at the Virginia institution until his death on May 4, 1873.

But he had lived to see his readers selling into the millions and extending their influence into other lands by being translated into many foreign languages. How great that influence was is impossible to estimate. But there is no doubt that their serious purpose, their kindly spirit and their high moral tone made children of an earlier generation better men and women today. At least, that is the unanimous testimony of the devoted members of the McGuffey Societies—thousands of Americans in all walks of life.

Plants Cannot Go in Quest of Food

Use Fertilizers Where the Roots Can Reach Them or Value Is Wasted.

By DR. GEORGE M. McCLURE, Agronomy Dept., Ohio State University.
WNU Service.

The time when fertilizers are applied and the position they are placed in relation to the roots of the plants may have considerable effect upon the value obtained from the use of fertilizer.

Plants can use the fertilizers only when they become dissolved in the film of water that coats the tiny soil particles which are in contact with the roots. It is a common opinion that all fertilizers dissolve rapidly and are dispersed throughout the feeding zone of the plant roots, but this is not true in many cases.

There is a decided difference in the way two common types of nitrogen carriers react after they are applied to the soil. Nitrate of soda goes into solution quite rapidly if it is applied in the fall in orchards or on fall grains, it may be carried below the zone where the roots feed before growth begins in the spring. Sulphate of ammonia reacts with the soil constituents and does not go into solution rapidly so it can be applied in the fall without loss.

Potash salts also react with the soil and are not readily lost by leaching. The fact that they are slowly soluble indicates that potash fertilizers must be distributed rather thoroughly through the soil by the method of application if the crop is to get the maximum benefit from them. Phosphorus also should be worked into the soil to make it available for use of the plants.

When phosphate fertilizers are used on grass crops, the application should be broadcast and then worked deeply into the soil with a disk. When used with row crops, such as corn, the phosphate should be applied in the rows or hills a few inches from the seed. The phosphates used for fertilizers react with the soil and this type of fertilizer may not move more than an inch from its point of application in several years.

Lighter Work Horse Is Likely in Near Future

Lighter draft horses are in the picture for the future, believes J. O. Williams, in charge of horse investigations in the United States Department of Agriculture. In the cities, motor trucks in most cases have taken the place of the heavy horse.

On the farm mechanical power has relieved the horse of the heaviest operations—such as plowing and harvesting—that usually have to be done quickly and in hot weather. The general farm work that remains, the lighter draft horse handles more easily and quickly, meanwhile keeping in good condition on less feed. A greater increase in prices for light draft horses in comparison with other types at the big markets, reflects the new demand for the light types.

The fact that mules from lighter draft mares usually are a little more active and better suited for both farm work and most markets, is another factor in the trend toward lighter work horses.

Air Fertilization

Smithsonian institution scientists have discovered how to make wheat greatly increase its yield without adding anything to the soil, notes Pathfinder Magazine. They fertilize the air instead. Since plants use atmospheric carbon dioxide and water in the presence of light to manufacture their substance, Dr. Earl S. Johnston, of the division of radiation and organisms, increased experimentally the amount of this heavy gas in the atmosphere around a miniature wheat field until the carbon dioxide content was four times that of ordinary air. As a result the wheat showed marked increases in growth.

Sunflower Put to Work

Life isn't the same for the old Kansas sunflower these days. They've tamed it and put it to work. Planted in gardens along with beans, the sunflower makes an excellent "pole" for the bean vines to climb up on. The sunflowers grow tall enough, so that picking bean pods isn't any trick at all and the sunflower seeds are fairly good chicken feed, too.

Farm Gleanings

Corn is grown on 91 per cent of the farms of North Carolina.

Recent improvements in canning and freezing cherries have resulted in a greater planting of cherries in the United States.

Wild life often suffers because of the flying mower sickle. Nests are destroyed and many birds and animals are maimed.

Lands in Wisconsin owned or controlled by the state, counties or the federal government amount to 3,990,000 acres, or just about 11 per cent of the entire land area of the state.
